Mr. WORKS. I have not overlooked it; but that was a simple loan of the Government to itself; that is what it amounted to.

Mr. GALLINGER. It was a loan to the District of Columbia.

Mr. WORKS. It was not a loan to the District of Columbia, because the District of Columbia had no obligation and had no money. The fiction that we have loaned money to the District of Columbia or that we are appropriating money out of the treasury of the District of Columbia has no foundation.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me one further observation, it may be a fiction in the mind of the Senator, but it is not a fiction in the organic act, which the Supreme Court of the United States has declared to be the organic act of the District, which provides that the District of Columbia shall furnish one-half of the revenues for the conduct of the District government; and when those revenues fell below a sufficient amount to match the money of the Government, the Government loaned the District of Columbia money at 2 per cent, every dollar of which has been repaid.

Mr. WORKS. The Senator is quite mistaken.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am not mistaken.

Mr. WORKS. It is a fiction not only in fact, but it is a fiction in the organic act, because the organic act, as I have said, takes away absolutely all power from the District of Columbia. The District of Columbia has no power to contract a debt; it has no power to borrow money; it has no power to do anything; and the whole thing is done by act of Congress, not by the District in any sense or in any way. Therefore, there is no force in the fact that we have fictitiously or nominally loaned money to the District of Columbia. It was nothing more nor less than the loaning of money to the Government by the Government.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. WORKS. I do.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I am not at all familiar with District affairs, but—

Mr. WORKS. I am sorry the Senator is not familiar with them.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I suppose I ought to be more familiar with them than I am.

Mr. WORKS. I did not say that, but I should be glad to have the Senator investigate and look at the subject from an investigation of the facts as I think they exist.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I know the Senator has paid a great deal of attention to this matter. I have never had service on the District of Columbia Committee, and my attention has not been directly called to the existing organization, so to speak, of the District or its quasi corporate character, if it has any.

I understand the Senator now to claim that it has no such character as has an ordinary city; that it is not a municipality in itself, in the Senator's view—

Mr. WORKS. It is only so in name.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. That there is a name which is properly descriptive of a certain territory, but that it has no authority except what Congress has conferred upon the District Commissioners to administer the administrative affairs and to carry out such acts as Congress may pass. Is that the Senator's view?

Mr. WORKS. That is the condition.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. But that in contemplation of law there is really no such thing as a District of Columbia collecting taxes for itself? It is that which the Senator from California means is a legal fiction?

Mr. WORKS. Yes.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. But really it is the General Government doing the whole thing and utilizing the District Commissioners to disburse the funds within certain territory?

Mr. WORKS. Yes. That matter was brought out and discussed somewhat with some of the witnesses—some of the members of the committee of one hundred. They were asked the question whether the District had any legal functions to perform or whether or not it had any powers. The answer was that it was simply the agent of the Government. It may have that character; it may be a convenient instrumentality through which the Government itself manages and controls the District; but every dollar of money which comes from taxation is paid into the National Treasury. As I have stated, there is no District treasury at all, and there never has been.

Mr. GALLINGER. But, Mr. President, that money is credited to the revenues of the District of Columbia on the books of the Treasury Department.

Mr. WORKS. I am coming to that a little later on. It is credited to the District of Columbia, but the District has no power whatever to deal with it one way or another.

Proceeding further with reading from this report:

When the so-called organic act of 1878 was under discussion in the Senate, Senator Bayard, speaking of the half-and-half provision and of the peculiar conditions of the city of Washington, had this to say:

"If it is to be, as I think it ought to be, a Federal city worthy of the great Nation whose seat of government it is, then it seems to me that by far the greater portion of the expense must be borne by the Federal Government and not by the local inhabitants. Is it just that one-half of the expenses of these broad avenues, of these extensive improvements of these luxurious streets, is to be borne by the local inhabitants? It seems to me that it is unreasonable. I do not think they can bear it."

"This town is the mere center and habitation of the employees of the Government, the clerical force of the departments, people who are swept in and out of their offices by the ebb and flow of the power of political parties, strangers who come here during the sessions of Congress for a few days or a few weeks, or Members of Congress, whose interests and whose property lie entirely elsewhere."

"I want to ask the honorable Senator who has charge of this bill whether it is just that the people of Washington City shall pay the proportion of one-half of this expensive government, in regard to the scale of which they never were consulted, in regard to which property that is to be taxed never was considered, or whether the fraction should not be much less."

And, in speaking of the expense of maintaining and keeping up the streets, he said further:

"That will entail an enormous expenditure, which, having some experience in regard to the expenses of that kind, I would say the local population of Washington are totally unable to bear. The property will not bear it; it is not worth it. If it is to be paid, it must be paid out of the Treasury of the United States, from which in my judgment it ought to be paid, because the laws contracting the expense and authorizing the outlay were passed without consultation with or without sufficient consideration in any way for the people whose property lies here."

"Is it just and right that they should be called to pay one-half the expense of this scale of adornment and improvement, intended not half so much for their use and delectation as for the use of those who come here and pass away after a few weeks' stay? I submit that it is a very grave and very fundamental question in this bill, whether this equal division of the expense is just or right."

Now, I want to say right in this connection, Mr. President, that I am not opposing the half-and-half system upon the theory that the people of the District of Columbia are not paying enough; quite the contrary. I think, in comparison with the amount paid by the Government, as the estimates are made, that the people of the District are paying too much; but I do think that the Government should be compelled to pay more, because of the appropriations that I think should be but have not been made.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President—

Mr. WORKS. Just one moment. So the Senator from New Hampshire and myself are not disagreeing on this question as to where the burden justly lies; not at all. Now I yield to the Senator.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the Senator has not failed to observe the fact that the controversy that is now upon us is due to the circumstance that Congress has refused to make adequate appropriations to equal the revenues of the District of Columbia, and that, as a result, there was a surplus on the part of the District of Columbia, which reverted to the Treasury in some form or other.

The committee this year has been met with a proposition that we have endeavored to deal with as best we could for one year more. I agree with the Senator—and the Senate of the United States is not responsible for the existing condition—that we ought to get rid of the slums of the city of Washington—every one of them.

Mr. WORKS. I know the Senator does.

Mr. GALLINGER. I agree with the Senator that there are a great many other appropriations that ought to be made for the betterment of this great city and for the welfare of the people; but we have another body to deal with; and the Senate has added two or three million dollars over the bill as it came from the House. What does the Senator think will be the result when the bill gets into conference?

Mr. WORKS. I think several other million dollars ought to have been added.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think so, too. The bill came to us in this form. It provides that the District of Columbia shall pay 66 per cent, at least, of the expenses of its government for the next fiscal year, and the National Government shall pay 33 per cent, or thereabout. It is a very serious matter, and the committee had to deal with it as best they could, and not having time to revise the law, not having time to go through all the statutes—and I will point out to the Senator that here are 111 statutes which we have got to deal with before we solve this problem—they thought it was wise to retain the half-and-half principle for one year more, and have the committees of Congress try to work out a bill that would fairly and equitably adjust this contention. That is the attitude which the committee holds to-day, and I hope that it will prevail.

The other House, by a very small majority, voted against the half-and-half principle a few weeks ago, and I think probably the result will be, unless the Senator's amendment is agreed to—and that opens up a new avenue and a new thought—that we will, in all human probability, continue the existing condition, which would work well so far as the interests of this city are concerned if the views of the Senate could prevail that appropriations ought to be made to meet all the requirements of the District; but the Senate is powerless when it gets into conference with men who say that the Government is paying too much and who refuse to accede to the appropriations which the Senate places in the bill. What can we do under those circumstances?

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from New Hampshire will understand that I am not in any sense criticizing the committee. I appreciate the difficulties.

Now, with respect to the present year and last year, the assessment of private property within the District is away above what it has been in the past.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President—

Mr. WORKS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Will it annoy the Senator for me to ask him a question?

Mr. WORKS. Not at all.

Mr. VARDAMAN. What is the assessment of property in the District as compared with the other cities of the United States of equal size? Is the assessment higher or lower?

Mr. WORKS. That is a matter that was very thoroughly gone into by the special committee. We had evidence on that subject, including tables of all sorts and kinds, from various cities throughout the country. That was one of the subjects which took up most of our time; and the committee came to the conclusion that the assessment in Washington, as compared with that of other cities, was at least as high as it should be; but the Senator will see, if he consults the report, that it is stated that the assessment and the taxation are reasonable.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Does the taxation embrace all the forms of property that are taxed in other cities?

Mr. WORKS. Oh, yes; of every kind. The matter was very thoroughly sifted and considered by the committee, but it would take a long time to go back over that and present it fully.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, it is impossible to hear the questions of the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I asked the question if all property that is taxed in other cities is taxed in the District of Columbia. My impression is that choses in action and property of that character is not taxed in the District of Columbia.

Mr. WORKS. And they are not taxed in other cities.

Mr. VARDAMAN. What property can the Senator, without taking too much of his time, say is not taxed in the District?

Mr. WORKS. What is called intangible property, evidences of indebtedness, are not taxed in the District, and they are not taxed in some of the States and in some of the other cities. It is a very grave question as to whether or not they ought to be taxed.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President—

Mr. WORKS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SMOOT. In answer to the question asked by the Senator from Mississippi, the record shows that the assessed value of property in the District of Columbia is from one and a half to twice the assessed valuation of the property of certain cities in the United States of equal population. The assessed valuation of the District of Columbia is greater than in Detroit, Buffalo, Milwaukee, Cincinnati, Newark, New Orleans, Minneapolis, Indianapolis, and Louisville. These cities all have an equal or greater population than that of Washington.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Detroit has twice as many people as Washington.

Mr. SMOOT. For instance, the assessed valuation of Louisville is $176,975,840, whereas the assessed valuation in Washington is $508,708,485. That, I will say to the Senator, is an extreme case; but take, for instance, Detroit. The assessed valuation of property in Detroit is $447,509,420—

Mr. BRANDEGEE. What is the population of Detroit as compared with that of Washington?

Mr. SMOOT. I think it has double the population.

Mr. TOWNSEND. It is just about twice as large.

Mr. SMOOT. As against an assessed valuation of $508,000,000 in the District of Columbia.

Mr. VARDAMAN. What is the rate of taxation in those cities?

Mr. SMOOT. I will ask the Senator to wait until I explain assessed valuations a little further.

Mr. WORKS. What is the Senator taking his figures from?

Mr. SMOOT. I am giving figures taken from a document showing the assessed valuations of each of the cities named by me, and comparing them all on a basis of 100 per cent valuation. I will say to the Senator that the assessed valuation in Baltimore on the basis of 100 per cent is $372,651,502. Baltimore has nearly twice the number of people that there are in the District of Columbia. In Detroit property is assessed at 75 per cent of the value; but the amount of assessed valuation as given by me is on 100 per cent basis. In Buffalo the rate is 75 per cent, in Milwaukee, 90 per cent; in Cincinnati, 100 per cent; in Newark, 100 per cent; in New Orleans, 75 per cent; in Minneapolis, 50 per cent; and in Louisville, 70 per cent; but the figures to which I have called the Senator's attention are figured on 100 per cent, so that the amounts named will show a fair comparison.

Mr. McCUMBER. One hundred per cent of what?

Mr. SMOOT. Of the valuation of the property assessed.

Mr. McCUMBER. Is that the assessed valuation or the actual value?

Mr. SMOOT. That is the actual valuation. Few cities assess at 100 per cent value. For instance, in the District of Columbia the assessment is on a basis of 66½ per cent of real value.

To make the comparison I have taken the actual percentage of assessed valuation of each city and added to the assessed percentage of valuation so as to show just what the assessed valuation would be if assessed upon a basis of 100 per cent or actual value, and I will say to the Senator that Washington is assessed higher than any other city of equal population, and higher than a number of cities with a population double that of Washington.

Mr. VARDAMAN. In the city of Washington I understand real estate only is taxed. Am I correct in that impression?

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, no.

Mr. GALLINGER. There are personal taxes here, too.

Mr. SMOOT. It taxes everything that other cities tax, with perhaps the exception of intangible property; and as the Senator from California has said—

Mr. VARDAMAN. What is embraced in intangible property?

Mr. SMOOT. Indebtedness between individuals that the assessor can not find.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Are mortgages taxed?

Mr. SMOOT. In the District of Columbia?

Mr. VARDAMAN. Yes. Are bonds taxed?

Mr. SMOOT. I doubt whether bonds are taxed.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Is money taxed?

Mr. SMOOT. Money is taxed, if returns show any on hand. It all depends on whether it is returned or not, just the same as it is in other States.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Has the Senator any information in regard to the amount of money and bonds that are taxed in the District of Columbia?

Mr. SMOOT. No; I have not that information.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I should like to be allowed to go on.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I beg the Senator's pardon. I did not intend to take so much of the Senator's time.

Mr. SMOOT. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question right here, before he goes on?

Mr. WORKS. Yes.

Mr. McCUMBER. I want to get definitely in my mind whether or not the taxation here, based upon the actual value of the property taxed, is greater or less than it is in the great cities. Now, I know a great many cities where the assessed valuation of the property is not more than one-third of its selling value or renting value, and others where it is 90 per cent. I understand that the property here is taxed at about 66 per cent of its actual selling value. Now, measured by the actual value of the property assessed, are the taxes levied in this city greater or less than the taxes generally over the country?

Mr. WORKS. The committee investigated that feature of it very carefully, and they came to the conclusion that upon that basis and by that comparison the taxpayers here were being fairly taxed—not overtaxed or undertaxed—bringing the other cities together, some higher and some lower.

Mr. McCUMBER. The average.

Mr. WORKS. Yes; taking the average. The property in the District of Columbia is not assessed at its full value, but at two-thirds of its value. In some of the cities and States the property is by law required to be assessed at its full value, but often, by some arbitrary rule of the assessor, it is reduced away below that, below 50 per cent; so there is no fixed basis upon which you can make a comparison satisfactorily.

Mr. GALLINGER. And, if the Senator will permit me, there are the most striking irregularities in the cities. If figures I have in my possession are correct, in Salt Lake City the assessed value is only about 33 per cent, and in Omaha 20 per cent. Then it runs up from that to 95 per cent.

In my own State the law requires property to be taxed at its full value, but it is never done.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Mr. President, there is just one word I should like to say to the Senator. Did not the select committee find that the per capita assessment in this city was as high or probably higher than in most of the cities? I understand it is about $17 per capita.

Mr. SMOOT. Sixteen dollars.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. About $17 per capita; and, in my judgment, that is higher than most of the cities find their per capita tax is.

Mr. WORKS. I think that has very little to do with it. It is a question of the value of the property, and whether or not the property itself has been properly taxed. It might all be owned by one man.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. At the same time, I understood that the committee found that property here, according to the taxes in other cities, was taxed about right, as nearly as it could be gotten. Of course there are discriminations and undervaluations, and possibly overvaluations.

Mr. WORKS. I want to say in this connection, Mr. President, that my own opinion is that the people of the District of Columbia are at this time being overtaxed. The committee found that they were being reasonably taxed, but, compared with taxation in other cities, I think they are being overtaxed to some extent.

That has happened in this way: As Senators know, there was an investigation instituted by the House a few years ago by what was known as the George committee, and there was a report made that is denominated the George report. That report was before the special committee, of which I was a member. It was found in that report, and properly so, that a great many of the properties were being underassessed and undertaxed, and there was a sort of reaction from that, and it was exaggerated in a good many ways.

The result of it was that the assessor's office, as I think, went to the other extreme, raised these various properties throughout the city, and raised a good many of them beyond what they should have been. The Senator from New Hampshire is right in saying that there are great irregularities in the assessments, and that was excused by something that I mentioned yesterday—that they have not a sufficient force to make the assessments properly.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me just a word—

Mr. WORKS. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. In consequence of the agitation resulting from the George report, beyond a question the officials of the District government felt it rather incumbent upon them to "jack up," as we say, the assessed valuation of property in this District. Now, I chance to know a little something about that. I never bought but one piece of property in the District of Columbia, and I never want to buy another, because I think it is the worst possible place to own real estate on earth. A friend of mine came to me the other day and said to me, naming a building, "There is a building that is assessed for $14,000. You can buy it for $9,000. You ought to buy it." I said, "Thank you; I do not want it. I made one purchase in the District of Columbia and lost money on it."

These great apartment houses are depopulating the ordinary residence property, and there is a constant depreciation; but the tendency of the officials in this District is to keep the assessments very high for fear they will be criticized. That is my opinion, and it is based upon some knowledge.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, the officials are not wholly to blame for that. The speculative tendency of the people in Washington is responsible for most of it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes.

Mr. WORKS. They have got property values—actual values, as they call them, which are not really actual values—away up out of sight, and then they complain because the assessor assesses their property upon their basis of values. I think not only that the property is overassessed, but that it is largely overvalued; and that results in an overassessment, very naturally.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, before the Senator proceeds with his argument, will he allow me to ask the Senator from Utah whether the figures that he put in the Record as to comparative valuations for assessment purposes in the various cities applied simply to real estate, or included personal property?

Mr. SMOOT. They applied to all the assessed property in the cities.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Does the Senator mean to say that the entire assessment of the city of Detroit—the grand list, as we call it, of that city of half a million people—is less than that of the city of Washington, with about 350,000 people?

Mr. SMOOT. I say that that is the case.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, the Senator from Connecticut must not place too much reliance upon those figures.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I simply wanted to know whether the Senator meant to assert that or not.

Mr. WORKS. We found it a very difficult matter to compare the city of Washington with other cities. There is the State organization that intervenes and State taxes, and various other things.

Mr. GALLINGER. And county taxes.

Mr. WORKS. And county taxes. That made it very difficult for us to determine, by comparison, what was a just tax here as compared with other cities.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. But, Mr. President, that is not the point. I am talking about the grand list of the several places—the amount of valuation of property subject to taxation. I am not talking about how much extra they pay to counties or States. There can be no question about that.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that the figures I gave are the actual assessed valuations of property in the cities named.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Made by whom?

Mr. SMOOT. By the city assessors; and the tax records of the cities show the amount of assessed valuation named.

Mr. WORKS. I want to say to the Senator from Connecticut that that probably results in a great measure from the overvaluation of property in the city of Washington that I have already mentioned. I think the valuations of property here are away out of sight, and beyond anything like their reasonable and proper value.

Mr. SMOOT. I think the Senator is perfectly correct in that statement.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Utah, if the Senator from California will permit me, if the statement he gives shows the different classes of property in the cities that he has mentioned, real and personal?

Mr. SMOOT. No; it is the total assessed valuation of all property—real estate and personal property.

Mr. STERLING. Does the Senator know whether moneys and credits are taxed in these several places?

Mr. SMOOT. They are supposed to be, but it is the same in Washington as it is in other cities.

Mr. WORKS. To continue reading, Mr. President:

In January, 1896, a bill was introduced in the House of Representatives to repeal the half-and-half provision of the act of 1878. On May 22 of the same year, in a report of the Committee on the District of Columbia against the bill, this was said:

"The six millions expended annually upon the Capital are not enough to meet the current reasonable and increasing municipal needs. The three millions contributed by the local taxpayers would be inadequate to sustain the National Capital as it now exists, or to keep it in line of natural development. One million of the three would be absorbed in interest and sinking fund upon the heavy debt; the greater part of another million is demanded for the schools, the District having no public-land grant to help it like those enjoyed by many of the States. The remaining million would have to meet such expenses as maintenance of the police, fire, and health departments, the construction and maintenance of municipal public works, the support and maintenance of charitable and reformatory institutions, the cleaning of streets, and the general cost of administration. And how they would be met may be imagined when it is remembered that over $3,500,000 are now expended upon these objects, and that the present appropriations are inadequate in respect to many of them.

"Nothing is more conspicuous in all the early utterances of our Presidents and public men than their insistence upon the nationality and the permanence of the city of Washington as the Capital. Why did Washington call it so continually 'the Federal City' if it was to be only a mere municipality?"

On March 6, 1901, the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] introduced in the Senate a resolution directing the Committee on the District of Columbia to investigate the tax system in vogue in the District. In speaking of that question, Senator Hoar said:

"It seems to me that there is just one simple principle that ought to be applied to the residents of the District of Columbia. We should ascertain the average rate of taxation in well-ordered American cities, whether it be $1 on the thousand, or $10 on the thousand, or $15 on the thousand, or whatever sum, and then apply that to the personal property and real estate of every resident here.

"When that is done, with such exemptions as experience suggests in all like cases, the Government should pay the rest of the reasonable expenses of this District. I do not think that having one-half paid by the District and one-half paid by the Government has any scientific merit whatever. There is nothing in reason why it should be one-half rather than two-thirds or three-fourths. The Government is a great property owner here, and the credit of the city of Washington is the credit of the Nation. It is the National Capital, and it is the great national interest to have a well-ordered and beautiful and well ornamented and arranged city here."

Senator Blackburn, who supported the act of 1878 and whose statements in its favor are often quoted in the briefs of the committee, was a witness at the present hearings and gave his reasons for thinking that the half-and-half system that he then favored should not be continued in force under present conditions, said:

"After a good deal of time was spent and the fullest investigation and research possible at that time was made, it seemed to me that the act known as the permanent form of government bill, the act of 1878, was proximately a fair adjustment of these questions. I did not believe at that time that the individual taxpayer here in equity should bear one-half of the expenses incident to the maintenance of this District. I believe it was an approximation to equity. And I not only believed, but I was absolutely sure that that was the best that could be obtained for the property holders of the District at that time. Consequently, I favored the adoption of what was known as the half-and-half payment of municipal expenditures.

"If the half-and-half division of the expenditures was fair in 1878 it certainly is not fair now. For 36 years there has been a shifting of the holdings of real estate in this city, and those changes have always been one way. I am not aware of the fact that the Government has ever parted with a foot of real estate in the last 36 years. We only need to look out here to see the conclusive evidence that the Government for 36 years past has been acquiring additional real estate here and to that extent disturbing the equilibrium on which that act was based.

"I think if the people of the District, the taxpayers, the property holders here, were paying their fair proportion of the expenditures in 1878 they certainly are paying more than their fair proportion of these expenditures now. We have seen all this property acquired by condemnation proceedings here between the railway station and the Capitol, and a much larger body of land down south of the Avenue acquired in the same way. The status of 1878 no longer exists now. For that reason I believe that the time has come to abolish the 50 per cent division of expenses between the private property holders and the Federal Government.

"There are other reasons that commend themselves to my judgment. I do not believe that the Federal Government ought to be in a business partnership with anybody. I don't think it comports with the dignity of a Nation of 100,000,000 people to maintain a business partnership with those who pay taxes in this District.

"I do not believe that any man should be benefited by or penalized because of his living in the Capital City. I think the property holders here ought to pay a fair, just tax upon their holdings. Congress has the absolute power over this District. Its control is not limited; its responsibilities ought to be as limitless as its power and authority. I believe that that partnership ought to be dissolved. The law of 1878 has stood the test of experience for more than one-third of a century. It has lasted longer than I thought it would endure at the time of its enactment.

"I think an unprejudiced, fair judgment would declare that it has not only lasted longer but has answered the purposes of its enactment better than was contemplated at that time. These people have had a satisfactory form of government now for all these years. It has never been the policy of the United States to carry business partnerships. There never was an insurance policy held upon any of its property by the Federal Government. There is not a public building here, including the Capitol, that has ever been insured. The Federal Government deems itself able to carry its own risks, and it has never patronized private corporations in the shape of insurance companies.

"I believe that Congress should fix the rate of taxation to be paid by the people who live in this city without the slightest regard to its being the Capital of the country. I believe those taxes should be collected and covered into the Federal Treasury, and that every penny expended for the maintenance, ornamentation, extension, and development of the city of Washington should be appropriated directly out of the Federal Treasury.

"I know it is objected to by some that in that event probably Congress would be parsimonious in its appropriations, and that the development and extension of the city upon broad plans would be halted. I have no sympathies with those apprehensions at all. I speak in the light of the experience of one who for a third of a century was a Member of one House or the other of Congress. I do not believe there is a more responsive set of men to public sentiment to be found in our country than those who are elected every two years in the House and every six years in the Senate. To charge a cheese-paring policy in its appropriations for this Federal Capital is to impeach the patriotism of 100,000,000 people, and I have no sympathy with that impeachment effort. I believe that the people of this District should pay a legitimate, fair taxation upon their holdings, that to be determined by Congress. The Constitution of the United States puts this District completely at the mercy of Congress, and I would not alter that condition if I could. I believe those taxes should go into the general fund of the Federal Treasury without any regard to the location here in Washington, and I believe that the Capital City should be maintained, enlarged, embellished, and developed by appropriations direct from the Federal Treasury.

"Until this partnership is dissolved I see no way to escape the constantly recurring wrangles that you are treated to every time Congress meets and an appropriation bill for the District is considered. There naturally will be varying views held by Members of the House and Members of the Senate as long as this lasts. I think it eminently desirable to get rid of these constantly recurring clashes in Congress, and I confess my inability to discover any method by which they may be eliminated and avoided so long as you keep this partnership between the individual proper holder in the District of Columbia and the Federal Government."

Now, just a word with respect to the disposition or indisposition of Congress to make necessary and proper appropriations. I have believed ever since I have gone through this investigation that one of the prime causes of the failure of Congress to make the necessary appropriations is just this half-and-half system. If the whole responsibility was cast upon Congress, if this were treated as a national affair and this as a national capital, Congress, or a good many Members of Congress, would feel quite differently toward it, in my judgment. I feel that, whatever may have been the mode of meeting the expenses, there are a good many Members of Congress, I am sure, who excuse themselves from making the necessary appropriations upon the theory that this is the District of Columbia, a local affair, and that it should be kept up by the taxpayers of the District. That is a very erroneous view of it, but that it is the view of a good many Members of Congress I have no doubt whatever.

Now, if you remove this obstacle, if you put out of the way the nominal and useless District of Columbia and bring this matter directly under the control of Congress and make it a national affair, you will remove one of the greatest reasons for the conflict and the inharmony and the ill feeling that have grown out of the management of the District in the past, in my judgment; and it is a matter that I feel so keenly that I hope Congress will give it fair consideration.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. May I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. WORKS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. The House provision is as follows:

The following sums are appropriated out of the revenues of the District of Columbia to the extent that they are sufficient therefor, and the remainder out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated in full, for the following expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917.

It appears that the amount estimated for the District revenues for 1917, available for the payment of District items on the half-and-half basis carried in this bill, exclusive of the water department, is $7,735,000.

The appropriations made by this measure as it comes from the House are only $11,931,000, making the proportion to be paid by the District of Columbia or the people of the District of Columbia and the Government substantially as stated by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS], I think, in his remarks a few moments ago. In other words, the District of Columbia would be paying $7,735,000 and the Government of the United States, in round numbers, about $4,000,000. The estimate made by the commissioners for the expenses of the government for the fiscal year are fifteen and a half million dollars, or, to give the exact amount, $15,473,676.34.

The Senate has added to the bill as passed by the House over $3,000,000.

This statement may sustain the argument made by the Senator that, if the half-and-half system were abolished, Congress would have a keener sense of responsibility. To my mind, it discloses a disposition on the part of some to secure from the District of Columbia all possible in the way of taxation and then to pare down the appropriation of the Government just as low as they can.

If the Senator will look at the report of the committee upon this bill, and of course he is familiar with it, he will find that the committee have recommended an increase of the amount appropriated by the House under the head of general expenses of more than $27,000, and under the head of contingent and miscellaneous expenses of $87,814, and under the head of improvements and repairs of streets, $451,310. Our committee have recommended an increase for sewers of $72,000 and on streets of $54,895; in the electrical department, $18,800; for the Washington Aqueduct, $4,000; and for Rock Creek Park, $5,000.

In considering the question of public schools it is clear to me that the provisions of the bill as passed by the House fall far below what the Government should provide for the erection and maintenance of school buildings. The Senate committee have recommended an increase in these appropriations of $751,891.

Then, too, the Senate committee have increased the appropriation for the Metropolitan police and for doing work which the Senator advocates in improving police stations, for the fire department, for the health department, for the courts, and on the question of charities and corrections the Senate has increased the appropriation $237,000; and there are other items which I have not mentioned. It has seemed to me that the disposition of some has been to secure large contributions from the District and have the Government pay only the balance.

If I could be satisfied that the Senator is right in his conception of the good results which would follow the adoption of his amendment, I might be persuaded to favor his plan.

But I should like to ask the Senator if he does not think it is true that there is a disposition on the part of Congress to reduce District expenses to the lowest possible amount? No Member of either body of Congress is influenced by any fear of the vote in the District of Columbia. The citizen in the District of Columbia can be taken advantage of; the voter in the State stands upon a better basis; the man in the District of Columbia has no vote, while in the State he can express his disapprobation at the polls. I have a feeling that Congress as a whole has not had the same respect for the citizen of the District of Columbia that it has had for the citizen of the State.

I presume the Senator has thought that matter out most fully, and the suggestion I make will not modify his views, yet I would be glad to have him discuss that point a little more fully.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Vermont will not understand that I am trying to defend the course taken by the House in this bill.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I understand that perfectly.

Mr. WORKS. I think it is perfectly indefensible. If we are to proceed on the half-and-half theory, then if only $10,000,000 are necessary to carry on the affairs of the District the property owners here should only be compelled to raise $5,000,000, not $7,500,000 or any other larger sum. But they are not doing that this year. What has already been done shows that in actual practice they have not done that. Applying to the assessment that has been made and the estimate of the revenues to be derived from the assessment, the appropriation by the House places upon the taxpayers the burden of two-thirds of the amount instead of one-half. That is manifestly unjust. I have no sympathy with it at all.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I knew the Senator had no sympathy with that. It does seem to me the fact that the estimated revenues of the District are something over $7,000,000 and that the bill as passed by the House appropriates only $11,931,817.34 has strengthened the Senate committee to make these recommendations, which perhaps they might not have made had it not been for the existing system, and it is possible the half-and-half system may work advantageously for the District when the other system might not.

Mr. WORKS. I do not think the Senate committee need any justification or any defense at my hands. I think they have done the best they could under the existing circumstances, if they are not willing to abandon entirely the half-and-half system in meeting these conditions. That is the whole question, I will say to the Senator from Vermont.

Now, my idea about it is this: Taking in view what we know of human nature, if this half-and-half system were entirely abolished, if this were treated as purely a governmental affair and Congress being called upon to make an appropriation, it would look upon it quite differently, for some Members of Congress would look upon it quite differently from what they do now, when evidently they are looking upon it as a local affair; and, as the Senator says, of course there are no votes here.

But I think the people of this country feel that if fixed on a national basis they would make their representatives in Congress understand it, and they would make proper appropriations to maintain this Capital as it ought to be maintained. I think the Members of Congress would feel that to be so, and it would bring about a better condition of things.

If that is not so, it does not make very much difference whether we abolish the half-and-half or leave it standing as it is, but I think it would have that result. I hope it will. I think it is worth while trying. It does not make any particular difference whether that portion of my amendment providing for the abolition of the District of Columbia is adopted or not, in view of that situation. It can be carried out by a simple provision that the expenses shall be paid out of the National Treasury and that the taxpayers shall be taxed a reasonable amount. That presents the whole question.

But the reason why I am trying to get rid of the District of Columbia is that I think it is a bone of contention and brings about misunderstanding on the part of citizens of the District of Columbia in thinking that they have a real local government that is of some use to them, when it is not. I think it ought to be gotten out of the way. It is a useless appendage and serves no useful purpose.

Reading further from this report, Mr. President:

It is perfectly evident to my mind—

This is my own language—

It is perfectly evident to my mind that the Capital can not be properly maintained under the half-and-half system. Under that system either the taxpayers must be overburdened with taxes or the necessary, the vital, interests of the city must be neglected in the future, as I shall show presently they have been in the past under the system.

So much for the general principles that I think should control in dealing with the District. But there are other strong and controlling reasons why the partnership, the divided responsibility between the Government and the District, should be brought to a speedy termination. It has been anything but beneficial to the District, as I shall attempt to point out.

The whole question in the hearings and elsewhere has been presented entirely as a matter of dollars and cents. The Government has been placed in the unfortunate and humiliating position of trying to get rid of its responsibility to take care of its own Capital and shove it off onto somebody else. It has been met with the claim that if the half-and-half system is not continued Congress will not appropriate money enough to properly carry on the affairs of the seat of government, over which it has exclusive control. It was a nice spectacle for the American people. And, more unfortunately still, this claim that the Government would, through its Congress, neglect to care for the Capital is not by any means without foundation. It did do it, as the hearings clearly disclosed, before the half-and-half system went into operation. It has continued to do it, however, while the half-and-half system has been in force, as I shall presently show. So the half-and-half system has not remedied the evil.

The question submitted to the committee by the bill which created it is also purely one of dollars and cents. The hearing proceeded upon that theory. The effect of the limitations of the half-and-half system on the moral and social conditions of the District and upon the means of preserving the health of its people received no consideration, and the neglect to preserve the beauty of the city of Washington, the regulation of its buildings, improvement of its streets, and other important public works very little. So but little will be found in the record of the hearings on these important questions. But we are asked to give our reasons for the conclusions we reach on the main question submitted to us, and I am going to give some reasons that have led me to the conclusion that there should be no divided responsibility in dealing with the social and moral welfare of this Capital and that the Government should assume the burden and be wholly responsible for every interest of the people in the District and the management of its affairs.

Mr. President, that is all I wish to call attention to as coming from the report. I have extracts here from statements, letters, and oral testimony of a number of citizens of the District of Columbia bearing upon this question. In view of the fact that there are very few Senators present who are taking sufficient interest in what I think is a very important matter, I shall not read some of them that I had intended to read, as I have been taking up more time, partly as a result of very proper interruptions, than I had intended to take.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bankhead	Hardwick	Norris	Simmons
Brandegee	Husting	O'Gorman	Smith, Ga.
Broussard	Johnson, S. Dak.	Oliver	Smith, Md.
Bryan	Jones	Overman	Smith, S. C.
Chamberlain	Kenyon	Page	Smoot
Chilton	Kern	Penrose	Sterling
Clapp	La Follette	Pittman	Stone
Clark, Wyo.	Lee, Md.	Poincxeter	Thomas
Culberson	Lodge	Pomerene	Tillman
Curtis	McCumber	Ransdell	Underwood
Dillingham	Martin, Va.	Robinson	Warren
Gallinger	Martine, N. J.	Sheppard	Williams
Gronna	Nelson	Sherman	Works
Harding	Newlands	Shields

Mr. THOMAS. I desire to announce the necessary absence of my colleague [Mr. SHAFROTH] on account of the illness of a relative. This announcement will stand for the day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-five Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

Mr. WORKS. It has been suggested that it would not be well to make the change provided for in this amendment because it would necessitate a change of other statutes and the enactment of new laws. For example, it was said that provision has already been made for the erection of a bridge to be paid on the half-and-half plan. But this amendment does meet exactly that situation, and if adopted no additional legislation on the subject will be necessary. It provides that all such things and all the debts of the District shall be paid out of the National Treasury. Therefore, notwithstanding this legislation, if this amendment were adopted, then that bridge indebtedness would become the indebtedness of the National Government. It would be paid out of the National Treasury just as it will be anyhow, because it is all out of the National Treasury, as I have attempted to explain, and no additional legislation on the subject would be necessary.

It may seem to some that the amendment I have offered is radical in its character and effect, but it is far from that. It leaves conditions almost exactly as they are. It simply gets out of the way a fictitious government that is causing all this trouble and leaves the National Government to go on with its business, just as it is doing now, without any disturbance whatever.

After what I have said it seems to be hardly worth while to take up the time of the Senate in reading what I intended to read when there were so few here. There is a very respectable number present now, and I want to read a part of what I had in mind as bearing on this question. First, I read a letter from William E. Shannon written to Edwin C. Brandenburg, president of the Washington Board of Trade. The Washington Board of Trade was represented with other organizations by the committee of 100 to which I have referred, and Mr. Shannon says in his letter to Mr. Brandenburg:

LETTER FROM WILLIAM E. SHANNON.

THE NATION AND ITS CAPITAL.

[An open letter.]

APRIL 17, 1915.

EDWIN C. BRANDENBURG, Esq.,
President Washington Board of Trade.

MY DEAR SIR: Your organization has issued a circular letter carrying a proposal "to raise funds among its members to defray our portion of the expense of properly presenting the case of the citizens of the District of Columbia before the joint committee of Congress appointed to investigate fiscal relations between the Federal Government and the District."

Current reports indicate that it is the intention of the citizens' committee to defend the so-called "half-and-half" plan. There are, however, many of our citizens who are firmly convinced that the perpetuation of that plan constitutes a grave menace to the welfare of the Nation's Capital. Careful study and thorough investigation of the relations of our own Government to its Capital City and of the relations of Italy, France, Hungary, Austria, Germany, and England to their respective capitals point clearly to a conclusion that the time has come for the United States Government to take over, in fact as well as in theory, its own Capital, to conduct its affairs and to improve its conditions in such manner as it may deem best. Had that been done when it was urged, when the so-called "half-and-half" plan was accepted as a compromise, there can be little doubt that the park commission plans would now be a reality instead of a dream; that our parks would long since have been connected; that the Anacostia Flats would now be a field of beauty; that the charms of the city generally would have been greatly enhanced. Full evidence of this appears in Panama, in Porto Rico, Manila, the Yellowstone and other national parks, and in all other municipal and reservation enterprises in which the Government has operated with a free hand.

Such control by the Government would remove the city from politics, as the Army and the Navy are removed. It would do away with the so-called District day in Congress, now a source of constant irritation. There should no more be a District day than an Army day or a Navy day or an Agricultural day. This method would end the present friction between the citizens of the District of Columbia and the United States, a condition of which all are weary. It would permit the Government to spend, without criticism, whatever money it might see fit to spend, just as appropriations are now made for the Reclamation Service, for rivers and harbors, and other Government enterprises. It may be assumed with safety that a sum would be expended far in excess of the appropriations now made.

It is urged that the "half-and-half" plan has worked well for 36 years. Yet it appears only as a colossal failure when comparison is made with the growth and the beauty of the capitals of Argentina, of Brazil, Italy, Hungary, and of other nations. Should not the citizens of the District of Columbia now say to the citizens of the United States: "This is your city; take it as your own; run it as your own," and so place full responsibility where it rightly belongs? Should they not say to the people of the Nation: "We are living in your city. We are doing business in your city. We desire to stay here. We deem it a great privilege to live here. We desire that those of you who are able to do so should come here and live with us. We would have you understand distinctly that we do not ask something in exchange for nothing. We have been and are entirely willing to pay just taxes. We do not care what system of taxation is employed; whether that of Baltimore, Kansas City, Los Angeles, New Orleans, or Boston is immaterial to us. We are content to leave to those in authority the determination of system and rates, confident that the people of the United States will see to it that their Capital City is made worthy of its great place among the capitals of nations."

Under such a plan let us pay our just taxes directly to the Government. Let the Government spend our money, and as much more as it sees fit to spend. We can trust the Government to provide for our schools, our fire and police departments, our health bureau, and all other branches of the municipal organism. Surely, under such a plan we should be regarded by all our sister cities as fortunate. Why not, then, bury the old "half-and-half" plan and unitedly urge the Government to come into its own for the greater glory of the Nation and the greater future of its Capital City?

Yours, sincerely,

WILLIAM E. SHANNON.

Mr. Shannon is one of the leading and most enterprising citizens of the District of Columbia. In this letter he clearly sets forth the views, I believe, of the majority of the people of the District of Columbia who have thought upon this subject at all.

I want to quote just a short extract from the statement of Mr. MacFarland, to whom I have referred. It occurs in a colloquy that took place at the hearing, and is as follows:

STATEMENT OF H. B. F. MACFARLAND.

Senator WORKS. Laying aside for the moment the question as to the amounts that should be contributed respectively by the Government and by the taxpayers of the city, what important function does the District of Columbia as a municipality exercise at the present time under the laws as they exist now?

Mr. MACFARLAND. As the agent of Congress—for that is what it is; it is practically a permanent standing committee of Congress, or the equivalent of it—it carries on the municipal administration in all its details, which is of course a large and important service.

Senator WORKS. I presume that could be done just as well by officers appointed by the Government directly. In fact, the officers are appointed by the Government now, are they not?

Mr. MACFARLAND. Certainly. Senator WORKS. And the District, so far as this service is concerned, is a naked trustee. It has no powers of its own.

Mr. MACFARLAND. It represents the United States. It represents Congress. There are many other features, but there is one to which I should like to direct your attention, and that is the idea that although the agent of Congress, of the Federal power, it is in a sense a local government to which the people can go with their wants, and through which they may have a certain measure of representation before Congress; and the organic act in providing for the two civil commissioners of this government of three commissioners endeavors to provide that they shall be local residents, obviously in order that they may know intimately (what others may not know) all the needs and the plans of the District of Columbia and all the desires of its people. The arrangement, so far as the form of government is concerned, was evidently designed to give the people a local government in so far as that was practicable under the plan that was adopted for the national participation.

That is the real fact respecting the District of Columbia, but unfortunately it is not so regarded by the people of the District; and that is what has caused very much of the friction.

I also offer, without reading, an extract from a statement on the subject by James Hugh Keeley, who appeared before the committee.

The statement referred to is as follows:

STATEMENT OF JAMES HUGH KEELEY.

As to the plan or system of taxation of the District of Columbia, so far as I have been able to study the subject—and I do not come as I understand Mr. Browne probably comes, as an expert upon this line of investigation both as to the facts and as to the philosophy of it—as far as I have been able to become familiar with the situation here and with the Constitution, etc., and the bearing of the half-and-half system, I am convinced that it has served well, probably, its day; but it has been a mischief-maker, I think, later, and it is now high time that there should be a change. I do not think there is any debate as to that fact, but the debate still in my thought is exactly what the change had better be—how large a change may be best.

I was very much pleased at the reading of the resolution by the eminent Senator from California [Mr. WORKS] at the very opening of this hearing. Personally I concluded that it was very fortunate that he offered the resolution; first, because it has merit in it; it says a whole lot in very condensed form; and, secondly, it opens the door to consider more things than those which the committee might otherwise feel that they were confined to under the very narrow language of the resolution under which the committee was appointed. The proposition is that the National Government is the principal and the District only a subordinate, if indeed anything at all; for I understand that some one in the debate here wanted to eliminate it entirely; that there was practically no District—only a fiction. I understand that actions are airy creations for convenience, but not that you can embody them in tangible durability. We are more than that here.

I rather like the proposition in this way: There is only one of two ways to have a capital, and in neither one of those ways have we a capital now. That is why I support the proposition to change the present order of taxation, and with that change necessarily make the changes that fit in with the change.

Mr. WORKS. Then, I want to read at length a very comprehensive letter written on the subject by Mr. George E. Hamilton, who is an able lawyer, and one of the business men of the District of Columbia, who, I can see from his letter, has given this matter very careful consideration. He says:

BRIEF OF GEORGE E. HAMILTON.

When finally adopted by Congress, the half-and-half provision was received by the people of the District generally as a satisfactory solution of a difficult problem, but there were those in the District who were in full sympathy with the views expressed by the minority in Congress in opposition to fixed quantiles and in favor of some more flexible provision which would better care for the equities existing and which, because of the peculiar relations between the Government and the District, might, and would necessarily, come into existence with the increase of Government occupation and the normal growth of our citizenship.

Since the passage of the act of June 11, 1878, the provision referred to, with some variation and exceptions, has regulated the apportionment of expenses for the Government of the District of Columbia.

The soundness of this provision in principle and its usefulness in application have been the occasion of frequent question and debate in Congress, and these, growing in intensity with the passage of time, have in recent years threatened its repeal, a culmination averted in the last Congress only by the adoption of the resolution directing an inquiry and report by this honorable committee.

This growing sentiment of doubt and opposition, and even of hostility, in Congress has solidified the citizens favoring the plan in their support of the same, and to these it would seem that the act of June 11, 1878, was a solemn compact between Congress and the District, fixed and irrevocable, and that any opposition or effort to repeal was based on enmity to the District and its interests.

Some of our citizens, however, in the beginning doubtful both as to the soundness and usefulness of the half-and-half rule of contribution, have, in view of its application and the results therefrom, become more convinced that at the time of its passage it was at best a questionable expedient, and that in subsequent application it has proven an impediment to fair appropriation by Congress and a hindrance to the development of Washington along the larger lines of progress and improvement. Such, certainly, is my conclusion in the premises.

My observation of and contact with the affairs of the District forces me to the conclusion that the half-and-half plan has hindered rather than promoted the growth and development of the National Capital.

It has tended to create in the minds of Congress the feeling that the interests of the District and the interests of the Government are separate and distinct, and even at times opposite if not antagonistic, and that, in the matter of District appropriations, the Government needed to be protected against the efforts of the citizens who, in the opinion of some Congressmen, were paying too little taxes and seeking always to avoid proper taxation.

It has created in the minds of some citizens the fear and feeling that Congress intended to overtax the citizens of the District to a point where Government contribution will cease; and these counter tendencies thus created have been productive of criticism, of charge and recrimination, at times unseemly and always injurious.

Items of expenditure for District needs presented by the commissioners have been cut down below what was actually necessary, because one-half would come out of the Treasury of the United States; the effort has been to reduce all appropriations and to limit and postpone useful improvements, expenditures, and projects, and at times the tendency to avoid governmental contribution by omitting items from appropriation bills and including them in separate acts, where the entire cost would be placed on the District, has been observable; it has created in Congress a spirit of illiberality; it compels, for its maintenance, a constant fight on the part of some of the people, who, resenting criticisms and attack from Congress, are fearful always of the repeal or modification of the plan.

Such conditions existing between the governed and the Government are necessarily injurious and, if continued in, will prove disastrous.

Fundamentally, I believe the half-and-half plan is unjust.

If the Government should desire to create additional parks and to take therefor large tracts of land within the District, thereby reducing still further the area of privately owned and taxable property, would it be fair to impose one-half of the cost upon the citizens, who are amply provided already with parks, and without voice in such proposed occupation? Such a taking might be only for the purpose of a greater national city, and not at all beneficial to the citizens, because of the withdrawal of property taken from private use and enterprise and taxation.

If millions are to be spent, primarily for Government needs, in utilizing the water power of the Potomac at Great Falls, should one-half of this great expenditure be placed upon the citizens of the District?

Is it not obvious that whether viewed from the standpoint of the Government or that of the citizens, a rule of fixed proportions in contributions to the expenses of Government is unsound in principle, unequaled and injurious in application, and a positive hindrance to the progress and development of Washington?

I believe, and have for years believed, that the growth of Washington along the lines intended by its founder, desired by the Government, and hoped for by its residents has been delayed, if not dwarfed, by the half-and-half rule, and the feeling and contention by it engendered between Congress and its citizens; and I believe that further limitation to growth and prosperity will follow a continuance of that rule, or any other rule, of fixed proportions in contribution to the expenses of government.

It may be urged that the District might suffer from an unfriendly Congress, or an unfriendly element in Congress, or from indifference and wrong judgment and action, attributable to the want of knowledge of District affairs on the part of Congress, or some of its Members.

That there may be in Congress at times some men ignorant of District affairs and the relations existing, or which should exist, between the District and the National Government, or men prejudiced against the District and its people, or men even hostile to the District, is possible and even probable, but it is hard to believe that the Congress of the United States, or a majority of that body, will permit injustice to be done to the Federal Capital or its people, either through ignorance or indifference, or prejudice or hostility.

If Congress can be relied on to fairly consider, protect, and sufficiently appropriate for the larger and more important national interests and purposes, may it not be relied upon to consider and protect, to provide and appropriate for the support of the Nation's Capital, and its development, especially if the full responsibility for the same is committed to, and assumed by it, and if Congress is determined not to give a fair and liberal treatment to the District, can it, in its absolute power, be coerced and driven thereto by a rule which may be repealed at its will and pleasure?

A fuller and better understanding of relations existing, a fair realization of duties and rights, should be brought into existence between Congress and the people of the District; fault-finding, abuse and intemperate assertion upon the part of the people should cease, and the tendency too often observable, especially in new Members of both Houses, to experiment in legislation at the expense of the District, and for political advantage in the States, should be discouraged and made impossible, and legislation for the District limited to its real needs and its sane and sensible development.

Protect the District by providing a fair and equal assessment, and a full but fair rate of taxation to be levied only on privately owned real estate and improvements and on tangible personal property; avoid proportionate contribution to the expense of government, which, of necessity, creates a division and separation of interests and view, and breeds contention, and let Washington be in fact what the framers of the Constitution intended it to be, the great Capital of a great Nation, to be nourished, expanded, and made beautiful by and for all people of the United States, the people of the District of Columbia contributing their fair share only.

I also desire to insert a quotation from a letter from Mr. Thomas J. Stealey, as follows:

LETTER OF THOMAS J. STEALEY.

I wish to be frank and candid in this matter, that I am opposed to the continuation of the half-and-half principle as termed under the organic act for reasons which are fully and at large set forth in my brief, and which I am prepared to give you a synopsis of before your committee.

There is also a short colloquy between the committee and Mr. J. Altheus Johnson, who appeared and expressed his views before the committee in part, as follows:

STATEMENT OF J. ALTHEUS JOHNSON.

Senator WORKS. If you took away the half and half and the Government assumed the responsibility of the whole thing, as I think it should—

Mr. JOHNSON. I agree with you on that point, heartily. Senator WORKS. The probability is the people in the District would be taxed less than they are now.

Mr. JOHNSON. I think so myself, and I think, as the chairman says, we would rather err on the side of the National Government doing too much than too little. That is my idea and the idea, I have no doubt, of every American citizen who is proud of his Capital City. And hence I do not appreciate this concern and anxiety that the taxpayers of the District have. It is like a nervous disease affecting a patient.

All I have in mind at present is to see a remedy found, a condition brought about, that will remove this friction, this irritation, this unhealthy condition here—this something which one of the speakers a moment ago called an "autoeratic sore" on the body of this "great American democracy."

If you abolish the half and half, can you not at the same time give some tangible assurance to the people of the District that they will be treated with fairness in the matter of taxation—not more exacted of them than is ordinarily paid by people who live in well-governed cities in the States? Can you not do something that will allay their fears and give assurance, if their taxes are already heavy enough, that their assessments will not be run up until the taxes collected in the District will be double what they now are?

Now, Mr. President, I come to a statement made by one of the Commissioners of the District, Mr. Newman. It is very comprehensive, and, as I am pretty well tired of reading, I am going to ask permission to allow it to be read by the Secretary.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read as requested.

Mr. WORKS. I think this statement is quite important and that it should be listened to.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. GALLINGER. Before the Senator from California proceeds to that phase of the discussion I should like to ask him a question, because his answer may shorten the discussion. At any rate, it will relieve my mind of a matter that is troubling me, if the Senator answers it satisfactorily to me.

In looking over the statutes last year—and it was but a hurried look—I found 111 separate statutes, some of them inconsequential in a way, that provide for the expenditure of money on the half-and-half principle. We have recently appropriated a million dollars for the Francis Scott Key Bridge, to take the place of the Aqueduct bridge, on the half-and-half principle; we are building a reformatory at Occoquan, and the law relating thereto provides that it shall be constructed on the half-and-half principle. Now, what are we going to do about those statutes if we offhand accept the proposition of the Senator from California? Would it not be necessary to repeal those statutes? I want the Senator's opinion about it.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, the Senator was probably not in when I mentioned that subject a little time ago, but my attention was called by the Senator from Vermont to the bridge case. This amendment provides that all of the indebtedness of the District shall be paid out of the National Treasury. The money is already in the National Treasury; it all comes from the National Treasury, as the Senator knows. The adoption of my amendment would not disturb those statutes in the least. The only effect of it would be that the amounts would be paid directly by the Government, instead of sorting the two funds and assuming to pay half of the expenditure out of the District funds and half of it out of the Government funds. It would not disturb those statutes, and it is not necessary to repeal them. That is very clear to my mind.

Mr. GALLINGER. It does not so appear to me, but, of course, the Senator's opinion is worth a great deal more than mine on that point.

Mr. WORKS. I should be very sorry to mislead the Senator, but I am quite clear about it myself, that my amendment would lead to no legislation that could have any injurious effect or interfere with those appropriations at all.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested by the Senator from California.

The Secretary proceeded to read the statement of District Commissioner Newman.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I am quite certain that I am unnecessarily burdening the Secretary and taking up the time of the Senate with the reading of the statement. In looking about I do not think any of the Senators are paying any attention to the reading. It seems to me to be an important matter, but evidently other Senators do not so regard it. So I will ask leave to include the statement as part of my remarks, without reading. I hope Senators will feel interested enough in it to read it hereafter.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the matter referred to will be printed in the RECORD.

The statement referred to is as follows:

STATEMENT OF HON. OLIVER P. NEWMAN.

In 1878, as is well known now, Congress adopted an act establishing a form of government of the District of Columbia, and laid down in that act a principle which has since become widely known as the half-and-half. I believe that a great deal of friction which has arisen in the last few years is due to a misunderstanding as to just what Congress in the act of 1878 agreed to do. In the minds of a great many people of the city of Washington and in the minds of a great many Members of Congress I have found an impression that Congress not only agreed to pay one-half of the expenses of the District of Columbia, but that it agreed to match dollar for dollar of revenue raised by the District of Columbia. Even a casual reading of the act of 1878 shows that Congress did not agree to or propose to do any such thing. What Congress did believe the United States should do was to pay one-half of the expenses on account of the District of Columbia, and not one-half of the money since raised by local taxation.

The act of 1878 provided that the Commissioners of the District of Columbia each year should make an estimate of the expenses of the District of Columbia for the next fiscal year. Then Congress said, paragraph 16 of the act of 1878, "to the extent to which Congress shall approve of said estimates Congress shall appropriate the amount of 50 per cent thereof."

I think the reason for the impression that Congress agreed to match dollar for dollar the money raised in the District is due to the fact that most of the time from 1878 until the present the revenues of the District of Columbia have been less than one-half of the expenditures of the District of Columbia, so that in actual practice Congress has matched dollar for dollar the amount of money raised locally.

The act of 1878 was absolutely sound in theory, provided you grant the logic or propriety of fixing the District and Federal contributions upon a percentage basis. I say this because in that act, paragraph 17, immediately following the paragraph just quoted, Congress said: "And the remaining 50 per cent of such approved estimates shall be levied and assessed upon the taxable property and privileges in said District other than the property of the United States and of the District of Columbia."

In other words, in 1878 Congress said "the United States will pay one-half of the expenses of the District of Columbia, and by proper legislation will levy such taxes as will produce the District's half."

That was obviously the intent of the act of 1878—for the United States to pay one-half and for Congress to levy such taxes as would produce the District's one-half.

Had this purpose been followed, the present crisis in the fiscal affairs of the District might not have arrived. But very soon after the passage of the act of 1878 Congress fixed the tax rate in the District of Columbia at $1.50 per hundred, and it has stood ever since. This rigid tax rate has necessarily produced each year an increasing sum of District revenues until at this time those revenues exceed the District's half of its annual expenditures and brings sharply to the surface for consideration the whole question of how much the District and how much the Federal Government should pay of the annual bill. On July 1, 1916, we anticipate that we will have a surplus of revenues of the District of Columbia of something in the neighborhood of a million and a half to two million dollars.

In other words, if they had really stuck to the half-and-half; that is, if Congress appropriated one-half of the approved estimates and then levied a tax rate to produce the District's half of it, that would have been absolutely sound, but they established a rigid tax of $1.50, and that tax rate, automatically applied to increasing values, automatically provided an increasing sum of District money, until now that sum exceeds the District's half of the bill to a very considerable amount—I mean the amount that a considerable revenue in excess of what the District needed to pay its half arrived, just such a thing as this investigation was bound to happen, as Congress obviously would not go ahead raising more money in the District than is needed to pay the District's portion of the standard under which the District is being conducted.

We would have had a surplus of nearly a million on July 1, 1915, had it not been that we met an unusually large payment on account of old debts which, for one reason or another, had accumulated against the District. In the fiscal years 1914 and 1915 we paid wholly from District revenues an old bill for care of insane of $719,536.09, an old interest debt on 3.65 bonds of $586,067.23, an old debt to Freedman's Hospital of $37,996.70, we restored to the Federal Government $165,937 of rentals on property belonging to the United States, and we made up a shortage of $63,000 arising from a defalcation of a District employee—an old case. So that last year we would have had a surplus of $1,000,000 if we had not paid these old debts. At the end of this fiscal year we expect to have a surplus of between a million and a half and two million dollars.

Senator WORKS. That is the amount in excess of one-half of the District expenses that has been derived from taxation?

Commissioner NEWMAN. Yes, sir. The amount automatically produced by this rigid tax rate in excess of the District's half of the expenditures.

But let us look at the future. We find an additional reason why it is very important that this increase in District revenue be carefully considered. It seems to me that these figures alone show the necessity of a rearrangement of the fiscal relation between the District of Columbia and the United States, because, unless they are rearranged, in 1920 we will have a surplus of District revenues of about $9,000,000, which obviously would be absurd.

Senator SAULSBURY. You mean a cumulative surplus?

Commissioner NEWMAN. A cumulative surplus; yes, sir.

It seems to me, in view of this situation, that this committee is confronted by what is really quite a simple situation and not so complicated and difficult as one would presume from the vast amount of evidence, discussion, and argument that has been presented in this matter. It seems to me that these certain surpluses automatically dispose of the half-and-half, for this reason, that to defend the half-and-half in the face of them means to do one of two things—appropriate twice as much money every year as the District raises, and thereby absorb the surplus, or reduce the tax rate in the District of Columbia.

I do not anticipate that any member of this committee would seriously propose to this Congress a reduction of the tax rate in the District of Columbia.

Senator WORKS. Let us see about that. You say that this committee will not consider the reduction of the taxes of the people in the District of Columbia. I do not know why you say that. If it was contemplated by the act of 1878 that the Government should pay one-half of the expenses of the District and that the people of the District, by way of taxation, should pay the other one-half, why should the people be taxed for more than one-half?

Commissioner NEWMAN. They should not be.

Senator WORKS. Then why do you say that this committee would not consider the question of reducing the amount of taxes to be collected? It might be our duty to do that, under those circumstances.

Commissioner NEWMAN. That is my contention—that if, for instance, this committee reports back to Congress that the half-and-half plan should be continued, you have either got to permit the accumulation of this unusable—and, as I think, inexcusable—surplus or reduce the tax rate to produce only the District's half. The reason I said I did not anticipate that you would make a report of that kind, Senator, was that I think I know the temper of Congress on that subject, and I should be very much surprised if Congress would receive favorably that sort of thing.

Senator WORKS. Do you not think that under those conditions it might be a good deal better to allow the responsibility to rest with the Government, or the money acquired by taxation to be paid to the Treasury, without thinking about the one-half or two-thirds or any other amount?

Commissioner NEWMAN. That is what I am going to advocate, sir. Senator WORKS. I am glad to hear you say that.

Commissioner NEWMAN. I now want to make a statement to the committee which will not be received with enthusiasm in some quarters of the District of Columbia, but which I am compelled to make because I am absolutely convinced of its truth. I believe that 90 per cent of the friction between Members of Congress and citizens of the District of Columbia and 90 per cent of the friction between individuals or groups of individuals in Congress or the District of Columbia is due to the very existence of the half-and-half plan, because it causes everything in the District to be discussed on the basis of the half and half and not on the basis of the merits of the subject under discussion. Every question pertaining to the District of Columbia, as to text-books for the schools, or street paving, or the cost of sidewalks, or the collection of garbage, or the paying for street car tickets for policemen and firemen, or the salaries of the commissioners, or the pay of an additional messenger in the courthouse, is discussed not at all upon the merits, on whether the thing should be had or whether the thing is needed, but upon the basis of "why should the United States pay half of this," and "why should the District of Columbia pay half of this, that, and the other thing?"

I wish now to outline very briefly the plan of fiscal relationship which Commissioner Brownlow and I believe ought to be adopted in the District of Columbia.

Going back to the fact that the dominant element in the equation under consideration is the National Government, I come to the declaration of the plan of fiscal relation which Commissioner Brownlow and I believe should exist between the District and the United States. That is, the District of Columbia continuing to be a city of 350,000 people, but being the minor factor of the equation, and the National Capital being the major factor, that for purposes of government, for purposes of financing the municipality, the primary, the whole responsibility is that of the National Government.

The National Government should pay all of the expenses of the District of Columbia just as it pays all of the expenses of the Agricultural Department, the Navy Department, the War Department, the Department of Commerce, and of all other executive departments or branches of the Federal Government. It should pay all bills out of moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated. So much for what the Federal Government ought to do in the District of Columbia.

Now, what should the 350,000 people in the District do? What should the second, minor element in the equation do. Take an individual member of that group of 350,000; take a man, John Hobbs, living anywhere in the District of Columbia. John Hobbs should pay into the Treasury of the United States a fair and reasonable sum of money for the privilege, protection, and civic rights that he enjoys by living in the District of Columbia. All of the John Hobbses in town should pay a reasonable and fair sum of money because they live here, just as anybody in any city pays for the privileges and advantages of living in that city. In Washington John Hobbs would pay it into the Treasury of the United States as a tax for the privilege of living here. That money should be covered into miscellaneous receipts along with moneys derived from internal revenue, customs receipts, income tax, post-office receipts, and all the other moneys that the United States collects, and it should bear no relation whatever to the amount of money that Congress appropriates for the establishment and upkeep of its National Capital.

Mr. COOPER. Can you indicate for what purpose you think the money of John Hobbs should be paid?

Commissioner NEWMAN. No, sir. Mr. Cooper, I would not place it on that basis at all. At this point, or rather in considering this point of this plan, it is necessary—as it is necessary, I think, in any plan for the District of Columbia—to be arbitrary. I mean in this particular. My idea is that he should pay what it would cost him to live in any other city of this size. Now, what is done with that money I do not think ought to be considered. I think that money ought to be dumped into the Treasury, and then all of the expenses of the District be paid by the United States.

Mr. GARD. His payment would be regulated by his possessions, would it not?

Commissioner NEWMAN. Yes.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. By what?

Mr. GARD. By his possessions.

Senator WORKS. Under that plan obviously you could not apply the money of any or all of the taxpayers to any specific obligation.

Commissioner NEWMAN. No, sir.

Senator WORKS. They would simply pay what would be reasonable and just for the privileges which they enjoyed in living in a city like this.

Commissioner NEWMAN. Yes.

Senator WORKS. And the responsibility for the payment of all these obligations would rest on the Government and not on the taxpayer, John Hobbs, or anybody else?

Commissioner NEWMAN. Yes.

There is another thing I did while I was making this same effort to divide these expenses, trying to see whether there is any justification for saying that half of the amount should be paid by the United States and half by the District of Columbia. It is absolutely undemonstrable. It can not be. There is no human brain or human ingenuity which can take the expenditures of the District of Columbia for the year that closed the 1st of last July and show that half of them should have been paid by the United States and half by the property owners of the District of Columbia.

Mr. WORKS. I want also, in the same way, to include as part of my remarks the statement of Hon. Louis Brownlow, another member of the board of commissioners, who goes into this question quite thoroughly and explains in detail how the funds as between the District and the National Government are manipulated, if I may use the term. The effect of his statement is to show that the money finally goes into the Treasury of the United States and becomes a part of its funds, and is paid out as such.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the statement referred to by the Senator will be printed in the RECORD without reading.

The statement referred to is as follows:

STATEMENT OF HON. LOUIS BROWNLOW.

I believe that the National Government should assume full and sole responsibility for the National Capital, meeting its every expense by a direct appropriation from the Federal Treasury; that the people here should contribute toward the national expenses an amount equal to the taxes paid by citizens of other American cities of approximately the same size. The people here will gladly bear such a burden; the Nation will not willingly ask them to bear more.

After a study of this problem for several years as a citizen, and after a careful examination of the question for a short time from the position of a Commissioner of the District I have reached the conclusion that no adequate presentation of the problem in all its phases can be made unless it is based upon the fundamental facts.

The act of 1878 provided that the commissioners should annually make estimates of the expenditures proposed for the next ensuing fiscal year; that they should be submitted to the Secretary of the Treasury, who, in turn, should, after revision, if it be necessary, transmit the estimates to Congress. The act then says:

"To the extent to which Congress shall approve of said estimates Congress shall appropriate the amount of 50 per cent thereof, and the remaining 50 per cent of such approved estimates shall be levied and assessed upon the taxable property and privileges in said District, other than the property of the United States and of the District of Columbia."

Since that time the annual appropriation act for the District of Columbia, immediately after the enacting clause, says:

"That one half of the following sums, respectively, is appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and the other half out of the revenues of the District of Columbia."

Notwithstanding the mandatory character of this legislative language, I shall, I believe, be able to show you that the expenditures of the District of Columbia have not been made on the half-and-half basis and that, as a matter of fact, there is no such thing as the half-and-half system.

It is purely a legislative fiction. When the collector of taxes of the District of Columbia, at the end of his day's work, deposits with the Treasurer of the United States his collections for the day he is given a receipt by the Treasurer which reads as follows, to read from an example I have before me:

"I certify that Ben L. Prince, collector of taxes, District of Columbia, has this day deposited to the credit of the United States $27,681.77, on account of collections, District of Columbia, for which I have signed duplicate receipt."

Every cent collected from the taxpayers of the District of Columbia goes into the Treasury to the credit of the United States; there is no account of the District of Columbia in the Treasury Department; and Congress is at liberty to do with the moneys collected from the taxpayers of the District anything it may do with the money collected at the customhouses, or the offices of the internal-revenue collectors anywhere in the Republic. Because it is necessary for the purpose of supporting my views to clearly establish these facts, I shall go into them in some detail.

These daily deposits remain in the hands of the Treasurer until the close of each month, at which time the accounting officers of the Treasury prepare what is known as a covering-in warrant, which takes not only the moneys deposited by the District but moneys deposited by all Federal agents out of the hands of the Treasurer and covers the amount into the Treasury, where the Federal accounting and bookkeeping system begins. No distinction is made as to the money collected by Federal agencies and the amount collected by the District, the whole amount being covered into the credit of miscellaneous receipts of the United States.

There is not on the books of the Treasury Department any account between the United States and the District of Columbia which shows or purports to show that there is any such class of moneys in the Treasury Department held as a trust fund or otherwise known as the revenues of the District of Columbia. As a matter of fact, the accounting officers of the Treasury hold that there is nothing contained in any act of Congress which calls for or requires the provision upon the books of the Treasury of an account dealing with revenue of the District of Columbia or the maintenance of a trust fund in the Treasury for such moneys.

Senator WORKS. If there was an attempt to carry out the provisions of that appropriation act there would not be any revenue to apply to it, would there? There is not any District revenue in the Treasury?

Commissioner BROWNLOW. There is none, and never has been since the passage of the act of 1878.

The comptroller further says that if the municipal corporation of the District of Columbia were considered as a distinct legal entity, independent of the United States in its relations to such revenue, this would indicate that the revenues were to be kept separate and apart in the Treasury and accounted for as the revenues of the municipal corporation of the District of Columbia and not as a part of the general fund in the Treasury arising from the revenues of a particular source. For the reason stated by the comptroller in his decision he declined to permit an account to be kept on the books of the Treasury as a trust-fund account showing the payment into the Treasury of revenues of the District of Columbia, thus indicating that the account of the District of Columbia shall be kept only as a personal account between the United States and the District and that all revenues paid into the Treasury shall be treated as payments on account and credited to the District as such. The revenues of the District of Columbia in the Treasury Department are just as separate as and no more separate than are the customs collected by the collector of customs of the port of New York or the excise taxes collected by the collector at Peoria, Ill.

Senator WORKS. In other words, in that capacity he is simply an officer of the Government collecting the funds of the Government and paying them into the Treasury. Then, where is your District?

Commissioner BROWNLOW. Fiscally, there is no such thing.

Notwithstanding the fact that the annual appropriation acts of the District of Columbia and any number of special acts contain provisions for the payment of certain expenses one-half from the revenues of the District of Columbia and one-half from moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, there is in reality no distinction as far as the money is concerned between these two classes. The actual effect of these provisions for half-and-half appropriations is to charge the full amount of the appropriations for the District of Columbia to moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, because there being no account on the books of the Treasury Department and no revenues of the District of Columbia in the Treasury Department, there can be no charge made for any part of appropriations against the revenues of the District of Columbia. It is in this respect that the so-called half and half is purely a legislative fiction, because, while Congress does, it is true, appropriate under the half-and-half system, the actual transaction which takes place is that all expenses of the District of Columbia are paid out of miscellaneous receipts of the United States in the Treasury Department which are not otherwise appropriated. Not only are the so-called revenues of the District of Columbia treated as miscellaneous receipts of the United States, but in addition to these moneys which are collected by the District authorities and paid into the Treasury and which are in their very nature trust funds are also treated and considered to be miscellaneous receipts of the United States, and like the revenues of the District of Columbia they form part of the general appropriating fund to which resort is had by Congress for expenses of government and other uses, and are available for any purpose that Congress sees fit to make of them.

While the half-and-half plan is a fiction, it is a legislative fiction, and therefore has a great deal of influence, the greater part of which is harmful.

Senator WORKS. You did not say that these things are being done lawfully, did you?

Commissioner BROWNLOW. No. They are being done because the character of the half-and-half plan makes it so unworkable that the Treasury Department can not do it in any other way.

Senator SAULSBURY. They are being done in accordance with the opinions of the officials of the Treasury Department?

Commissioner BROWNLOW. Yes.

If Congress is to continue the half-and-half, I trust that you will incorporate in your report suggestions for legislation which will make it an actuality instead of a fiction. To do this it will be necessary for Congress to direct the Treasurer to accept deposits of tax moneys collected in the District of Columbia as a trust fund, to be held to meet the 50 per cent of the annual appropriation chargeable to the District. Inasmuch as the District government can not know in advance of the action of Congress what the total amount of the appropriations will be, it will be further necessary, if the half-and-half is to be made an actuality, to refrain from levying any tax until after the appropriations are made, then divide the total of the appropriations by 2 and apply the result to the assessed values of the District of Columbia and fix a tax rate that will bring in the desired amount. Of course, I do not believe that Congress, in its wisdom, would ever agree to so cumbersome and impracticable a system.

The only theory upon which the half-and-half can be sustained, and the same statement would apply to any other fixed percentage proportion, is that in the District of Columbia there are two distinct entities, the municipality and the National Capital; that these two entities, have some interests in common, some interests that do not touch each other, and some interests that are mutually antagonistic, so that the supreme legislative power is required to decree an arbitrary compromise.

But if there be two such interests, is it fair, is it right, is it just, is it equitable, that the absolute control of both should be vested in the one? If the local municipality possesses rights, it should have the power to exercise them. If it is a separate political entity, it should have separate political powers.

I am convinced that this is a mistaken theory. There is only one political entity here, only one power, and only one interest. This is the Federal city, the National Capital, the seat of the Government of the United States of America. That people live here in great number or in few, that the ordinary affairs of city life are carried on here to a greater extent or less, is beside the mark. If it were not for the primary and fundamental fact that this is the Nation's Capital, the community would not exist.

If it is a municipality in fact, despite the residence of the Federal Government here, it should be erected into an actual municipality and the Government treated only as a resident. If it is in fact, as I contend, the National Capital, and nothing else, then it should be controlled by the National Government absolutely. Every expense should be met out of the Federal funds, and Congress in making laws and providing money for the National Capital should not be limited by any arbitrary rule predicated upon the fictional existence of a mythical municipality nor should it match dimes with the folks who happen to live here.

If we take the view that this is the Nation's Capital, it is absurd that 350,000 persons should rule and control that which belongs to a hundred million, and, on the other hand, if Congress is appropriating money for the use and benefit of the National Capital on behalf of a hundred million, it is absurd that it should be limited or even influenced by the tax-paying abilities of the three hundred and fifty thousand.

At the end of this present fiscal year, according to the best obtainable estimate, the District revenues will exceed one-half of the appropriations by $1,136,286.03. For convenience it is customary to term this balance a surplus; but, as a matter of fact, it will be a part of the moneys of the United States, and will be available for the purposes of any appropriation made by Congress for any purpose whatsoever. Thus it will be seen that, in so far as it works at all, the half-and-half works against the District and not for it.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. What power has the Government to ask us to pay the expenses of the United States Government?

Commissioner BROWNLOW. I am not going into what power it has. I am just stating here what the facts are. It has been suggested here, I believe, that the Government could not tax the District at all, but it has been doing it.

I firmly believe that all of our troubles with respect to this problem would be ended if the next appropriation bill, instead of reading "that one-half of the following sums, respectively, is appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and the other half out of the revenues of the District of Columbia," should be changed to read: "That the following sums are appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated." That would leave our present laws of assessment and taxation as they are. It would not cost any taxpayer in the District of Columbia an additional cent, it would not impose the burden of another cent upon any taxpayer out of the District of Columbia, and it would not even affect the bookkeeping arrangements of the Treasury Department. It would simply break down a legislative fiction and bring the statute books into accord with already existing facts.

My suggestions with respect to a plan are very simple.

In the first place, I would have Congress declare that since the District of Columbia is the National Capital, it should be governed and supported solely by the Federal Government. Then, that this District may not become a haven of refuge for tax dodgers and that the people who live here may pay, as they are willing to pay, for the benefits and privileges enjoyed by them, I would provide that a just and equitable tax be levied, comparable in so far as possible with that paid by citizens of other cities of approximately the same size as Washington.

Now, herein lay the benefit of the half-and-half: While it was a fiction then as it is now, yet it was a fiction that left the people here thinking they still have a separate government and at the same time accustomed Congress, who also still thought the people had a separate government, to provide annually for the needs of the District. Before 1878, before the passage of the organic act and the ordination of the half-and-half system, all provisions anywhere for improvements of a permanent character or for current expenses were made in a haphazard fashion. One year the appropriations were large and another year they were small. There was no regular budget.

I can freely say with the people who still support the half-and-half, that it was a great benefit to the National Capital in that it induced Congress to get into the annual habit of taking into consideration all the projected requirements of the District of Columbia and to make this annual appropriation based upon the needs of the District of Columbia. That was its chief function and that function it has performed. We now have an orderly budget. We now have an annual scheme of appropriations. So I can see that the half-and-half has been beneficial, but its benefits have been benefits resulting solely from the psychological influence of a legislative fiction upon a legislative mind.

Now, a psychological fact is just as stubborn a fact as a physical fact, but you can not expect other than a psychological result from a psychological impulse. Everything that the half-and-half can do in the way of influencing Congress to take into consideration the needs of the District of Columbia has been done. Indeed, Congress has become so accustomed to the annual routine of approving the budget of the District of Columbia that it now accepts that as just as much a part of its duty as it does to pass the annual appropriation bill for the Post Office, or for the Navy, or for the Army, or for any other branch of the Federal Government, and, having accepted that fact, it has forgotten the chaos that existed here prior to 1878, and it is asking "Why this limitation? Why this half-and-half?" So that now in the year 1915 the half-and-half, instead of being psychologically advantageous to the National Capital, has become psychologically disadvantageous.

If you could get this hard and fast half-and-half rule out of the way, this unjust and inequitable rule, there would not be any reason on earth why the patriotism and civic pride of men from Oklahoma, North Dakota, Maine, and South Carolina might not meet and blend with the civic pride of the men from Georgetown, Chevy Chase, Anacostia, and Brookland. They are all Americans and it doesn't make anyone the less an American because he happens to live in the District of Columbia instead of Pennsylvania. He may still vote in Pennsylvania. He is an American, and the Pennsylvanian is an American and they are both equally interested in developing the District of Columbia into the most magnificent Capital that any nation has ever had, because unless it is the most magnificent Capital on earth, it can not express the aspirations of the greatest Republic of all times.

This most unfortunate condition I believe is due to the pernicious psychological influence of the half-and-half. Holding as I do that the half-and-half is but a legislative fiction, that its effects and influences are altogether psychological, conceding as I do its one-time benefit, I say that now it is almost altogether harmful. It is breeding distrust of the District in Congress; it is breeding distrust of Congress in the District; it is fomenting a feud that, if carried on to fruition, will result in dire disaster.

Mr. COOPER. You, as I understand it, are opposed to the retention of the half-and-half plan, and you say if it were abolished Congress would still continue to appropriate for its just share of the District's expenses, and also for public improvements in the city?

Commissioner BROWNLOW. I so believe.

Mr. COOPER. You say the record which Congress has made in the way of appropriations for great national improvements in the city of Washington is not at all based on the half-and-half plan and has no relation to it.

Commissioner BROWNLOW. It has no relation to it and never has had. No appropriation for that purpose has ever been made based on that plan.

Mr. COOPER. For instance, the Lincoln Memorial; you think Congress would have appropriated for that even if there had been no half-and-half plan in existence?

Commissioner BROWNLOW. Undoubtedly Congress would have appropriated for it. It was not appropriated for under that plan.

Mr. COOPER. And the other great national improvements which have been made here—the appropriations for those improvements have had no relation whatever to the half-and-half plan?

Commissioner BROWNLOW. That is true.

Mr. COOPER. Your idea is, as I gather from your argument, if we were to put into operation the plan which you propose—to levy a tax on the taxpayers of Washington which would approximate the amount borne by the residents of other cities to which this city is fairly comparable—that Congress under those conditions would appropriate whatever was necessary to pay for the rest of the District expenses, and that in addition to this Congress would continue to appropriate for the national improvements just as it has done since the year 1878, without any regard to the half-and-half plan.

Commissioner BROWNLOW. And also for the so-called local improvements.

Mr. COOPER. Yes; for the local improvements, too.

Commissioner BROWNLOW. They have never paid any attention to the half-and-half plan. I have only predicated my opinion on that matter, as to what Congress will do in the future, by what it has done in the past.

Senator WORKS. There is this reason for making a change. The people are being deluded and made to believe that that thing is being done, when, as a matter of fact, it is not. Nominally it is being done, because the appropriations are being made, so much out of the National Treasury and so much out of the District treasury. But there is no District treasury; and the people here have been led to believe that the division is being made on that theory and on that basis, when it is not. It seems to me we ought at least to quit deceiving the people into believing we are doing something that we never have done.

The CHAIRMAN. This is an answer; but if you can make the people feel good and it does not cost any more, why should you make a change?

Commissioner BROWNLOW. You do not make them feel good. There is a feeling among the people here that Congress has been unfair to the District when there has been any apparent deviation from that plan. You hear a great many people here speaking of the Members of Congress as enemies of the District, and some of the Members of Congress occasionally say something about the people of the District which is pretty harsh; and you have an unfortunate condition, and that is due—that feud is due—to the half-and-half plan, and it has resulted in the fact that the District has been unable to get legislation through Congress, except an occasional rider on an appropriation bill. That is the harm in the situation.

Mr. COOPER. Without indicating my own judgment in the matter, Mr. Commissioner, do you think if we changed the system and levied a tax equivalent in amount to that paid in other cities comparable to Washington it would do away with this bitter feeling which has arisen, the feeling that certain interests in this city, because of the half-and-half plan, have an unfair advantage?

Commissioner BROWNLOW. I think so.

Mr. COOPER. There would not be any opportunity for criticism in that event, would there?

Commissioner BROWNLOW. None at all.

Mr. COOPER. There would not be any sort of opportunity for the people in the District to say that Members of Congress were the enemies of the District if Congress was levying upon them only what their fellow citizens in other cities comparable to Washington were paying?

Commissioner BROWNLOW. Yes, sir; that is correct.

Mr. COOPER. In other words, there are two great grounds of criticism: First, Members of Congress and their respective constituents feel that certain interests in the District of Columbia are favored, and that feeling would be done away with. A second ground of criticism is the feeling among the residents of the District that Congress is unfair to them, and that would be done away with, you think?

Commissioner BROWNLOW. Absolutely. That is one of the benefits which would result from that change, and that makes me feel very strongly in regard to it.

The other benefit is this: Congress having assumed its obligation to the District, when matters affecting the District came up in Congress they would be considered solely on their merits, and there would not be any quarrel as to whether or not Congress should pay half or any other particular proportion.

Senator WORKS. Mr. Brownlow, I would like to get at the process by which appropriations by Congress for the District of Columbia are reached. I understand the first step is the work of the assessor, which under the fixed dollar-and-a-half rate will determine precisely what amount of money will come from taxation. The next step is the making of estimates by the commissioners, which must be founded on the appraisement made by the assessor.

Commissioner BROWNLOW. Must be limited by it, not founded upon it. Senator WORKS. Well, limited by it. That is, you can not go beyond it if you follow out the half-and-half system.

Commissioner BROWNLOW. Quite true.

Senator WORKS. You simply make your estimates at double the amount that would be realized from the assessments that are made. Then when Congress comes to deal with it, if it follows the half-and-half plan, it is limited in precisely the same way. Its duty is to appropriate one-half of the amount from the revenues of the District which do not exist and the other half from the National Treasury. That would be the process if the half-and-half system was carried out to the letter, would it not?

Commissioner BROWNLOW. If it were carried out to the letter; Congress would double the amount of the revenues.

Senator WORKS. Then, as a matter of fact, under the law as it exists to-day, the assessor's office under the half-and-half system could establish absolutely what revenues should be raised for the purpose of improving and carrying on the affairs of the District?

Commissioner BROWNLOW. The assessor's office when it is making its appraisement has not in mind the revenues to be produced at this time. At the same time the actual effect is that the assessor's office, under the present law and under the half-and-half system, by its valuation of property can put a limit upon what Congress shall do for the District?

Senator WORKS. Well, by saying it can put a limit upon it, you mean that Congress may appropriate less than the amount but not more?

Commissioner BROWNLOW. Yes; not more. There is an upset limit, as I say.

Senator WORKS. Then if Congress should desire to make any appropriation beyond that amount it would have to do it in violation of what they call the organic act?

Mr. BROWNLOW. Precisely; and they would have to put in the appropriation bills things that were not estimated for by the commissioners.

I would like to read this provision of the law of 1899:

"Hereafter the Commissioners of the District of Columbia shall not submit, nor shall the Secretary of the Treasury transmit, to Congress regular annual estimates for the expenses for the government of the District of Columbia for any fiscal year that shall exceed in the aggregate a sum equal to twice the amount of the total estimated revenues of the District of Columbia for such fiscal year."

Senator WORKS. Then, under these conditions, if you and your associates, as commissioners, should regard it as in the interest of the District of Columbia that additional improvements should be made that would exceed that amount, you would be prevented by that act from submitting estimates for them?

Commissioner BROWNLOW. We have been.

Senator WORKS. You have been limited in that way?

Commissioner BROWNLOW. We have.

Senator WORKS. In violation of your own judgment of what should be done?

Commissioner BROWNLOW. In violation of our own judgment as to what should be done.

Mr. GARD. You can call the attention of Congress to special needs, and Congress could do that.

Commissioner BROWNLOW. Oh, yes; in another way, of course, as to the things that we are prevented from doing. There is another section of the law here which says that we can not publish or make known our estimates until they are transmitted to Congress, but some of the things that we would like to estimate for, that we would like to urge upon Congress, involve such large expenditure of money for this next fiscal year that we could not include them in our estimates.

Senator WORKS. And when you make these recommendations as to the special improvements that go beyond the amount of the estimate, you are doing that in violation, or outside of, the half-and-half rule, are you not? You go beyond it entirely?

Commissioner BROWNLOW. We go beyond the half-and-half rule entirely.

Senator WORKS. And that is not controlled by the half-and-half rule?

Commissioner BROWNLOW. Not at all.

Senator SAULSBURY. I think exact figures give the best examples of what conditions a given law can work out, and I have been making some figures here, and if I am mistaken I wish you would point out wherein I am mistaken.

Commissioner BROWNLOW. I will do so if I can.

Senator SAULSBURY. I find as to land and improvements, that the total real estate assessment for 1915 amounts to $390,000,000 plus. Assume for convenience in figuring, as I shall do, that it is $400,000,000. That means that the full value of the land and improvements of the District of Columbia would be 50 per cent more than that, or say $600,000,000; that is correct, I believe.

Commissioner BROWNLOW. Six hundred millions; yes, sir.

Senator SAULSBURY. Then it would be within the power of the assessor under the law, in performing his duties, to make an assessment of full value equal to $600,000,000?

Commissioner BROWNLOW. Yes, sir; but the difference between full value and the amount that he actually assesses it at represents his discretion in the premises.

Senator SAULSBURY. Yes; so he could assess the real estate in the District at either $400,000,000 or $600,000,000; is that correct?

Commissioner BROWNLOW. Yes, sir; he has that discretion.

Senator SAULSBURY. Then at $400,000,000 the fixed tax rate of $1.50 would produce $6,000,000?

Commissioner BROWNLOW. Yes, sir.

Senator SAULSBURY. If he saw fit in his discretion to make an assessment at 100 per cent valuation, $600,000,000, the fixed tax rate of $1.50 would produce $9,000,000; that is correct, is it?

Commissioner BROWNLOW. Yes, sir.

Senator SAULSBURY. In other words, in the exercise of his discretion, without knowing anything about what the appropriations were desired to be, he could raise $3,000,000 more from the real estate of the District; is that correct?

Commissioner BROWNLOW. He could. That is, every three years he could bring about the change.

Senator SAULSBURY. Now, assuming that he assessed at full value instead of two-thirds value, on the half-and-half basis the Government would be supposed to contribute to the municipal government $3,000,000 more, would it not, to make an amount equal to that raised by the city?

Commissioner BROWNLOW. If the half-and-half were followed.

Senator SAULSBURY. In other words, it is possible for the assessor to so exercise his legal powers, perfectly properly, that he could cause to be expended in the District of Columbia practically $6,000,000 more than would be expended if he assessed the property at a two-thirds rate?

Commissioner BROWNLOW. That is absolutely true, if there were such a thing as half and half in fact.

Senator SAULSBURY. If it were carried out.

Commissioner BROWNLOW. Yes, sir; if it were carried out.

Senator SAULSBURY. It produces a most extraordinary situation, and I wanted to know if there was any fault to be found with that calculation.

Mr. WORKS. I also ask to include in the same way statements of Mr. Charles C. Lancaster, William E. Shannon, Justice F. L. Siddons, John Joy Edson, Edward F. Colladay, M. M. Parker, and Evan H. Tucker. Most of them are quite short; but the statements made by the two commissioners are quite long, and it would take some time to read them.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the statements referred to by the Senator will be printed in the RECORD without reading.

The statements referred to are as follows:

STATEMENT OF CHARLES C. LANCASTER.

The first point in my brief is this: As the Congress of the United States exercises all legislative control under the Constitution, it should now assume full and complete financial responsibility for all expenditures of the seat of Government of the United States, and that Congress should pay all of its obligations by direct appropriations from the Treasury of the United States.

The second proposition: The Congress, by appropriate legislation, should collect all taxes on private property in the seat of the Government of the United States, by a fixed and reasonable rate of taxation and valuation, and the amount so collected should be deposited in the Treasury of the United States as other public moneys.

The third proposition: For the local administration of the seat of Government the Congress shall provide by proper legislation the selection and appointment of all local officers and employees, which shall be limited to the citizens permanently residing in the seat of Government.

That act of 1878 provided that Congress should appropriate what it approved of the estimates and the citizen should pay the other one-half. Now, take that proposition right there. This whole thing—and in the discussion here they have not got it right, in my judgment—the whole thing is radically wrong, financially, morally, and legally wrong. It says that what Congress approves of the estimates they shall appropriate one-half and the citizens the other. Why, under that plan Congress could appropriate $40,000,000 or $50,000,000 and say to us, "Put up your part." We are not able to do it. We can not put it up. Not only that, but how is that thing worked?

I am going to tell you something now, gentlemen, that I want you to think over carefully. I am a practical man about this matter. What have you done? You have not gone as far as that, but you might have done it; you could have done it. But what have you done? You have gone to work here and squeezed us to raise our taxes to meet your 50 cents; you have gone to work and squeezed us here until now you have got us up to $8,000,000 or $9,000,000 of taxes in the poorest town of its size in the United States. That is what you have been doing with us. You have been squeezing the life out of us in order to meet your half dollar.

I say that is wrong. That is wrong in every sense of the word. You have no right; the Constitution does not give you that authority, because the Constitution simply says that you are the trustees of the American people over this Capital, and we living here, the American people, are the cestui que trust.

Senator WORKS. Then you do not agree, Colonel, with these gentlemen who are insisting upon paying that one-half, that that is the only just way of settling these differences between the people and the Government?

Mr. LANCASTER. I do not. I think it is radically wrong. They hold that proposition; but I take the view of it, as a lawyer and a citizen, that the conception of that proposition was an absolute failure; Congress did not do its duty. Instead of passing the act of 1878 on the half-and-half plan, Congress should have assumed then and there the entire responsibility. That is what the law says.

Congress should have assumed the entire responsibility after going into partnership with the poor man, and should have said to the people of Washington, "We will pay all the bills; we will appropriate all the money, and we will assess you what is reasonable and fair in comparison with other cities, and you pay your taxes into the United States Treasury, and that ends the business so far as the financial condition is concerned, and you gentlemen may go home and feel easy and go ahead with your business."

STATEMENT OF WILLIAM E. SHANNON.

I fully believe that the half-and-half plan is detrimental to the people and the city of Washington, as clearly pointed out by Commissioners Newman and Brownlow. I am firmly convinced it is the half-and-half plan that forces Congress to look upon this city merely as any other city of 350,000 people, instead of looking upon it as the Capital of the richest and greatest Nation on earth. It keeps Congress from looking upon it as its own, as belonging to its constituents, 100,000,000 strong.

As to the proportion of expenditures between the United States and the District, let Congress investigate and decide what constitutes just taxes. I am of the opinion that we are somewhat overtaxed; but, in any event, let us pay our just taxes directly to the Government. Then, without any consideration as to the ratio, let the Government spend our money, and as much more as Congress may deem wise, on our municipal organism and the beautification of the Nation's city. I feel it may be assumed with perfect safety that if this is done the Nation's Capital will not suffer in its development along the broad lines we all have so much at heart, but differ as to the method of accomplishing.

In closing I wish to say that I am sufficiently optimistic to predict that irrespective of what system may be put in force, I firmly believe that "just as sure as the Nation grows just so sure will its Capital grow; nothing can stop it." But it will grow better and bigger and approximate the ideal we all have for the Nation's Capital if its growth is exclusively undertaken and directed by Congress.

STATEMENT OF JUSTICE F. L. SIDDON.

First of all, with respect to the question which I suppose underlies this inquiry, whether or not the so-called half-and-half principle should be either repealed or modified.

My own conclusion, based upon observation of its operation over a considerable period of years, with a brief official connection with the administration of District affairs as a commissioner for some 18 months, is that the repeal of the half-and-half plan is eminently to be desired in the interests both of the people of the District of Columbia and the great legislature which enacts our laws.

I have reached that conclusion for the following, among other reasons: I believe that in the process of the years that have passed since the enactment of the so-called half-and-half plan it has become a fruitful source of vexation and irritation, both on the part of the citizens of the District and of Congress, more particularly those Members of the House and Senate whose official duties charge them with the care and supervision, legislatively, of the affairs of the District of Columbia.

I believe it is now objectionable because it proceeds on what seems to me to be a fixed, narrow, and arbitrary method of determining what should be the contribution upon the part of the local taxpayers and what should be the contribution from the Federal Government.

I say that because, in my humble opinion and judgment, there is but one power, one governing power, in the District of Columbia, and that is the Congress of the United States; I mean, of course, with respect to District affairs. Constitutionally it has supreme and exclusive power, and with that lodgment of supreme and exclusive power follows necessarily a heavy responsibility on the part of Congress to so legislate that the National Capital may be developed as every man and woman who loves his country would wish to see it developed and grow.

I have no disposition at all to pass judgment upon what has taken place in the past, either in respect to specific legislation from time to time, or the attitude of some of our citizens with respect to such legislation. I only can repeat that my observation has been that for a long period, at least 15 years, in Congress and out, the existence of this so-called half-and-half principle has been forever the cause of the irritation and vexation that I have adverted to, and in addition to that there is never a piece of legislation proposed for the District of Columbia that involves expenditure of money that the old wrangle over the half-and-half principle does not make its appearance.

I believe the existence of that irritation on both sides can hardly be gainsaid, as a matter that has been very unfortunate in its effect upon the District of Columbia in this, that it has postponed over and over again the enactment of desirable and necessary legislation.

Another reason why I have reached the conclusion that the half-and-half principle should be repealed is this: I have observed the influence of its existence and operation in several different ways, with respect especially to the matter of assessments for purposes of taxation in the District of Columbia, and with respect to the estimates submitted year by year by the commissioners to Congress, as they are required to do, and in the approach in Congress to consideration, either in the matter of appropriation or legislation.

I believe that Commissioner Brownlow, in his recommendations to this honorable committee, has probably suggested the wise course. Before I read his statement to the committee I had been very greatly impressed by the resolution offered, I think, by the honorable Senator from California, as to what, in his judgment, would be a wise disposition of the matter. It has seemed to me that it will never be possible to frame legislation that will be really permanent in its character which proceeds upon the theory of a partnership between the local taxpayers on the one side and the Federal Government, represented by the Congress of the United States, on the other.

I find no warrant for any such conception, either in the constitutional provision under which Congress operates or in the legislation of Congress from time to time.

I find none in the act of 1878, which established the so-called half-and-half principle.

We have heard over and over again in the last 10 or 15 years the justification for the existence of the half-and-half principle laid on the basis that the act of Congress in 1878 was a compact between the Congress of the United States and the people of the District; that it was a contract between the Congress of the United States and the people of the District of Columbia. I repeat that I find no warrant or justification either in the constitutional theory which has clothed Congress with this supreme and exclusive legislative power or in any act of Congress giving it effect from time to time.

STATEMENT OF JOHN JOY EDSON.

The District of Columbia is probably the most peculiar territory that there is in the United States, or in any country. The provision made by the Constitution for the establishment of this District was never complete and never comprehensive, and from the day that the District of Columbia was established there has been no complete, lasting form of government or definite adjustment of the relation between the Federal Government and the District; they have never been clearly defined or permanently fixed. The result of that has been one form of government after another has been tried, each unsatisfactory. Up to 1878 little progress was made as compared with other cities, especially as the Capital City of the Nation. I think that is the most serious aspect our history unfolds. Take it from a broad and farseeing standpoint it would seem that in the beginning the District status and its relation to the Federal Government should have been permanently defined. Now, if a commission could be designated and it took ample time to consider this question, there might be wrought out something, even if it required an amendment to the Constitution, fixing the District government in a way that it would have permanency. The government should not be founded upon a single act of Congress or legislation enacted upon the appropriation bill. To establish any fundamental government you have to have a fundamental arrangement with the National Government that the frequent legislative amendments to appropriation bills will not be made that will undermine and disturb public and private conditions. That should not be so. There are Territorial governments, there are State governments, it is true, but this is a territory that is not like other Territories or a State. What is it? We can not define it; we do not know what it is.

Senator WORKS. Well, is there any government at all?

Mr. EDSON. There has not been a well-defined government establishing the true relation that should exist between the Federal Government and the District.

Now, it would seem that the District situation must be recognized as extraordinary and this should not continue, but be adjusted upon wise and sound principles in accord with the absolute control and jurisdiction of the Congress.

STATEMENT OF EDWARD F. COLLADAY.

My view is that it would be better if the half-and-half system should really be restored and literally administered here in the District of Columbia. I do not believe that we have had a full, free, and literal administration of the half-and-half rule during recent years; but if for any reason this committee should choose not to recommend the restoration and strict application of the half-and-half rule, then I believe that we are confronted with the necessity of choosing between two other plans—No. 1 plan being the plan of a fixed proportion, less than one-half, to be paid by the Federal Government; or No. 2 plan, substantially the plan of Senator WORKS, the plan which he has advanced and which the civilian commissioners have advanced, and which, after slight modifications, I would prefer; that is, that the Federal Government, through Congress and with the approval of the President, should enact a statute not simply striking out the enacting clause, as stated by Commissioner Brownlow, but enact a statute solemnly declaring the liability of the Federal Government for the entire maintenance and development of the District of Columbia; second, that a fair tax should be levied upon the property in the District of Columbia, exclusive of intangibles; third, that a proper means of raising the revenues, assessing, levying, and collecting the taxes, should be secured substantially as at present, but as a part of that I would have a separate tax appeal board. I do not think that the same persons who make the assessments should be allowed to review their own assessments, and I base that upon my personal experience, representing clients before the assessors acting as a board of equalization and review.

STATEMENT OF M. M. PARKER.

I would be in favor of the proposition submitted by Senator WORKS, and so nicely set forth by ex-Senator Blackburn, that the Government assume entire charge of the District, fixing such taxation as in their judgment the people of Washington ought to pay. I would be entirely satisfied with that, except for the fact that I would be afraid that the same influences that have been operating to do away with the half-and-half plan would be brought to bear on Members of Congress and Senators of the United States, so that the burden would rest entirely on the District of Columbia. I am afraid Congress would limit the improvements to the revenues of the District.

STATEMENT OF EVAN H. TUCKER.

Coming back to the question, Mr. Chairman, I will say that I do think the plan of Senator WORKS and Commissioners Newman and Brownlow is theoretically the solution of this question.

Senator WORKS. In principle it is all right, is it not?

Mr. TUCKER. In principle it is all right, absolutely. There is no question about it. But I am afraid that in practice it would be to the great detriment of our citizens.

Senator WORKS. Is not that the same with the whole opposition to any change from the half-and-half theory, that you people here in Washington are afraid?

Mr. TUCKER. I think so.

Senator WORKS. And you are afraid of Congress?

Mr. TUCKER. I think so.

Senator WORKS. That is the whole situation.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I have shown that the District of Columbia is a useless organization; that it can by no possibility do any good; and I think I have shown that it is doing positive harm. I have tried to show, as dispassionately as I could, the conditions as they exist and the probable, almost certain, injurious effects of carrying on the District government under the half-and-half system.

As I have said, the adoption of my amendment, while it may seem radical, would have but very little effect practically. Things would go on just as they are now going on, but under a different form. The money necessary to carry on the District of Columbia would be paid directly out of the National Treasury instead of being paid one-half out of the pretended District treasury and one-half out of the National Treasury. I have shown that there is in fact no District treasury. The District has none. It does not collect any money; it has no power to collect money; it can not pay it out; it can not deal with it in any way except that the officers of the District collect the money from taxpayers and pay it into the National Treasury.

I have given this matter a good deal of careful attention. I may be entirely wrong in my views about it, but I have not come to my conclusions without the most careful consideration and thought.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. WORKS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. CURTIS. Would it not be better, if a plan of this kind were to be established at this time, for the Senator to offer his amendment as a proviso to the Senate committee amendment, so that the three suggestions would be in conference? For instance, if the amendment of the Senator should be adopted, it would supersede the committee amendment, the latter going out of the bill, and there would be nothing then in conference between the two Houses except the Senator's plan and the plan proposed by the House.

Mr. WORKS. That would be a very inconsistent thing, it seems to me, for the Senate to do, because my amendment certainly is in direct conflict with the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. CURTIS. What I meant was that the Senator's amendment be put in the form of a proviso to take effect on and after July 1, 1917, so that in the meantime the plan could be worked out, it could be ascertained whether it does in any way conflict with existing law; and the necessary provisions could be made to carry the provisions of the Senator's amendment into effect.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will suggest to my colleague on the committee that Congress has not any time to work out a plan now.

Mr. CURTIS. I say they could do it at the next session of Congress, if the provision proposed to be incorporated by the Senator from California were to take effect on and after July 1, 1917.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, will the Senator from California allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. WORKS. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator from California says that the District has no treasury and has no money which belongs to it. To whom does the money belong which has already been contributed by the District of Columbia and not expended?

Mr. WORKS. It belongs to the Government, without any question.

Mr. GALLINGER. And the Senator thinks that that could be taken back into the National Treasury?

Mr. WORKS. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. That was attempted several years ago, and it did not meet with the approval of Congress; and so it has not been done.

Mr. WORKS. I am not dealing with the past, I will say to the Senator; I am dealing only with the future. There is nothing in this amendment that disturbs anything that has already taken place, except that it provides for the payment of all of the debts of the District government by the National Government out of the National Treasury.

Mr. GALLINGER. What struck me was the Senator's suggestion that the District had no treasury and no money belonging to it, and yet here is an excess of money contributed by the District which the Government ought to have matched in amount, but did not do so. Now, surely, that money must belong to the District and not to the United States Government, the District having contributed it.

Mr. WORKS. Not at all.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator thinks not.

Mr. WORKS. No; there is no way by which the District can make any demand upon the Government for the repayment of the money they have paid under legal taxation. It is quite unjust, I agree, that that money should be held by the Government and not matched under the half-and-half system.

Mr. GALLINGER. Does, or does not, the Senator think, as there is an obligation jointly imposed upon the District of Columbia and the National Government to the extent of several million dollars in connection with the 3.65 bonds, that that money which the taxpayers have contributed should be used for the liquidation of a portion of that obligation resting upon the District?

Mr. WORKS. I think not. The trouble with the attitude of the Senator from New Hampshire—

Mr. GALLINGER. No; I am asking the question for information.

Mr. WORKS. If he will allow me to suggest it, it is that the Senator is treating the District of Columbia as an actual entity, when it is not. It is merely an agent of the Government, and nothing more, and the Government may certainly change its agency at will.

So far as the interests of the taxpayers are concerned, they are not disturbed in the least. They will go on paying just the same taxes as they have paid in the past, and under exactly the same law. The only difference will be that, instead of a pretense—because it is a mere pretense—that we are paying half of this amount out of the revenues of the District, we will be doing exactly what we are doing in fact, paying it out of the National Treasury.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, of course I can not quite follow the Senator.

Mr. WORKS. I regret if I have been unable to make myself understood. I am doing the best I can.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am delighted to listen to the Senator, but I can not quite follow him to his conclusion. The Supreme Court declared that the act of 1878 was the organic law of the District of Columbia. The Supreme Court recognized the District of Columbia as an entity.

Mr. WORKS. As an agent.

Mr. GALLINGER. Well, as an entity, I should call it; and yet the Senator just wipes it out, and says it does not exist; that it is not of any account.

Mr. WORKS. Oh, no.

Mr. GALLINGER. That it is a mere governmental agency, as I understood the Senator, although I may have been mistaken.

Mr. WORKS. I am stating the plain facts about it. That is exactly what it is. I am not attacking the validity of the so-called organic act; it is good for what it is worth; but I am trying to change it so that things will work out a good deal better than I think they are doing now.

Mr. President, I do not know whether the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] proposes to insist upon his point of order. If so, I should like to be permitted to say just a word about that. If not, I do not care to take up the time of the Senate further.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, will the Senator permit a question before the point of order comes up?

Mr. WORKS. Certainly.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Some question having been raised as to whether the District is an entity, I desire to ask the Senator, can the District of Columbia maintain suits in the courts and be made defendant in suits?

Mr. WORKS. Yes. The Government, in effect, consents to sue or be sued in the name of its agent.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. To that extent, then, it is an entity?

Mr. WORKS. Yes; as a mere agent of the Government, as I have said.

The VICE PRESIDENT. As the Chair understands, this matter is coming before the Chair, and the Chair would like to be advised concerning it, but the Chair did not catch the statement of the Senator from Connecticut and the answer of the Senator from California.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. This has nothing to do with the point of order, Mr. President.

Mr. WORKS. It may have.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks it has.

Mr. WORKS. The question of the Senator was whether the District of Columbia was an entity to the extent of having the power to bring suits in its own name and to defend them, and I said "yes." That right has been recognized, and for that reason I have included in my amendment a provision that would protect the people who might sue the District by giving them the right to sue the Government, the principal, under the same circumstances, just as its agent is allowed to sue and be sued in its name.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Then I want to ask the Senator a question in reference to his statement that the District of Columbia was simply the agent of the General Government in collecting taxes upon the property of the residents of the District and depositing the taxes so collected in the Treasury of the United States. The Senator says that the money so collected and deposited is not the money of the District. Now, I want to ask the Senator, under his conception of the mutual relations of the General Government and the District, whether he thinks the General Government could take those taxes collected from the District and appropriate them to other purposes than District purposes?

A very singular condition of things exists—and if I had read the testimony of Mr. Brownlow, one of the commissioners of the District, it would have explained that whole matter of the money collected in the District. There is no record account kept between the District and the Government. The tax collector collects a certain amount of money, takes it to the Treasury, and deposits it there, and he is given a slip showing that he has put in that amount of money; but otherwise it is carried into—well, I am not sure, but I think into the miscellaneous fund. There is no regular account of District funds kept even in the Treasury Department. They are simply carried into the miscellaneous fund and paid out upon the order of the Treasurer and not upon order of the District. It is a very singular condition of things.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question. Suppose under the present system—the half-and-half system—the District of Columbia should raise by taxation more than one-half or its share of the expenses of the District, could Congress, without any reference to the District of Columbia, appropriate that money—

Mr. WORKS. Undoubtedly.

Mr. STERLING. To whatsoever uses it pleased?

Mr. WORKS. Oh, no; not to any uses.

Mr. STERLING. Outside of the expenses of the District?

Mr. WORKS. I think there may be some trust character imposed by which the Government would be under obligation to apply it to the expense of carrying on the District; but that the Government could keep it all, I have no doubt whatever.

Mr. STERLING. If the Government did not apply it to the expenses of the District of Columbia, the District would have a right of action, would it not?

Mr. WORKS. I do not know whether it would or not. I think it is quite doubtful under the law. It is a very peculiar law, a very peculiar condition of things.

Mr. STERLING. If the District can sue and be sued, it would seem that that might follow.

Mr. WORKS. It might sue and not maintain the action.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. A sovereign State can not sue the General Government.

Mr. STERLING. That is true.

Mr. WORKS. I have not heard from the chairman of the committee whether he insists upon his point of order or not.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I will make an explanation after the Senator concludes.

Mr. WORKS. Very well. Then, if the point of order should be made, if the Vice President would care to listen to me, I should be glad to say just a few words about it.

During the delivery of Mr. WORKS's speech,

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator from California yield to me for a moment?

Mr. WORKS. Yes.

BLACK RIVER BRIDGE, ARKANSAS.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House bill 16068, being No. 587 on the calendar. It is a bridge bill that proposes to authorize a county in Arkansas to proceed to the construction of a bridge across one of the small navigable streams of that State. The bill will not provoke the slightest opposition.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Arkansas?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 16068) to authorize the construction, maintenance, and operation of a bridge across the Black River at or near Bennetts Ferry, Ark. It authorizes the county of Clay, Ark., to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Black River at or near Bennetts Ferry at a place where the public highway leading from Corning to Piggott crosses the river, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GALLINGER and Mr. SMITH of Maryland addressed the chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from California has the floor.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I thought the Senator had concluded.

[Mr. WORKS resumed and concluded his speech.]

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 15774) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Mr. President, it is not my intention in any way to criticize the amendment that has been offered by the Senator from California as to its merits or demerits; nor do I question for a moment the good intentions of the Senator from California or his desire to bring about legislation that is for the best interests of the citizens of the District of Columbia and for the Government of the United States. I am satisfied that is his intention.

But, Mr. President, an appropriation bill is no place in which to bring about legislation of this character. How can we determine its wisdom at this time? I do not know. This may be an excellent amendment of the Senator from California, but I am not in a position to say whether it is or whether it is not. It is a matter that should be considered more thoroughly than we can consider it in this body, at such short notice, as to whether an amendment of this kind is the proper thing to bring about legislation pertaining to the District of Columbia and the Government of the United States.

So far as my judgment is concerned, and the judgment of the committee, it was that legislation of this character should not be put upon an appropriation bill. We feel that if there is a better way of administering the affairs of the District of Columbia and the Government of the United States than that which now exists, it should be done by a special act, after full consideration and full digestion of the various conditions that exist in the District of Columbia pertaining to both the people of the District of Columbia and the Government of the United States.

I want to say, Mr. President, so far as this bill is concerned, the half-and-half bill, that I can see no injury that is done to anybody. If you will look over the assessments of private property in the District of Columbia and compare them with the valuation of property owned by the Government in 1914, you will find that the Government owned more property than the people of the District of Columbia. I have here the report made by the commissioners, in which it is stated that the Government owned $396,550,898 worth of property, whereas the people of the District of Columbia owned, according to the assessment, about $392,000,000 worth. So far as that is concerned, when you come to put taxes upon property, it is about half-and-half; and, as I understand, from the time this organic law was passed up to the present time the amounts raised by the people of the District of Columbia and those paid by the Government of the United States do not vary 1 per cent. So, therefore, there is no harm being done to anybody. There is no injustice being done to anybody.

Besides that, Mr. President, this is no place to enact a law of such great importance as this. There are many laws on the statute books that have grown out of this law. I have been told by some parties, whose information I value, that there are as many as 100 laws that are in harmony with the half-and-half law. This half-and-half law may not be what it should be, but this is no place to enact a law of such great importance by offering an amendment of this character, good though it may be, for us to determine what we shall do.

When you come to look at the assessment, I understand that there is no difficulty about concluding that it is a proper assessment. They say that the property of this District is assessed about in the same manner that the property in other cities has been assessed. In fact, I believe the Senator from California has said himself that it is probably overassessed. Therefore I can see no reason for this hurry to get a provision of this kind on an appropriation bill; besides, if you will notice the per capita assessment, the per capita assessment is probably higher than that of the average city of the United States.

I did not in the beginning raise a point of order in regard to the amendment that was offered by the Senator from California, because I felt that we wanted to hear what he had to say. I felt that it probably would be a good thing to have it upon the Record, so that in discussing these matters and considering these matters further we would have his views and the information that he has given us to-day to consider. But I do say, with all due respect to him, that I will have to raise a point of order upon this amendment that has been offered by him, because I think it is not only new legislation but legislation of the greatest importance, and should not be considered in an appropriation bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator mean general legislation or new legislation?

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. General legislation and new legislation, both. It is general legislation and new legislation. It is most general, because it not only pertains to the District of Columbia, but it pertains to the whole United States.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair rules upon this question with a very great deal of diffidence, because it has been a good many years since the present occupant of the chair endeavored to try a lawsuit, and because, further, the Chair may not be in possession of all the facts in the case; but there undoubtedly will be an appeal from the Chair to the Senate, and time will be conserved by the Chair making a ruling on this question.

Everybody knows that the Constitution of the United States gives to the Congress of the United States the power to exercise exclusive legislation in all cases whatsoever over the District. It is not my purpose to discuss the question as to whether the Congress of the United States can divest itself of legislative authority over the District or not, as to whether the Congress of the United States can or can not create a municipal corporation out of the District of Columbia. It is sufficient, for the purposes of ruling upon this point of order, to inquire, What has the Congress of the United States done?

There are certain definitions that can not be escaped from, perhaps as well set out in Dillon on Municipal Corporations as anywhere else in the law, wherein he says:

A municipal corporation, in its strict and proper sense, is the body politic and corporate constituted by the incorporation of the inhabitants of a city or town for the purposes of local government thereof. Municipal corporations as they exist in this country are bodies politic and corporate of the general character above described, established by law partly as an agency of the State to assist in the civil government of the country, but chiefly to regulate and administer the local or internal affairs of the city, town, or district which is incorporated.

We may therefore define a municipal corporation in its historical and strict sense to be the incorporation, by the authority of the government, of the inhabitants of a particular place or district, and authorizing them in their corporate capacity to exercise subordinate specified powers of legislation and regulation with respect to their local and internal concerns. They are simply the administrative form of the fundamental American idea of government, namely, that the people are the source of all political power, and have the right to exercise it. This, with us, is no mere rhetorical declamation, but a foundation of principle upon which our political institutions rest. As local matters can better be regulated by the people of the locality than by the central power, we provide that each road district, each school district, each city, and each county shall, as to its local concerns, be self-governing.

A thing may be what it is called, and it may not be. A deed may be a deed, and it may be a mortgage. The Supreme Court of the District of Columbia may have decided that the act of 1878 is the organic act of the District of Columbia. That is far afield from the question as to whether this is a municipal corporation or whether it is not. It provides, among other things, that—

The District of Columbia shall remain and continue a municipal corporation, as provided in section 2 of the Revised Statutes relating to said District, and the commissioners herein provided for shall be deemed and taken as officers of such corporation.

When you refer to section 2—if it is the act that has been placed in my hand by calling upon the law library—there is not a word in it that constitutes the District of Columbia a municipal corporation or confers upon it any right or power or authority. It levies no taxes, which must be one of the great principles of government. It collects and spends no taxes itself. It pays them all into the Treasury of the Government of the United States. While the law provides that the money goes there to the credit of the District of Columbia, still, so far as I have been able to see, in reading the organic act of 1874 and the organic act of 1878, there is not an earthly power conferred upon anybody in the District of Columbia save and except as it is created and constituted as an agency of the Congress of the United States.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Chair? The VICE PRESIDENT. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am greatly interested in the discussion of this subject by the Chair. I presume that the Chair is aware of the fact that claims for damages against the District of Columbia are valid, and that if the claim is sustained the District of Columbia pays that damage, whatever it may be. It is true that the money is in the General Treasury to the credit of the District of Columbia, but, nevertheless, in the courts the District of Columbia is held to be an entity to that extent.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That does not, to the mind of the present occupant of the chair, make this a municipal corporation.

Mr. GALLINGER. I was going a little further than that. The Chair, of course, is aware of the fact that before the act of 1878 the District of Columbia had a governor at one time and a legislative assembly. It had a mayor and a board of aldermen. So that, under the Constitution of the United States, it was recognized as being entitled to those officials—in the one case officials corresponding to those of a State, and in the other case officials corresponding to the cities of the country. So that there was that recognition of the District on the part of the Government as a municipal corporation, and to a certain extent as a State corporation.

In view of certain happenings in the District of Columbia it was thought desirable to change that form of government, and very wise men took it up. I will not name them, but they were very wise men, and they abolished both the right of the District of Columbia to have a governor and a legislative assembly and the right of the District of Columbia to have a mayor and a board of aldermen; and this existing law was placed on the statute book as a law to supersede what had theretofore existed. So it does seem to me that the Government, under the Constitution of the United States, has recognized in the past the principle that this is a municipal corporation. I do not see that by the statute of 1878 that was done away with. It may be so, but it does not strike me so, just at first blush.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There will be an appeal from the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. GALLINGER. Perhaps not.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, if the Chair will hear me a moment, I think at this point the information I am about to give the Chair and the Senate will be very interesting.

One witness who appeared before the joint high commission, you might call it, of the two bodies—the Committee upon Fiscal Relations—was Mr. Worthington, a very honored, and justly so, member of the bar of the District of Columbia. Mr. Worthington has been for practically all his life a member of the bar of the District of Columbia. He is now retired; but we found him, as practically everybody who ever came in contact with him found him, a very eminent man and a great lawyer. Now, in line with what the Chair was saying, and also in response to what the Senator from New Hampshire said, I want to read this colloquy between Mr. Worthington and the chairman of the committee:

The CHAIRMAN. What is the District of Columbia now, in all essential respects, but a bureau of the Government?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. It is not anything. It is nothing but an agency of the Government.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, you may call it what you please. In all essential respects it is a bureau of the Government.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I think so. It is simply the machinery by which the Government undertakes to perform its duty, put upon it by the Constitution, of running this District. You might put all those duties upon the Secretary of the Interior or the Secretary of Agriculture, or you might call them regents, as they were called in this bill, or call them something else; but it would simply be a matter of form and not of substance.

That is in line with what the Chair has said.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is a little more strongly confirmed in the tentative opinion which he was expressing by the information conveyed by the Senator from New Hampshire, which the Chair possessed simply as a vague historic memory—that is, that at one time this Government did create a municipal corporation out of the District, and it ran into debt. It was swamped with debt, and the Government took it back. The Chair, while very liable to be wrong in this hasty opinion, from the reading of these acts does not believe that the District of Columbia is a municipal corporation. He thinks it is nothing on earth but an agency of this Congress. This Congress is making appropriations to run the affairs of the District for the ensuing year. The House of Representatives beyond all doubt, if there is to be any change in the existing conditions with reference to the collection of taxes in the District, entered into the field. The Senate amendment seeks to restore it as it formerly was. The Senator from California has not interfered with any vested right by his amendment, save as to the half-and-half plan, or changed any law in force therein, the duty of any official, or deprived anybody of any right or privilege that he is exercising. In view of the House provision the Chair does not believe that it is subject to an objection as being general legislation. He believes it is special, applies to this particular agency of government, is germane to this bill, and overrules the point of order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the Chair suggested that an appeal probably would be taken, but I trust that no appeal will be taken. I think we can well go to a vote on the direct proposition. I will urge the chairman of the committee not to take an appeal.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I shall take no appeal. I accept the ruling of the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair wants it to be understood that if the Chair had thought there was not going to be an appeal there would not have been any ruling; but the Chair thought it would clear up the matter.

Mr. GALLINGER. We all respect the views of the Chair—I certainly do—and while they differ from my view on this particular question, I can see very clearly that there is a just ground for a difference of opinion. Therefore, I hope we will take a direct vote on the amendment offered by the Senator from California.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question, then, is on the amendment of the Senator from California.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will say that I trust the amendment will not be agreed to. I think there is a better way to solve this problem for the ensuing fiscal year, and that the proposition submitted by the Senator from California, as well as other propositions, may well engage the very careful attention of the two Committees on the District of Columbia, so that after a time we may have more information, and information that will enable us to legislate more wisely than we can do at the present moment. I feel very clear in my mind about that matter, and I trust that the action of the committee will be sustained.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, I want to inquire the legislative status.

Mr. GALLINGER. The point of order is overruled.

Mr. CHILTON. The motion of the Senator from California, as I understand it, is a motion to strike out and insert. If this motion shall be defeated, then the question will recur upon the amendment of the Senate committee?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BRYAN in the chair). The vote would then recur upon the amendment of the committee.

Mr. WORKS. The effect of the amendment is to strike out that portion of the bill inserted by the Senate committee, leaving that portion which was contained in the House bill stricken out, and making this in effect a substitute for both of them.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, if the amendment of the Senator from California should prevail, I assume it would still be possible for the conference committee to report in favor of the amendment suggested by the Senate committee, would it not?

Mr. SMOOT. No; it would not.

Mr. GALLINGER. No.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Is not the whole question in conference?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It would put the whole question in conference.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I suppose there may be a difference of opinion among Senators about that. I should think, as between the two plans, that a third plan could be reported by the conferees.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, I ask that the amendment may be stated. I was not in the Chamber when it was stated, and I am anxious to know what its terms are. If it is printed, I will get a copy of it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is printed.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I will get a copy of it, then.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I did intend to take some time to-day in discussing this amendment; but the substitute that has been offered by the Senator from California has been discussed in detail, and in that discussion there has been considerable said in relation to the half-and-half plan. This same proposition comes before the Senate every year, and every time the Senate votes upon it there is at least a 2 to 1 vote in the Senate against abolishing the half-and-half principle.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. When the matter was voted on last year, the Senator from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH] proposed that the Government should pay 60 per cent and the District of Columbia

40 per cent, and the yeas were 10 and the nays 57. The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES] proposed that the Government should pay one-third and the District of Columbia two-thirds, and the yeas were 19 and the nays 49. On the direct vote as to the continuance of the half-and-half principle, the yeas were 46 and the nays 20. That is the record.

Mr. SMOOT. That record is correct, Mr. President, as I have it before me at the present time. I shall not take any time now, as I say, in discussing this question, but I do express the hope that the amendment offered by the Senator from California will not be adopted nor will the House provision be adopted. I will say that whenever we undertake in the Appropriations Committee to consider the House provision abolishing the half-and-half plan, we find that it interferes with at least a hundred laws that have been passed, and it is simply useless to undertake to abolish the plan without legislation covering the acts that have been passed that affect the District of Columbia and the finances of the District.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. WORKS. If the Senator looks into the situation, he will find that this amendment really covers the whole situation. It does not disturb any of the acts that are in existence now at all. It is just simply a question of paying the money out of the Treasury; that is all.

Mr. SMOOT. But if the plan suggested by the Senator from California were adopted with no other legislation it would be inconsistent with the legislation that has already been passed. As I said, I think there are over 100 bills—116 I think is the exact number—that would be affected by this legislation.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President—

Mr. SMOOT. The only proper way to do is to take the whole subject matter up and frame a bill covering the whole ground, and let it go to the Committee on the District of Columbia and be thrashed out there and reported to the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah is entirely mistaken. There is not the slightest necessity for changing any of these statutes. They are not disturbed by this amendment, if it should be enacted. There is no occasion for an extensive bill modifying or changing the statutes to which the Senator refers. It would be a useless expenditure of time and labor.

Mr. SMOOT. The Appropriations Committee of the Senate has had this matter under consideration a good many times, and every time it was discovered that to merely abandon the half-and-half plan would create conflicts between existing laws affecting the District. I do not believe there is a member of the committee—and the committee has given hours and hours and days of time to this question—who will not admit this to be a fact, if the act simply abolishing the half-and-half proposition is adopted without further legislation. It seems to me it would be very inappropriate, and I hope the amendment will not be agreed to.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I have been very much interested in this matter of a half-and-half system in the District in the legislation for the District of Columbia ever since it has been my fortune to be down here. I have been, in fact, all my life very largely interested in realty, and the question of assessment and taxes is a matter that affects us all. I have inquired very diligently and I have had no protest from the people of the District of Columbia. I have heard of no considerable discussion from anybody in favor of the abolishment of the half-and-half system. I remember a year or two ago when the matter was up I gave it considerable thought, and I asserted then, and I assert now, that any other system than the half-and-half system would, to my mind, be cruelty in an exceeding degree.

This is unlike any other city that I know of. The average street in the average city will run about 60 feet wide or 66 feet wide. With a 36-foot roadway there will be a 12-foot sidewalk on a 60-foot street or a 42-foot roadway with a 12-foot sidewalk on a 66-foot avenue.

With our system here, with the tremendous width of streets and the width of the sidewalks, you maintain a sidewalk 30 or more feet, together with the little parking system that you are obliged to maintain before coming to the edge of the street line. All those things are a burden upon the property that, to my mind, would be absolutely unjust.

It seems to me that this is a splendid city in its beautiful central layout and general proportions, and I believe it is a splendidly governed city. I have heard my friend from California cite instances to show how iniquitous it was, and the slums, and all that sort of thing. I have looked the city over and it compares most favorably with any other city in the land I have been in. I say Washington is par excellence. It is the most beautiful city I know of, and I believe generally the best governed city I know of. Hence I shall oppose anything which looks like an abolition of the half-and-half plan.

But as I read this bill I find on page 28 something that disturbs me, and I feel like wrangling over it. Since attention has been first drawn to it I have gone into it and I have been more and more disturbed. I conversed with the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia and asked him about it. Look on page 28 of the bill. I am told that the amendments have all been agreed to. It was my stupidity or lack of attention mayhap, but I did not see it before. I read on page 28 the following item which was stricken out:

Repave with asphalt the roadway of Fourteenth Street NW., from Pennsylvania Avenue to F Street, 70 feet wide, $7,500.

Yet I find on page 28 the following items which are retained in the bill:

Repave with asphalt the roadway of Twelfth Street NW., from E to F Streets, 45 feet wide, and this width of roadway or less is authorized for use hereafter on other portions of this street in connection with their resurfacing, $6,600.

Repave with asphalt the roadway of Third Street NW., from Pennsylvania Avenue to B Street south, $13,500.

Repave with asphalt the granite-block roadway of Seventh Street NW., from B Street to Florida Avenue, $15,000.

For repaving the roadway of B Street NW., from Ninth Street to Twelfth Street, on plans to be approved by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, $28,000.

Repave with asphalt the roadway of First Street SW., from Maryland Avenue to Canal Street, $6,700.

For repaving the roadway of B Street NW., from Seventh Street to Ninth Street, on plans to be approved by the commissioners.

I find that the item I first read the Senate has stricken out absolutely. So that section from Pennsylvania Avenue on Fourteenth Street to F Street, 75 feet wide, shall not be repaved, and the property holders will be saved the assessments of that particular block. I can see no particular reason why this should be done. If all these assessments are made on these other streets, and if the property holders bear their assessments, why should not those men bear their assessments?

I had a little consultation with the chairman of the committee. I went over to the map to find out just where Fourteenth Street between Pennsylvania Avenue and F Street lies. I find that Fourteenth Street between Pennsylvania Avenue and F Street is abutted on both sides by the property of one of the millionaires of the District of Columbia. The Willards own the Willard Hotel on one side and they own the Ebbitt House property on the other. So they are not molested by assessments or taxation. I understand that their vaults and their private property reach out into the street line. They are using that for private purposes, and they have never paid an iota of tax to the District. Yet these men are rich beyond a dream, fattening on rich rentals and the yearly increments in value that are paid. To my mind it is unjust, and I can see no good reason for it except they want to keep on the pleasant side of the Willard family. That is my feeling in the matter. I believe that my criticism of it is justified. I realize that it is too late now to correct it, but I would not be myself if I did not give expression to it.

Mr. CHILTON obtained the floor.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Will the Senator from West Virginia yield to me for a moment?

Mr. CHILTON. I understand the Senator from New York has a matter of great importance to bring before the Senate, and I am perfectly willing to yield to him for that purpose.

PANAMA CANAL.

Mr. O'GORMAN. It may not be convenient for me to be present at the morning hour to-morrow morning, and I ask leave to make a report from the Committee on Inter-oceanic Canals, and also to request unanimous consent for immediate consideration. It is an urgent matter, recommended by the War Department.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the bill.

The SECRETARY. The Committee on Inter-oceanic Canals reports favorably with an amendment the bill (H. R. 15955) extending certain privileges of canal employees to other officials on the Canal Zone and authorizing the President to make rules and regulations affecting health, sanitation, quarantine, taxation, public roads, self-propelled vehicles, and police powers on the Canal Zone, and for other purposes, including provision as to certain fees, money orders, and interest deposits.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to say to the Senator that it has been understood that I would object to granting unanimous consent for the consideration of bills reported from committees while the Senate was recessing from day to day with an understanding that there would be two adjournments during the week allowing bills on the calendar to be considered. Bills reported should go to the calendar and be considered in their regular order.

Mr. O'GORMAN. This was done to-day. I do not know whether the Senator was present or not.

Mr. SMOOT. I was not present.

Mr. O'GORMAN. I hope the Senator will make an exception in this case, because it is the urgent recommendation of the War Department and the suggestion of Gen. Goethals. If this bill does not go through now—

Mr. SMOOT. It will go through to-morrow.

Mr. O'GORMAN. I do not expect to be here to-morrow. I hope the Senator will make no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SMOOT. I dislike to refuse one Senator and then allow another Senator to report a bill and have it acted upon when it has been virtually agreed that bills reported from committees should go to the calendar, and that on two days each week we would take up the calendar for consideration.

Mr. O'GORMAN. A bill was taken from the calendar to-day and passed without any objection. The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE] made the request and there was no objection made to the immediate consideration of the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Did the Senator from Arkansas report it from the committee to-day and ask for its immediate consideration?

Mr. O'GORMAN. He asked for its immediate consideration.

Mr. SMOOT. If so, it was when I was at lunch. I will ask the Senator if he reported the bill to-day.

Mr. O'GORMAN. He asked for the immediate consideration of the bill which had come over from the House.

Mr. SMOOT. That could not be done without reference to a committee.

Mr. O'GORMAN. It was done.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Does the Senator from Utah refer to the request I made this morning?

Mr. SMOOT. I am asking if the Senator had a bill passed this morning.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. It was a mere license to construct a bridge, and such measures always go through by the mere asking and by unanimous consent on their presentation. The bill had been reported some two weeks ago.

Mr. SMOOT. It was not presented to-day by the Senator.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. No; the bill has been here for two weeks, and I called it up.

Mr. O'GORMAN. It is a fact that the Senator from Arkansas asked unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill, and it was granted?

Mr. SMOOT. It was taken from the calendar, and he asked unanimous consent for that purpose. I was not here, and I knew nothing about it. All I want is to act consistently in this matter, and if we are going to act consistently all bills ought to go to the calendar when reported.

I hope the Senator from New York will not put me in a position now to be compelled to object to the consideration of this bill. I am quite sure there will be no objection to-morrow.

Mr. O'GORMAN. I hope, under the circumstances, the Senator will not object. He wants to do right and he will not mean to press a useless objection.

Mr. SMOOT. I must object to the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made to the present consideration of the bill, and it will be placed on the calendar.

Mr. O'GORMAN. The Senator does not object to the presentation of a report of the committee?

Mr. SMOOT. Not at all.

ACTIONS FOR DEATH ON NAVIGABLE WATERS.

Mr. O'GORMAN. From the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. 4288) relating to the maintenance of actions for death on the high seas and other navigable waters, I report it with amendments and submit a report (No. 741) thereon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

PANAMA CANAL.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President—

Mr. O'GORMAN. By permission of my friend from West Virginia, to bring myself within the precedent recognized to-day in the case of the Senator from Arkansas, I ask unanimous consent to take the bill first reported from the calendar for immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I shall say to the Senate now that I want the Senator from Ohio and one or two other Senators who have asked this privilege in the past and been denied to now ask that their bills be taken up and passed.

Mr. O'GORMAN. The Senator will have an opportunity later in the day to make that suggestion to the Senator from Ohio, but he does not want all the suggestions to come at the same time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New York to the immediate consideration of the bill?

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to say to the Senator that there is no man in the Senate who makes so many requests as the Senator from New York for the immediate consideration of bills and nominations. The Senator knows that I have no objection to this legislation, but I think the Senator—

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, I yielded only for a matter that would take a few moments. We have the appropriation bill under consideration.

Mr. O'GORMAN. I shall not delay the Senator further.

Mr. SMOOT. If I consent to the present consideration of the bill, it will be with the understanding that I shall inform the Senator from Ohio and other Senators that they can, as far as I am concerned, call up their bills for consideration.

Mr. O'GORMAN. That is perfectly satisfactory.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Before that is done—

Mr. CHILTON. There is no right in my time to make an agreement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of House bill 15955. Is there objection?

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President—

Mr. O'GORMAN. It is an urgent proposal coming from the War Department.

Mr. GALLINGER. We had yesterday an opportunity to go to the calendar, and I imagine we will in the near future again return to it and clean it up. I hope no objection will be made to the request of the Senator from New York.

Mr. TOWNSEND. What has become of the District of Columbia appropriation bill?

Mr. O'GORMAN. By unanimous consent this request is being made.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Does the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia agree to lay aside the appropriation bill?

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. No, sir.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, I think I have the floor.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. The appropriation bill is before the Senate. The Senator from West Virginia has the floor and he allowed the Senator from New York to bring in a bill.

Mr. TOWNSEND. If the Senator will yield, I want to say something.

Mr. CHILTON. I yield.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. The Senator from West Virginia yielded in his time. I did not yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia yielded to the Senator from New York.

Mr. CHILTON. I yielded, but there was an objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New York for the consideration of the bill?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Unless the Senator from West Virginia wants to yield long enough for an understanding, I shall object, although I do not want to object if we can have some understanding as to what we are going to do. I have asked unanimous consent here on several occasions for a bill that has been on the calendar for a long time. I have been induced to withdraw my objection to all unanimous-consent demands or requests with the understanding that the bill which I am interested in would be considered. Is it to be the policy of Senators to allow certain bills to go through and not to give some of the rest of us an opportunity to have our measures considered, or a motion even? I am not asking unanimous consent for mine. I am anxious to call it up and get a vote on the motion. I feel inclined to object.

The Senator from New York took the floor while I happened to be temporarily absent. If, as he states, he has a measure in charge which requires immediate consideration, I shall not feel like objecting to that, but I shall want to have it understood that we shall take up other measures that come along.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. If consent is granted it will be done absolutely and without any condition. I shall not consent to any condition in connection with this matter. Let it be understood that by granting unanimous consent a Senator shall not acquire any right which he does not possess under our rules.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New York?

Mr. WORKS. I inquire if it is not a direct violation of the rule of the Senate, irrespective of any objection made by a Senator, to undertake the passage of a bill while a Senator has the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia yielded to the Senator from New York.

Mr. WORKS. I understand; but under the rule he has no right to yield for any such purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator having done so, yielded the floor, in the opinion of the Chair. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New York for the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendment of the committee was to strike out section 10 and to insert a new section as section 10, changing section 10 to section 11, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That, until otherwise provided by Congress, the President is authorized to make rules and regulations in matters of sanitation, health, and quarantine for the Canal Zone or to modify or change existing rules and regulations and those hereafter made from time to time. Violations of any quarantine regulations provided for herein shall be punished by fine not to exceed $500 or by imprisonment in jail not to exceed 90 days, or by both such fine and imprisonment, in the court's discretion; and a violation of any sanitary regulations hereunder shall be punished by a fine not to exceed $25 or by imprisonment in jail not to exceed 30 days, or by both such fine and imprisonment, in the court's discretion. Each day such violation may continue shall constitute a separate offense.

Sec. 2. That, until otherwise provided by Congress, the President is hereby authorized to make and from time to time change rules and regulations for levying, assessing, and collecting ad valorem, excise, license, and franchise taxes in the Canal Zone, or to modify or change existing rules or regulations for that purpose. Ad valorem taxes imposed shall not exceed 1 per cent of the value of the property, nor shall franchise or excise taxes exceed 2 per cent of gross earnings.

Sec. 3. That, until otherwise provided by Congress, it shall be lawful for the President to make, publish, and enforce all rules and regulations for the use of the public roads and highways in the Canal Zone, and also for regulating, licensing, and taxing the use and operation of all self-propelled vehicles using the public highways, including speed limit, signals, tags, license fees, and all detailed regulations which may be from time to time deemed necessary in the exercise of the authority hereby conferred. The taxes on automobiles may be graded according to the value or the power of the machine, and such rules and regulations as now exist may be changed by such order from time to time, and any that may be hereafter made may be changed from time to time. The President may make mutual agreements with the Republic of Panama touching the reciprocal use of the highways of the Canal Zone and the Republic of Panama by self-propelled vehicles touching taxes and license fees, and any other matter of regulation to establish comity for the convenience of the residents of the two jurisdictions.

Sec. 4. That it shall be unlawful to commit any breach of the peace or engage in or permit any disorderly, indecent, or immoral conduct in the Canal Zone. The President is authorized to enforce this provision by making rules and regulations to assert and exercise the police power in the Canal Zone, or for any portion or division thereof, and he may amend or change any such regulation now existing or hereafter made.

Sec. 5. That any person who commits any act or who carries on any business, trade, or occupation in the Canal Zone without complying with the rules and regulations established by the President for the levying, assessing, and collecting of taxes, or who violates any rules or regulations for the use of the public roads and highways, or who violates any rules and regulations touching the licensing, taxes, operation, and use of self-propelled vehicles, or who violates any of the police regulations authorized hereunder, shall be punished by a fine not to exceed $25 or by imprisonment in jail not to exceed 30 days, or by both such fine and imprisonment, in the court's discretion.

Sec. 6. That deposit money orders issued in the Canal Zone in lieu of postal-savings certificates, in accordance with the rules and regulations heretofore established by the President, or that may hereafter be established by him, shall bear interest at a rate not exceeding 2 per cent per annum.

Sec. 7. That the interest received from the Canal Zone money-order funds deposited in banks under Canal Zone regulations shall be available to pay the interest on deposit money orders authorized by the preceding section. Such interest shall also be available to pay any losses which are chargeable to the Canal Zone postal service.

Sec. 8. That whenever a customs officer of the Canal Zone shall certify an invoice, landing certificate, or other similar document, or shall register a marine note of protest, or shall perform any notarial services, he shall be authorized to collect a fee equivalent to the fee prescribed by the United States consular regulations for the same act or service when performed by consular officials.

Sec. 9. The laws relating to seamen of vessels of the United States on foreign voyages shall apply to seamen of all vessels of the United States at the Panama Canal Zone, whether such vessels be registered or enrolled and licensed, and the powers in respect of such seamen of such vessels bestowed by law upon consular officers of the United States in foreign ports and upon shipping commissioners in ports of the United States are hereby bestowed upon the shipping commissioner and deputy shipping commissioners on the Panama Canal Zone.

Sec. 10. The President is hereby authorized to make rules and regulations, and to alter or amend the same from time to time, touching the right of any person to enter or remain upon or pass over any part of the Canal Zone; for the detention of any person entering the Canal Zone in violation of such rules and regulations, and the return of such person to the country whence he or she came, on the vessel bringing such person to the Canal Zone, or any other vessel belonging to the same owner or interest, and at the expense of such owner or interest; and in addition to the punishment prescribed by this section for violation of any such rules and regulations, the authorities of the Canal Zone may withhold the clearance of such vessel from any port in the Canal Zone until any fine imposed and the cost of maintenance of such person are paid. Any person violating any of such rules or regulations shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction in the district court of the Canal Zone shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $500 or by imprisonment not exceeding a year, or both, in the discretion of the court. It shall be unlawful for any person, by any means or in any way, to injure or obstruct, or attempt to injure or obstruct, any part of the Panama Canal or the locks thereof or the approaches thereto. Any person violating this provision shall be guilty of a felony, and on conviction in the district court of the Canal Zone shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $10,000 or by imprisonment not exceeding 20 years, or both, in the discretion of the court. If the act shall cause the death of any person within a year and a day thereafter, the person so convicted shall be guilty of murder and shall be punished accordingly.

SEC. 11. That all laws, orders, or ordinances in conflict with this act are hereby repealed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President I wish to ask my friend the Senator from New York, not having had an opportunity to examine this bill and having simply listened to the hurried reading of it, if the passage of the bill will increase the revenues of the canal.

Mr. O'GORMAN. I can not answer that definitely. I desire to say that this legislation was recommended in the first instance by Gen. Goethals and then by the War Department, and it has passed the House except the amendment which is now proposed, which amendment is urged by the War Department.

Mr. GALLINGER. I propounded the question for the reason that I read in the newspapers of yesterday, or possibly of this morning, that the revenues derived from the operation of the Canal last year were a million and, I think, three hundred thousand dollars less than the expenses. That brings us to this situation. We have built a canal costing $400,000,000, and in our false liberality opened it to all the nations of the world. We are keeping it in repair at a heavy expense, and now it is running at a loss of over a million dollars a year. It is the most extraordinary business proposition that ever faced intelligent people.

Mr. O'GORMAN. I think I might add there was not only a loss of a million dollars in the year in the operating expenses, but without any return on the investment which was originally made.

Mr. GALLINGER. Absolutely.

Mr. O'GORMAN. The Senator and I are in accord in that view.

Mr. GALLINGER. While I do not object to this bill at all, I am going to venture the hope, but it may be a false hope, that either during the present administration or during the next administration, whatever it may be, we will reconsider the whole subject of the Panama Canal and see if we can not make foreign Governments contribute something toward the expenses that are falling upon the taxpayers of the United States.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to ask the Senator from New York if this is a unanimous report from the committee?

Mr. O'GORMAN. It is unanimous. The report was agreed to by every member of the committee with whom I have been able to come in contact—more than a majority.

Mr. SMOOT. The committee was polled?

Mr. O'GORMAN. Yes. There has been no opposition. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] considered the bill, the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE], and I think the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH].

Mr. SMOOT. Of course no one from the mere reading of the bill as it was read here can tell much about it.

Mr. O'GORMAN. I give the assurance to the Senator that it is a meritorious bill.

Mr. SMOOT. I thought it was an emergency bill when I gave my consent.

Mr. O'GORMAN. The last clause makes it an emergency.

Mr. SMOOT. It is a very poor emergency.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. O'GORMAN. I am very much obliged to the Senator from West Virginia.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 15774) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, at the last session of Congress the fight between the half and half and between those who would abolish it, so to speak, came before Congress on the District of Columbia appropriation bill. Let us not forget what that fight was about and the history of the commission which took the matter later under consideration and about which the Senator from California has spoken. Then the effort was made directly upon the floor of the Senate to reduce the proportionate part which the Government should pay for running the District of Columbia, first to 33½ per cent, again to 40 per cent, and again an effort was made to put upon the assessment roll of the District of Columbia what was alleged to have been millions of dollars' worth of untaxed property. In other words, it was alleged by reports of committees and it was stated upon the floor of the Senate that quite an amount of intangible property in the District of Columbia was not taxed as such property is taxed in the various States, and it was further alleged that the city of Washington was becoming the home of the tax dodger, the house of refuge, where men with large wealth could come with a certainty that their intangible property would not be taxed. Such was the basis or general lines of the fight. That is what brought up originally this contest over the plan which is called "half and half."

Now, what did the Senate do with it? It was argued then as now that it was not the time to consider such questions when the Senate was considering an appropriation bill. Then as now Congress was asked to put it off, not to decide it, not to march up to the merits of that question, whatever it might be, and decide it. It was again put off; but that time Congress was a little harder to put off than usual. The Senate wanted to take up those questions upon their merits. The representative of the people did not want to go back to his people and say that he voted for laws here that let people escape taxation in the District of Columbia when that was not the case back in the States. It was, however, put off again, and a fiscal relations committee composed of three Members from each of the two Houses of Congress was created, to which all of this subject was referred. That joint commission was to report distinctly what proportion of the expenses of the District of Columbia should be borne by the Government, including interest upon the sinking fund. Following is the exact language of the law creating the commission:

That a joint select committee shall be appointed consisting of three Senators to be named by the Presiding Officer of the Senate and three Members of the House to be named by the Speaker of the House of Representatives, whose duty it shall be to prepare and submit to Congress a statement of the proper proportion of the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia or any branch thereof, including interest on the funded debt, which shall be borne by said District and the United States, respectively, together with the reasons upon which their conclusions may be based.

Let us see what that commission did. That commission started in, and it had probably as complete hearings as ever were given by any committee of the Senate. It did not dodge the duties imposed upon it. I do say that for it, if I did happen to be a member. It was the greatest talkfest, barring some proceedings in the Senate of the United States, that probably ever came off in the city of Washington. All were invited and none refused.

The organized bodies came before us by attorney and in person. The unorganized citizens came before that commission in person and by attorney. In other words, a full and complete hearing was given to all the citizens of this city, from every part of it, and to the different business and civic bodies. All of that evidence was reported back to the Senate and to the House of Representatives, and it shows upon what this report was based.

What did that committee report? They reported that no reason could be assigned by anyone why there should be an arbitrary fixing of a proportion of the expenses of the District government so that a definite part should be always borne by the city and the other part by the National Government. Is that conclusion justified by the facts? Is it a fair solution of the difficulty? That is the report which was made by the joint committee of the two Houses of Congress. Who is here to say that that report is not based upon evidence, upon reason, and upon the best of considerations? No reason is alleged against it. There is nothing here but the old plea—"wait; this is not the place and this is not the time for such legislation." There is no one who has said that we have concealed any evidence upon which we made that recommendation to Congress. Nobody has said that it is not reasonable, that it is not based upon the very best evidence and upon the very best considerations that were presented to us.

Who came before us? Some of the greatest lawyers of this city, the most prominent bankers and business men, representatives selected by the chamber of commerce, representatives of the joint citizens' committee, representatives of the committee of the Single Tax League, and representatives of the various guilds and societies in different parts of the city. I think that probably over a hundred witnesses were examined, and I will say that a speech of three hours was considered short when we were in session. All of that evidence is here; and, after it is all summed up, I want to say to you that there is not any law which will be violated, there is not any place where the Government will be embarrassed, there is not any place where anything will be embarrassed by the adoption of the committee's plan or the proposed amendment offered by the Senator from California [Mr. Works]. No such embarrassment can be shown.

We went into every detail of that matter. No legislation concerning streets, no legislation concerning the sinking fund, nothing regarding the police, nothing regarding public utilities—absolutely nothing will be compromised and nothing will be embarrassed by the adoption of the Works amendment. The plea that embarrassment will result is another shadow of the many shadows which have been interposed in the fictitious plan under which this Government has been discharging the duty which it owes to the people of the District, to the people of the country, and to this Capital City.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. CHILTON. Yes, sir.

Mr. GALLINGER. Has it not almost been a uniform custom, when a joint committee or commission has been appointed to take up some great question, that a bill follows its investigation?

Mr. CHILTON. I will answer the Senator very frankly that I do not know. The Senator from New Hampshire knows that I have not been very long in this body; but I will say that I presume that what he has suggested would be the usual course. The reporting of a bill, however, is not necessary. That is another fiction; it is purely a mental attitude. So far as that is concerned, there is no bill needed. If Senators will carefully read the report of the testimony on this subject, if they will read the legislation, the constitutional provisions, and will read what the great lawyers who were here contending for the half-and-half principle themselves admit, and will then read the report of the committee, which studied this matter, they will find that the fiction of the half and half is nothing more than an act of Congress, which any subsequent Congress may repeal, directly or by implication.

It reminds one of Chinese scenery. I understand that the Chinese in their theaters turn a chair over, and that means a storm at sea; if the chair is standing upright, that means sunshine and bright weather; if the chair is placed in another position, that means something else, and so forth. They do not go to the trouble and expense to paint the scenery and to set the scenes as we do in this country; it is all play anyway; it is all fiction; and they say if you want to get yourself in that mental attitude you can do it just as well by imagining a storm at sea when a chair is turned over as by having the elaborate stagings with the lightning and thunder. This "half-and-half" plan is simply Chinese scenery.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. CHILTON. I yield.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I simply want to ask the Senator what legislation, if any, would be necessary to carry out the recommendations of the joint committee?

Mr. CHILTON. I will come to that in a moment.

I was going on, Mr. President, to show to the Senate that we have here absolutely a fiction, and nothing else. Let us approach this question from the three standpoints from which we should approach it. Let us approach it from the legal standpoint and from its economic standpoint. Then when you have considered it from those standpoints you will find that everyone has been approaching it purely from a psychological standpoint. There is nothing from the legal standpoint in the way of the amendment of the Senator from California, and there is nothing from an economic standpoint.

In order that we may understand the matter—the Senator from California well stated it, and I do not want to go over the history again—the District of Columbia was acquired by President Washington on account of the insecurity of the capital then in existence; in other words, the capital was under local influences, and the Revolutionary soldiers absolutely mobbed Congress in the city of Philadelphia. Congress then took up the question of getting a reservation absolutely apart from any kind of local influence, a place that could not come under any kind of local influence, that would be like a Government reservation, absolutely under the control in its minutest details of the Congress of the United States. They did not desire that it should be so that they would have to call upon a mayor of a town to protect the Congress; they wanted it so that they would not have to call upon the governor of a State or of a Territory or any local authority whatever for protection. They desired that in order to establish the complete jurisdiction and power of the National Congress to do anything it wanted—with what? With the Nation's Capital.

Congress first got authority from the Legislature of Maryland and authority from the Legislature of Virginia and came here and marked this spot out. It acquired the property by contract and purchase.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. It acquired it largely by gift.

Mr. CHILTON. Not mainly by gift. I beg the Senator's pardon; it was not mainly by gift. I state it accurately. The property was acquired principally by purchase, and by a certain form of agreement setting forth what should be done as to the interests in the property when it should be sold. The evidence does not show that it was mainly acquired by gift; but that makes no difference.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, if it was not acquired by gift, we certainly did a most remarkable thing by giving back almost half of it to the State of Virginia. I think if the Senator from West Virginia looks the matter up he will find that it was acquired principally by gift.

Mr. CHILTON. The Senator from West Virginia has looked it up; the Senator has not only looked it up, but he has put the contracts and the deeds into the record, so that no man need make a statement here upon guess or belief. It is all in the report. We got copies of the original contracts, the original agreements, all of the papers, and these copies have been put in here, so that anyone can see what the arrangement was. There is no need now to have another committee of Congress appointed to ascertain what those papers were, for they have been printed for the use of the Senate for now over six months.

We have had various experiments at government in this city. First, we had the dregs, partly, of the laws of Maryland, which, in part, controlled here for a time. We have had the old city government of Georgetown, which was the principal municipality here when this Government was formed. Then later, a local government was established, and at one time there was a mayor of the city of Washington for quite a long while. We have been through all of that experience; and the record shows what it did for the National Capital. It did it no good. You can not have Congress controlling and exercising its full constitutional power as directed by the Constitution when you have any kind of local interference. The result was that those forms of government were each and all abolished. The tendency has been to restore to Congress, and not to take away from it, power over the destinies of the District of Columbia.

In 1874 the people of the District of Columbia and the people of the country at large were under a peculiar psychological condition regarding a gentleman known as "Boss Shepherd," who had gone forward and had improved the streets of this city. He was subjected to a great deal of abuse for several years, but finally the people found that what he had done was in the interest of the city, and they built a monument to him; and when he returned here, they received him with great honor and with a great celebration. That, however, marked a period in the history of the government of the District of Columbia.

In 1878 there was passed what is known as the "organic act." You might just as well call it a constitution; you might just as well call it a half-and-half act; you may call it anything; but what was it? It was nothing but an act of Congress. It could not bind the next Congress; it could not take the constitutional power out of Congress to govern this city. It was, I repeat, simply an act of Congress.

It has so happened that in the 38 years that that has been working, sometimes the contributions of the Government have dropped down to 38 or 40 per cent and sometimes they have risen to 69 or 70 per cent; but it has also happened that Congress has kept the books properly and they have figured it out to preserve a half-and-half plan. There may be a very few dollars difference; but it has been practically a fifty to fifty division, running it out through the 38 years during which the plan has been in existence.

It is known that the author of that half-and-half plan was ex-Senator Blackburn, who was at the time, I think, a member of another body. I think he drew the bill and supported it in its various legislative stages. He was before our joint committee, together with a great many other prominent citizens of this city, and he testified to the influences which made what is called the organic act possible, and the reasons why it is now absolutely out of date, and not what the people want and not what Congress should retain. Ex-Senator Blackburn gave the reasons for that; and his statement is in the report.

The statement has been made here loosely that the people of this District want the half-and-half plan. I desire to say, Mr. President, that I, of course, do not know and no one absolutely knows what the people of the District of Columbia want; but I was impressed with the fact, as I know other members of the joint committee were, that a majority of the people of this city do not want the half-and-half principle. They feel—and as I shall show you in a minute that will be the inevitable result—that it will injure the development of this city and will necessarily make Congress careless. The absolutely necessary tendency of the application of the half-and-half plan is not only to embarrass Congress in the discharge of its duties, but also to diminish the appropriations which this Congress ought to make for the benefit of the people of this city and of the country, and cause the neglect of the paramount duty which it owes to this city as the Capital City of the Nation.

That is what we reported. We did not submit a report specifically against the half-and-half system, because when we examined it we found that there is no such thing as a fixed half-and-half plan; it is a fiction; it is a mental attitude; that is all it is, because under the Constitution a half-and-half plan could not be established that would last longer than the Congress chooses to repeal it and substitute something else for it.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, did I not understand him just now to suggest that the half-and-half plan had been followed for 38 years?

Mr. CHILTON. That is not the way I put it.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Did not the Senator say that?

Mr. CHILTON. No, sir; I did not say that.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Then, what did the Senator say?

Mr. CHILTON. If the Senator wants me to repeat it, I said that in some years the contributions of the National Government had dropped down to thirty-odd per cent and sometimes they had gone as high as from 60 to 70 per cent, but in figuring it all up—

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Averaging it.

Mr. CHILTON. It had been practically half-and-half; in other words, the Government itself had paid about as much out of one hand as the Government paid out of the other hand, if you want to call it that.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. But the average was half-and-half, as I understand?

Mr. CHILTON. The Senator can state it in that way if he wants to.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I understand that is the way the Senator stated it.

Mr. CHILTON. I did. Now, Mr. President, what is the situation? Is the money collected from the District of Columbia legally District money? Not at all. It is all paid into the Treasury of the United States; it is the money of the United States, and it goes into the Treasury as does any other money.

From the representatives of the various organizations who came before us and from the eminent men who were there contending for the half-and-half system, the committee tried to ascertain what it was that made these people sit up at night and work, during the unreasonable hours that the committee sat, over a thing that they admitted was a mere fiction, was nothing more than a mental attitude. We wondered what on earth the reason was, and I believe we finally solved it. It consists mainly of two parts. To the extent of about 50 per cent it was a case of people wanting to have their own way, and as to the other 50 per cent a case of people craving a lever with which to work upon Congress continually, as has been the case in the past.

Mr. President, do you know that the half-and-half plan is nothing on this earth but a system of matching dollars? The idea of a great Government—the greatest on earth—trying to build the greatest Capital City on earth, saying that “we will leave to the assessor of the District the determination of how much the Congress is going to appropriate” and then for Congress to finally and slavishly accept his estimate instead of taking the matter in their own hands! Such is the situation. The half-and-half plan contemplates not that Congress will appropriate what is needed, but will appropriate a sum double what the District revenues shall amount to.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. CHILTON. I do.

Mr. WORKS. I desire to suggest to the Senator that it is not only the matching of dollars, but it is the matching by the Government of its own dollars.

Mr. CHILTON. Absolutely. I made the statement just now that to-day the strongest man in the government of the District of Columbia is the assessor appointed by the commissioners. Under the half-and-half plan, he is stronger than the Congress and stronger than the commissioners. Why? Because it is not what is needed that is appropriated, but it is double what the assessor produces when he brings in his returns. Then Congress simply multiplies District revenues by two and takes both dollars out of the pockets of the Government. Is not that a ridiculous course for a great Government to pursue? Is it astonishing that nobody surrounds with any particular sanctity such a system as that?

Now, see if I am not right. The evidence before the committee of every man who appeared before the committee as to the present law and its workings and the evidence of the District commissioners was to that very effect; in other words, under the half-and-half system, if only $4,000,000 are derived from the taxation of property in the District, then the Congress can only appropriate $8,000,000, no matter how much may be needed, even though $20,000,000 may be needed in some exigency. If $5,000,000 are raised by taxation in the District, then Congress must appropriate $5,000,000 more to go with it. So the amount that is appropriated is really fixed by the assessor. If he goes to work and reduces the valuation so that the $1.50 assessment will only produce $4,000,000, the hands of Congress are tied down to an $8,000,000 budget. The assessor ties them, for the assessor fixes the estimates in the last analysis.

Mr. GALLINGER. But, Mr. President, is it not a fact that the assessors have so well discharged their duties that the assessed valuation has constantly increased? Is there any evidence that it has ever been reduced arbitrarily?

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, whenever Senators undertake to argue a mental attitude—and this is only a mental attitude—

Mr. GALLINGER. That is what the Senator has been doing.

Mr. CHILTON. And seek to establish a fiction, of course the combinations are kaleidoscopic, and you can view the matter from many standpoints. It is like a little boy playing in a nursery. He can call a chair a soldier at one time, and the next time he can call a broom a soldier, but the broom is still a broom and the chair is still a chair. It is nothing in the world but a fiction after all. Of course, if the assessor does right, he does right, and if the assessor does wrong, he does wrong. I am bound to say “yes” to the Senator’s question; but still it is true that the assessor is the power and not the Congress, for he fixes the yardstick of appropriations and not the Congress of the United States.

Mr. GALLINGER. But, Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, the assessor is subject to the will of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, who appoint him.

Mr. CHILTON. Certainly; and they are subject to our will, and the half-and-half division is subject to our will, and you can not get it out from under our will or power, because the Constitution has placed full legislative power over this District in the hands of Congress, and the effort to induce Congress to relinquish that power is a waste of time and energy. The effort to fix or hold the half-and-half plan is therefore useless.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. CHILTON. I do.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. I do not want to intrude too suddenly upon the train of thought of the Senator, but I have been sitting here listening to some of his statements, and I recall what he has said concerning the half-and-half plan being a fiction, a mental attitude, his reference to the imagination of a little boy in a nursery as to a chair or a broom being a soldier, and his statement that it is all a matching of dollars somehow or other that belong to the Government with other dollars that belong to the Government. Now, Mr. President, it seems to me, with all due respect, that the Senator is getting into the realm of fancy, because I have the impression that the dollars that are matched come out of the pockets of certain taxpayers.

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. And there is no fiction about it; they are taxed-raised dollars.

Mr. CHILTON. I have never denied that, Mr. President.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. CHILTON. I do.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I merely wish to correct what I think is a misapprehension on the part of the distinguished Senator in regard to the assessor and what the assessor can do and what he does do. As a matter of fact, the law in regard to the assessor, as the Senator will remember, permits him to assess the property in the District at not less than 66 $\frac{2}{3}$  valuation, which, at a dollar and a half on the hundred, will raise practically a dollar per hundred on the property assessed.

The assessor may go ahead and fix the assessment of the property at a hundred dollars, and in that way get a dollar and a-half, or 50 per cent more, than the amount raised when the assessment is based on a valuation of 66 $\frac{2}{3}$  per cent. We are not in the Congress bound to appropriate additional money because the assessor does that, but I want to say to the Senator—and I think the joint committee were practically unanimous in the opinion—that the way to remedy that condition is not to allow the assessor to continue with the amount of discretion he has, so that he may put the Congress in a false position and raise an undue amount of money. We are not controlled in any way by the action of the assessor in making our appropriations, because we can change them at any time, and if he has not sense enough to raise a proper amount of money, we can control him by subsequent legislation.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, certainly the Senator is right, and he is also wrong. It depends on one's mental attitude. You have something here that is all fiction. Here is the Congress of the United States vested with the power by the Constitution to legislate in all matters concerning the District of Columbia. Congress can not surrender that power. It is possible to put all of that fiction inside of that which anyone may desire; but Congress has the power, and it can not surrender it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. CHILTON. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. In reenforcement of what the Senator from West Virginia has just said, to the effect that the assessor is the paramount power, whatever else he might be, and that the assessor's business has been carried on in a rotten way, to say the least of it, I want to mention an instance.

With the idea of saving myself rent, I bought a house on Sixteenth Street. I paid $12,000 for it in cash, not a nickel more nor a nickel less. The law requires the assessor to assess property at not over two-thirds of its real value. The assessor took it into his head to assess that property at $14,000, when it cost only $12,000, and when I wrote to him about it, such is the iniquity of this system here that he said it had been done, and having been done, like the laws of the Medes and Persians, it could not be changed for three years. I did not care much; but I began to inquire then, and I found that that was the usual course, and that they managed through the assessor's office to make nonresidents pay a great deal more tax than residents of the District of Columbia. So the assessor is not a fiction, whatever else he may be.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, I was so shocked at receiving the information that the Senator from Mississippi had $12,000 that I am not sure that I heard what he said afterwards. [Laughter.] But, as I recall now, he said that that $12,000, when it went into real estate, was assessed in the District of Columbia at $14,000. Of course, we found instances of that kind in our investigation. It appeared that in some parts of the District property was assessed too low, while in other parts it was assessed too high.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But in this case the property had changed hands recently before the assessment, and there was no excuse for it. The transfer was upon the records and in the register's office; and I learned that they treat nonresidents that way pretty generally.

Mr. CHILTON. Everybody knows the Senator from Mississippi so well that they probably thought he would make a good bargain, so that if he bought a given piece of property the assessor ought to put on $2,000 more in order to make him go to the assessor's office to explain.

But, Mr. President, the rule is and the law is that those assessments can be changed, but it is necessary to make application within a certain length of time, and probably in the case to which the Senator from Mississippi referred he did not make the application in time, and so did not secure a correction.

Mr. WILLIAMS. In that connection, just a word. There seems to be no machinery whereby notice is given. Nobody knows what the assessments are. I did not know at what figure they had assessed me; in fact, I did not know for a year afterwards. They give no notice of the figures at which they are going to assess property. In my State there is always notice given of an assessment.

Mr. CHILTON. I do not know how it is concerning that at this time.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, a few moments ago the Senator from Maryland called the attention of the Senator from West Virginia to a statement that of two dollars appropriated, both dollars came out of the pocket of the Government. A few moments before that the Senator from West Virginia had stated that the assessor first fixed the value, then the tax was laid, then the Government met the dollar so raised by another dollar, and that both dollars went into the Government Treasury. I confess, his answer to the Senator from Maryland did not seem to clear what he meant. I do not understand just what he meant by saying that both dollars are appropriated by the Government, except pro forma.

Mr. CHILTON. I will explain to the Senator what I mean. I mean this: Mr. President, if the Congress of the United States thinks it is wise and best to build here a great capital, beautiful parks, wonderful streets, a fine water system, a modern lighting, heating, and sewerage system, and allow the people to live here and pay no taxes, then it is not necessary to say that the result will be that everybody will want to come to Washington. Do you not think that the people of West Virginia—

Mr. CLAPP. Well, but nobody—

Mr. CHILTON. Now, let me—

Mr. CLAPP. I do not think the Senator understood my question. The taxpayers in Washington combined pay $4,000,000, we will say.

Mr. CHILTON. Yes.

Mr. CLAPP. Then, Congress appropriates an equal amount.

Mr. CHILTON. Yes.

Mr. CLAPP. Now, I understood the Senator to say something that would warrant the suggestion that the $8,000,000 was being paid by the Government.

Mr. CHILTON. Exactly. The Senator does not think the Government stole the $4,000,000 from the people, does he?

Mr. CLAPP. No; nor did the Government pay more than $4,000,000.

Mr. CHILTON. The Government got the whole $8,000,000 from the people.

Mr. CLAPP. It got $4,000,000 from the people in the District of Columbia.

Mr. CHILTON. Exactly.

Mr. CLAPP. Now, there is nowhere else in the United States that men pay taxes on real estate.

Mr. CHILTON. What is the Senator talking about? I pay a tax on real estate.

Mr. CLAPP. A Federal tax?

Mr. CHILTON. I pay the same kind of a tax that the people of this District pay.

Mr. CLAPP. But the Senator does not pay any tax on real estate into the Federal Treasury.

Mr. CHILTON. Oh, Mr. President, that is like everything else, of course. If a man becomes different from anybody else when he lives in Washington, if he can have everything and pay nothing, if he has no obligations, of course—

Mr. CLAPP. But, Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me, a man in Washington has a piece of property, a home or a store—I do not care which—upon which he pays a tax of a thousand dollars a year. Another man has a store in Baltimore upon which he pays a tax of a thousand dollars a year. Both of these men, through the internal-revenue and tariff laws of the country, the income tax, and so forth, also contribute a thousand dollars each to the Federal Treasury. Now, you do not reckon the thousand dollars that the Baltimore man pays upon his real estate as anything upon which the Federal Government has any claim, but, according to the Senator's logic, the thousand dollars that the man in Washington pays upon his real estate should be treated as a tax due from the citizen to the Federal Government, but it is simply for local purposes.

Mr. CHILTON. Oh, Mr. President—

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me?

Mr. CHILTON. Yes; I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WORKS. I should like to ask the Senator from Minnesota whose money it is, wherever it comes from, when it is paid into the National Treasury?

Mr. CLAPP. Ah, I agree with the Senator from California that when it comes to appropriating this money it is approprinted by Congress; but Congress is only acting as the agent of the local taxpayer in Washington as to one-half of it.

Mr. WORKS. Not at all. The taxpayer pays his money into the Treasury for the benefit he receives under the Government.

Mr. CLAPP. Not toward the benefit of the national defense, or anything of that kind—

Mr. WORKS. For the benefit of everything that the Government affords.

Mr. CLAPP. But for the local purposes of a city, just as the taxpayer in St. Paul or New York City pays his city tax for a local purpose.

Mr. WORKS. Why, of course.

Mr. CLAPP. The fact that the taxpayer here turns it over to us, and we act as agents, makes it none the less his additional contribution.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, it would be entirely within the power of Congress not to tax a single item of property in the District of Columbia. It need not tax real estate or personal property, tangible or intangible property, unless it chooses to do so. It has been conceded that a reasonable tax should be imposed upon these people; and what is the report of this committee? The report of this committee recommends not to go into the taxation of intangible property, but to impose upon the people of the District of Columbia what would be a reasonable and fair tax, taking into consideration the various cities similarly situated of about the same size—that is, with which it should be comparable—to fix that definitely and certainly, and then for this Congress to proceed liberally, generously, and not wait longer, but go at it at once and make this the great, splendid National Capital that it should be. You will never do it under the half-and-half plan. You will never do it with local influence prodding at you for every crossing, for every gutter, for every bridge, for everything that you want to do. This is the time for Congress to be big. This is the occasion for Congress to realize that this is the time to build a city to meet the aspirations of the people, and for one time to do a practical thing in response to a committee that has tried to do its duty.

Here is a committee that tried to settle this thing, to untangle it. It has given you all the facts. There is no use for anybody to say he has not the facts. They are here. There is no use for anybody to say that there is something down under it, that there might be a reason for not acting now. There is not anything hidden. It is all exposed here in this report. There is no use for anybody to conjure up in his mind that there is a danger of interfering with some legislation. There is not any legislation that could interfere with abolishing the half-and-half fiction. It is all out here before you. You have the facts. You have the report of the committee, and the House has acted upon it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the iridescent dream the Senator has about the liberality of Congress would be dissipated if he would take my place as a conferee upon the District of Columbia appropriation bill. The liberality of Congress is shown in the House bill as it came to the Senate. The Senator will not stand for it. That is the liberality of Congress.

Mr. CHILTON. Of course, it is proper for the Senator from New Hampshire to criticize another House, but a new Senator like myself has to keep within the rules of the Senate.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am not criticizing the other House. I am talking about the bill which has been reported. I have a right to do that.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I will say to the Senator from West Virginia that the House did the same thing before the Senator's committee made its report.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes.

Mr. CHILTON. Now, of course, it is a great job, as we all know, when you "buck" the Appropriations Committee. Pardon the expression, but when you "buck" the Appropriations Committee of the Senate you have something to do. We all understand that. We understand that it is a powerful body. This committee carries big guns. We know who they are. They are sometimes arbitrary. They are only men, however, though splendid Members of this body; but, Mr. President, the tendency is to go with the big things and the strong things of Washington, with Washington power, from the Star down.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Mr. President, I want to deny that charge. I want to say that in the investigation of the matters of the District of Columbia there was as much, and possibly more, attention paid to those who are of a lowly character and of small means.

Mr. CHILTON. Why, Mr. President, I hope the Senator did not—

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I only took what the Senator said, sir. I want to say for the Senator who had charge of the affairs of the District of Columbia that when matters came up before us he was on the side of those who have small properties, and not against the others, and tried to see that they had their rights. I think the Senator has no right to make such an assertion—that the Appropriations Committee always went with the strong.

Mr. CHILTON. I never said it. I said the "tendency" is toward the strong.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. To the contrary, it was their disposition to take care of the weak.

Mr. CHILTON. Well, Mr. President, that again shows the "mental attitude" in this thing.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I think the Senator has some mental attitude that he had better explain. He is talking about "mental attitude." I do not know what he means by "mental attitude." My mental attitude is such that I can understand when a man says that I, as a member of a committee, am disposed to go with those who have as against those who have not. I think he had better look after his mental attitude.

Mr. CHILTON. Well, Mr. President, as I said before, you can not have anything to argue against the report of this committee except a straw man. If you have not a straw man, you have nothing. I never said anything about the character, the honesty, or the fair dealing of the members of that committee. They are all good friends of mine—splendid men. I compliment them. I say, and this report shows, that they have not investigated this subject like the committee that was charged with this duty. The facts are here. No man would say that there is some law here that stands in the way of the amendment of the Senator from California if he had studied the question and read the report. That is what I say. No, Mr. President, I did not say that anybody could control the Committee on Appropriations. From its great chairman down, every man there is above reproach, and stands high. I do say this, Mr. President: That there are clawing at this committee the big things of Washington all the time, and the little ones are not heard; from the great Star newspaper that pounds at this Congress forever down to nearly every other instrumentality and business in this city the fiction of the half-and-half is overplayed. Their "teeth have been set" that the Congress shall not abolish the half-and-half plan. That is what I say. They are fighting the instrumentalities of this Congress and this Congress itself. That is what I say; and I would not be surprised if honest men who do not read this report would be misled by these powerful influences.

Now, let us see what the Congress does.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a minute?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOLLIS in the chair). Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. CHILTON. Certainly, I yield to the Senator.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator quotes the Star newspaper.

Mr. CHILTON. Yes, sir.

Mr. GALLINGER. It never had any effect on my mental attitude; but I want to say to the Senator that 42 citizens' associations have sometimes almost driven my mental attitude to the lunatic asylum.

Mr. CHILTON. Let me correct the Senator there.

Mr. GALLINGER. And they represent the people whom the Senator says we are neglecting.

Mr. CHILTON. Will the Senator let me correct him there in his statement?

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; I will.

Mr. CHILTON. The Senator never had before him any citizens' associations as a body. He had a few men from citizens' associations who called themselves citizens' associations and assumed to speak for the people of this city.

Mr. GALLINGER. Well, that may be so; but I thought—

Mr. CHILTON. That is right. That is what we had before us—22 sometimes speaking for 600, it was claimed, if my memory is correct.

Mr. GALLINGER. I thought they had a right to do it. I never questioned their right.

Mr. CHILTON. Well, we went into the matter and found out that they did not always speak for the people. We looked a little further into it, and reported that to you. That is, the evidence—all that was said—is in the printed testimony at the hearings.

Mr. GALLINGER. Oh, well, I know something about it myself, because I have attended their meetings, and the Senator has not.

Mr. CHILTON. Of course it is a big statement for the Senator to allege a negative, but for one time he guessed right. I have not.

Mr. GALLINGER. I thought so.

Mr. CHILTON. But it was a guess when the Senator made it. Now, Mr. President, we made a report to the Congress. As I said, the Senator from Delaware, the Senator from California, and the Senator from West Virginia who now has the honor to have the floor, investigated this matter, and we reported our findings to the Congress. There were three splendid Members of the other House who gave it their undivided time during the vacation. We neglected nothing to get all the facts. There is not any intimation that we have not given all the facts to the Congress.

Now, the other House in its bill adopted our recommendations. They said in effect: "Fiction it is; let it go." They said: "Fiction it will ever be, and you can not make it anything else but fiction. Why keep up the fiction? Why not do something to give an incentive to the Congress to go out and see what its duty should be, and let us not forever follow the miserable yardstick of an assessor as the basis for large appropriations?" If the District happens to raise a little, we will not put a corresponding amount on. We said: "The plan is unreasonable, ridiculous, and can not be sustained in any place where people think before they act." We condemned it, and we gave our reasons for it; and the other House adopted those reasons, and sent us a bill which we can adopt or amend. I will strive with the great Senator from Maryland to raise these appropriations for these people. I will take the recommendation of the Appropriations Committee upon all of it; but I ask the chairman when he assaults a report that a committee has made here to give one reason, and just one reason, for it.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator in what way I have assaulted his report.

Mr. CHILTON. Did I say the Senator assaulted our report?

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. That was the Senator's statement.

Mr. CHILTON. Well, Mr. President, I say this: We made a report here to the effect that there is absolutely no reason on earth for maintaining the fiction called the half-and-half plan.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator yield, and to whom?

Mr. CHILTON. I want to read what it says, if there is any question about it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator declines to yield.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I want to say to the Senator that I have seen no place in the report where they advised doing away with the half-and-half plan.

Mr. CHILTON. Yes, sir. Let me read page 8 of our report.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Pardon me one minute. Let me explain it. If you had, and if I felt that it was a proper thing to do, I would not favor doing it on an appropriation bill. If you want legislation pertaining to this matter, it ought to be in a separate bill, considered and digested, and not in an appropriation bill. It is not the proper place for legislation of such great importance as this to be put, without consideration, and amendments brought up on the floor of the Senate which we are asked to adopt, which in their effect change the entire control over the District of Columbia.

I do not think I am capable of determining now whether such legislation is wise or not; and in what I said with regard to the argument which was made by the Senator from California, I was not criticizing his amendment. I merely said I did not think this was the time and place to put it on the statute books; but I was very glad to hear what he had to say, and it may be that he has exercised good judgment in the report and the speech he has made, for somebody may get information and enlightenment from it and introduce a bill in accordance with it.

Mr. CHILTON. Of course, Mr. President, in my judgment you will never get anything to change the half-and-half plan as to which somebody will not say, "Wait, mañana, to-morrow; put it off. We want some more information."

Now, I say that we have had for six months as nearly all the information that a responsible—largely responsible—body of the two Houses ever furnished to the two Houses of Congress. It has been printed. Everybody can see it.

Now, somebody raised a question as to what this report says. I read from page 8 of the report, the unanimous report, of the committee:

We find, after a most careful consideration of all the evidence and circumstances as shown to exist at this time, that there is no reason for any arbitrary rule of proportionate contribution for the expenses of the District of Columbia by the residents thereof and by the people of the United States who reside outside the District of Columbia; that the correct rule should be that the responsibility in taxation of the residents of the District of Columbia be as fixed and certain as the responsibility of residents of other American cities comparable with the city of Washington; that with the payment of such taxes as may be equitably and properly assessed against privately owned taxable property the financial responsibility of the residents of the District should be concluded; that the present assessment valuation of privately owned real estate in Washington is fair and reasonable; that the sum of money collected as such taxes be paid into the Treasury of the United States, there to be incorporated into a trust fund for the benefit of the District of Columbia, and that the revenues thus collected be expended in the government of the District of Columbia and for no other purpose.

Then the report proceeds to recommend that the United States should start upon a plan to make this a grand, beautiful, splendid city, such as was contemplated by the fathers and is demanded by the people of this great Republic. Now, why did we recommend that? Because that wipes out the fiction. That is what we should do now. That takes us away from the chain which binds us to the assessor's yardstick and leaves us there at the mercy of the assessments in the District to gauge the bounty, the justice, of the Congress of the United States.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me?

Mr. CHILTON. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. Does the Senator think that the Government is paying too much or too little?

Mr. CHILTON. I think the Government is paying too little—much too little. I so expressed myself. But, Senators, you will never get away from it under this old plan.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me—

Mr. CHILTON. Certainly I think it is too small.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will not interrupt the Senator unless he wishes me to.

Mr. CHILTON. I am very glad to have the Senator interrupt me.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator thinks the Government is paying too little. Let me tell him what would have happened had his system been in vogue. The people of the District of Columbia would have contributed over $7,000,000 this year, and the bill comes to us carrying four millions on the part of the Government. Now, that is the way we are going to build this magnificent city.

Mr. CHILTON. No, no.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, I am here prepared to vote with the District of Columbia Committee and the Appropriations Committee to make this a grand city and to appropriate sufficient money and to stand back of that committee. Every member of the joint committee, I believe, will do it. We talked that over. All you have to do is to get rid of this "mental attitude." We have a lot of old things to get rid of. We have to change our way of looking at it. That is what I ask the Senate to do. The other side never will get away from it, because they have been thinking and acting on the half-and-half plan fiction so long that it is hard to get even the Congress down on the ground of facts to look the real situation squarely in the face.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit one further suggestion, I have no doubt the Senator will stand by the committee.

Mr. CHILTON. I will yield.

Mr. GALLINGER. The committee has added to this bill almost enough to bring it to the point that the estimates asked us to do; but the Senator surely has not assumed the mental attitude that leads him to think that we can keep in the bill those added appropriations that we have put in it.

Mr. CHILTON. I think we can; yes, sir. I think so, if we will adopt the constitutional, logical plan suggested by the fiscal relations joint committee.

Mr. GALLINGER. I wish the Senator would become a member of the committee of conference on the District of Columbia bill.

Mr. CHILTON. Well, Mr. President, it is hard to get on the Appropriations Committee of the Senate, I know. It is hard to break into that select body. That is a great committee, and I should like to be on it. I have several committee places that I should like to swap for a place on that committee. I would stand hard and strong for my theory, and for liberal District appropriations.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, will the Senator permit a question for my own information?

Mr. CHILTON. With pleasure.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Aside from the half-and-half plan that has been so long the rule here, does the Senator think, from the investigation of his committee, that by imposing a reasonably low rate of taxation upon the property of Washington City, its real estate and the other property, such as bonds, the gas company, the electric light company, and so forth, there would be in the end any greater obligation on the part of the Government to raise money to meet it, or would it be as great as it now is under the half-and-half plan? In other words, would not a reasonable taxation of the actual, taxable property in Washington raise enough, with the Government contributing sometimes more and sometimes less, and leave the city under a less burden, and give relief at last to both the Federal Treasury and the people of Washington?

Mr. CHILTON. In order to answer the Senator properly, Mr. President, there are many things to take into consideration. There is no doubt in the world that there is quite a large amount of intangible property in this city that escapes taxation. It is a doubtful question as to whether or not that is best. I am willing to let that matter rest for the present.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is true everywhere.

Mr. CHILTON. I do not want to go into that field, because, as far as that is concerned, this is the Capital of the Nation, and I am willing that it shall be different from other cities. I am willing that the Capital of this country shall offer inducements to the home builders; and, so far as I am concerned, I am perfectly willing to take the average taxation that the people of West Virginia and New York and Massachusetts and Mississippi and Arizona and California pay, and then let the people of this city pay a little less. I would rather it should be a little less than more. But let us fix it certainly, as we report here, so that when a man comes here he will know exactly what his rate of taxation is; but let us make that rate of taxation simply for the purpose of raising revenue. Do not make it the yardstick of our generosity or our justice. Let us not make it the basis upon which we will estimate how we should build the greatest Capital for the greatest people and the greatest country on earth. Let us get out from under this servitude, this nothing that you call the half-and-half system, and let us start this Capital on its march to be the great city that it should be. You will never do it unless you adopt the plan passed by the House of Representatives.

The House of Representatives has carried out the recommendation of the committee. That recommendation has never been assailed. No reason has been given against it. I suppose when this matter is disposed of it will then be proper to vote upon the amendment of the Senate. The amendment of the Senate looks back 38 years. The House of Representatives has turned its face to progress, and to what is shown to be also good sense, by the evidence taken by this committee.

Mr. SAULSBURY obtained the floor.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Delaware yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. LEE of Maryland. I have not wanted to interrupt the discussion of the Senator, but this is a very far-reaching decision of the Chair, and I should just like to reserve an appeal from it. I do not care to press the appeal at this moment; but, as a matter of fact, yesterday or day before I was ruled out of order when I thought the House had opened the door on another general appropriation bill. This is another matter, of course. This is the District of Columbia appropriation bill, and I do not know that the point of the House having opened the door is applicable at this particular place; but last year I remember offering an amendment that limited the application of the very money voted, and I was ruled out of order on the ground of its being general legislation.

Now, this opens the door too wide. You can abolish the District of Columbia every 15 minutes under this ruling. It is a ruling that makes legislation dealing with the District the mere whim of the body. It is a most revolutionary ruling. It was so revolutionary that I do not believe the Senate took it in at all; so I reserve the right to appeal. I do not want to interfere with the discussion.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I make a point of order against that.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I hope the Senator will not appeal from the decision of the Chair. This matter can be decided by a direct vote upon the amendment which is now before the Senate.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. But I appeal from the ruling of the Chair, and, of course, I would like to have that settled before we get to a vote on the proposition.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I was going to say that I think—

Mr. JONES. I make the point of order against that that it comes entirely too late. Too much business has intervened since the ruling of the Chair was made, and no appeal taken.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maryland wish to press his appeal from the ruling of the Chair at this time?

Mr. LEE of Maryland. I will if any Senator insists that I must press it now or give it up. I do not want to abandon my right to appeal from so sweeping a decision.

Mr. JONES. I insist that the Senator has already abandoned the right, not having insisted on it in time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Washington point to some ruling on that point? The Chair is not aware of any.

Mr. JONES. I am not aware of any particular ruling in the Senate here. I have not looked it up. It came up unexpectedly; but I know the general rule is that an appeal must be taken from the rule of the Chair at once.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has no doubt that an appeal is usually taken at once, but he is asking for information.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, I think I was recognized, and I have not yielded to anybody. While those who are so familiar with the rules are looking up their precedents and desiring to raise this point of order may I ask leave to continue?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware was recognized. So far as the point of order made by the Senator from Maryland is concerned, it will not be prejudiced by the interruption.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I shall try to say in a few words what I have to say in regard to this bill; and I wanted to make my remarks immediately following those of the Senator from West Virginia, who was the chairman of our Joint Committee on Fiscal Relations.

It seems to me that he has misapprehended some portions of the report which we all signed. I certainly misapprehended the reasons which one member of that committee had for signing the report. I think the questions of taxation, and of appropriation of the taxes raised, are pretty hard-fisted questions, where idealism and fiction have little place. The report of this committee shows in terms that for 38 years this city has gone along admirably well under what is commonly referred to as the half-and-half system. There has been no hard-and-fast rule in regard to appropriations for this District; but for 38 years the appropriations for this District have been practically on the 50-50 basis, one half coming out of the people of this city and the other half out of the Treasury of the United States.

While the select committee reported as the Senator from West Virginia has quoted, yet it went no further in its report than to say that this arbitrary rule—which shows that there was no reason for any such rule—need no longer be applied to District appropriations. It need not be applied to District appropriations if there is some better rule suggested or if there is some legislation enacted which renders the application of this rule unreasonable. But anyone who sat on that committee, Mr. President, and heard the pleas of the people of this District must, I think, know and understand that this is the shadowy right to which they cling with great insistence. It is what they feel is some protection to them and, in a way, it is.

I think the report of this committee would very properly be followed by a bill embodying such changes in the government of this District as the Senator from West Virginia, who was the chairman of this committee, thinks should be proposed to Congress, but until there is a reasonable scheme of government suggested for the government of this District, it is not merely put in here as a rider on an appropriation bill.

I consider that is the general wish of the people of this community that the conditions of taxation and the appropriation of money for District expenses shall follow the precedents of the last 38 years. I think that is a reasonable hope, and it is the only thing certainly that the people of this District can rely upon to come reasonably near what they desire.

I differ with the chairman of this committee when he says our hearings show that the people of the District did not want this half-and-half system to continue. From the evidence which I have heard—and I was at nearly every meeting; I was very industrious, I think, as the chairman will bear me out, in these hearings—I believe the people of the District do want this system which has been in force for 38 years to continue, unless some one can show them by suggesting a better system that something else should be done.

There has been no one, so far as I know—and I have been quite familiar with this whole subject—who has suggested what appears to give, with whatever information and knowledge I can possess myself of, a better system than that which has obtained for 38 years, and although I joined in that report, although I heard this testimony, until somebody brings before the Senate a proposal which, in my judgment, will better meet the conditions of this District and provide more safeguards for the taxpayers of this District I shall vote to continue this system.

I am in favor of appropriating a large sum of money to beautify this District and, as the Senator said, make this a splendid and magnificent Capital, but I can not see that we are going to make this a splendid and magnificent Capital if we do not take from the Government of the United States funds which have been supposedly and have in a measure been regularly contributed to beautify this Capital and rely entirely upon taxation in this District.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President—

Mr. SAULSBURY. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. CHILTON. The Senator says he does not want to give up what he calls the half-and-half until he has something that is better or that he thinks is better in its place. Will the Senator just mention one thing which the people of the city can get under the half-and-half that they could not get under any other system in any other way than that provided by the House.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, tradition and sentiment and the common course of action by any people, by any community, by any legislative body, largely control interest in legislation and in the way the people act.

I might be in favor of appropriating from the Treasury of the United States money distinctively that had not been raised from the people of this District, yet, as is now happening, Congress proposes to take only the money that the people of this District contribute for the uses in the District, but does not intend to carry out the ideal plan of the Senator from West Virginia, does intend to do what he wants to do; that is, appropriate more money for the uses of the District than it collects, as I understand his proposition. I think we ought to consider that the people of this District should be in a measure protected, and we should not spend for the purpose of beautifying the city as a National Capital the money which they contribute without in a measure bringing from the pockets of the citizens generally of this country, which will affect us as their representatives, a reasonable amount to be added to those dollars which have been contributed by the people of the city in taxation.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Mr. President, I do not want to appear to unduly interfere with the debate of Senators, but while there is no limitation of time under Rule XX when an appeal from the decision of the Chair may be taken, that rule goes on to say that when an appeal is taken it must be decided promptly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will inform the Senator that the Senator personally had not the floor when he brought up the matter of an appeal before, but he will be recognized.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President—

Mr. SAULSBURY. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. STONE. For many years we have had what is commonly known as the half-and-half principle in taxation for the support of the District of Columbia.

Mr. SAULSBURY. If I may interrupt the Senator, in appropriations, not for taxation.

Mr. STONE. I confess myself to be not very familiar with the subject, but I will ask the Senator if the impression under which I am laboring is correct, that appropriations are made by Congress on the theory that the support of the District should be borne one half by the Government out of the Treasury of the United States and the other half by taxes levied on the property?

Mr. SAULSBURY. Generally speaking, that is true, and this joint committee reported, if I may continue for a moment, that with regard to the bond issue now outstanding and commonly known as 3.65 bonds, the Government and the District were bound to provide equally.

Mr. STONE. The general principle I have stated is a correct statement of the principle?

Mr. SAULSBURY. Practically so.

Mr. STONE. Now, I wish to ask the Senator if he can tell me how long that practice, if I may so designate it, has been in vogue.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Since 1878, generally speaking. That is the date of what is called the organic act.

Mr. STONE. Is that division along the line indicated of the burden of supporting the District based upon affirmative law?

Mr. SAULSBURY. Of course, any rider on an appropriation bill can change that division. As a matter of fact, it has been the custom of the two Houses to make a provision that it should be paid in that way, and the law as determined by the Comptroller of the Treasury was that with respect to the 3.65 bonds. The Government had practically assumed the payment of one half of those bonds and the District the other half.

Mr. STONE. I do not quite see that the 3.65 bonds or any other particular obligation is important and is determinative of the question which I have in mind or which I have propounded. Of course, I know that we can by an amendment in the form of legislation to an appropriation bill change any law if no point of order is made against it when it is acted upon by the Senate. The mere fact that it is in an appropriation bill does not concern its validity. But what I wish to know is whether in the organic act of which the Senator speaks, passed in 1878, there is any provision for a division of the tax burden between the Government and the District.

Mr. SAULSBURY. In reply to the Senator, I will say that the so-called organic act passed in 1878 contains this provision:

To the extent to which Congress shall approve of said estimates—

That is, estimates made by the commissioners—

Congress shall appropriate the amount of 50 per cent thereof, and the remaining 50 per cent of such approved estimate shall be levied and assessed upon the taxable property and privileges in said District other than the property of the United States and the District of Columbia.

That is on page 10 of the report of the joint committee.

Mr. STONE. That is a quotation from the organic act?

Mr. SAULSBURY. It is a quotation from the act.

Mr. STONE. Does the Senator or did his committee interpret that as fixing a statutory basis for the division?

Mr. SAULSBURY. I may say to the Senator that the joint committee reported in this wise on the half-and-half, and I was going to read that. Referring to this act, the joint committee says on page 11 of its report:

Under this act the appropriations by the General Government in all the years since 1878 have averaged just about 50 per cent of the expenses of the District of Columbia.

We believe the fact that the national appropriation has averaged half of these expenses is not the result of chance, but of design, and that the so-called "half-and-half law," which was conceived as an economic necessity to lift the burden of debt from the oppressed District and its tax-paying citizens, was justified by the exigencies of the time and the conditions of that day. It came into being because the consensus of the best thought of that day was that justice demanded that the Federal Government should definitely come to the aid of the District and its citizens in the payment of this vast debt incurred for public works. This, we think, is the real reason for the passage of the "half-and-half" law.

Mr. STONE. I was not concerned, if the Senator please, about the reason; I am after facts.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Then, I may say to the Senator, that the fact is that while there has been a difference varying in some cases, say, from 40 per cent to 50 or 60 per cent on one side or the other, yet for 38 years in which this law has been in force assessments have been made from year to year which have made with practical exactness a division of the expenses of the District government between the National Government and those taxpayers of the District who have contributed.

Mr. STONE. I think I have not made myself understood by the Senator. He misapprehends me. I wish to know whether the amendment offered by the Senator from California is a change of the existing law, of the organic law, for example.

Mr. SAULSBURY. It undoubtedly changes the existing law, in my opinion, in many respects. Among other things it gives the right of action against the United States which it might have against the municipal corporation of the District of Columbia. It undoubtedly, from my understanding of the statement of members of the Committee on Appropriations, would change the amounts of money which would be obtained from the people of the District and applied to the municipal government of this District to the betterment of the Treasury of the United States, because we would not contribute as much as we otherwise would from the General Government.

I am afraid that I do not make myself plain to the Senator from Missouri. The question has always been settled about whether the appropriations were made from the District moneys or from the General Treasury funds, not by any separate fund held in the Treasury, but books have been kept in the Treasury where discrepancies from one side or the other have been made up, and the balance has been equaled every time there was a balance on either side.

Mr. CURTIS. Is it not the best answer to the Senator's question that if the amendment is adopted the organic act is wiped out and hereafter all business is done under the amendment offered by the Senator from California, and there is no regard paid to the half-and-half system which is provided for?

Mr. SAULSBURY. I think probably that is a better answer than I have given myself. I thank the Senator.

Mr. STONE. Does the Senator from Kansas think that if the amendment were agreed to it would change the law under which the District has been governed?

Mr. CURTIS. There is no question about it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Absolutely.

Mr. STONE. Why, then, is it not general legislation?

Mr. GALLINGER. It is.

Mr. STONE. Why, then, is it not amenable to that objection as a parliamentary question put into the form of a point of order?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Perhaps the question of the Senator from Missouri may have been answered, but not feeling sure that it has been I want to say to him that I do not think any-one questions the fact that the organic act, so called, which was enacted into law in 1878, distinctly provided that one half of the expenses should be paid by the taxpayers of the District and the other half out of the National Treasury. That is the law on the statute book now, and it has been there since 1878.

Mr. STONE. Would not this amendment change that?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I can not conceive that anybody would question it. It changes it distinctly and radically and absolutely as any thing can be changed by another thing.

Mr. STONE. Then I should like to make a parliamentary inquiry without taking the Senator from Delaware from his feet at this point, whether an appeal from the decision of the Chair can now be made?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will inform the Senator from Missouri that as soon as the Senator from Delaware has concluded and yielded the floor the Chair will recognize the junior Senator from Maryland, who has given notice that he will take that appeal, and the Chair will then put that appeal to the Senate.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, I only have a few words more to say. It seems to me that this rule has worked most admirably in this city for the end it was intended; that is, to make economical appropriations so far as the money of the city which was paid in by the residents of the city. This is not a city in a municipal sense exactly as moneys appropriated by Congress are concerned, and until that very good rule of Congress about taxation in this city and the expenditures of money raised in taxation here can be bettered in some way, for one it seems to me it is a good plan to adhere to. There is no reason why 50 per cent on either side is better than 49 per cent on one side and 51 per cent on the other, but 50 per cent is better than no measure at all, until you have some form of government here which will give a reasonable opportunity for the citizens of Washington to be represented and to have the proper right of appeal. I know that there are many provisions in the law in regard to the city government would could be much improved upon. The law in regard to the assessment of property, which means the taxation of property in this city, could be very much improved. There is a rigid rule of taxation upon real-estate assessments here that one dollar and a half shall be levied upon 66½ per cent of the valuation, and it gives the assessor a discretionary power to assess that property at 66½ or at 100 per cent. It is a perfectly absurd and ridiculous law, because if there is a levy on the real estate of this city, say, of $6,000,000 under a dollar and a half at two-thirds the assessor could raise instead of $6,000,000 a year $9,000,000 a year out of the people of this city by taxation. Under the half-and-half notion Congress ought under those circumstances to appropriate nine other million dollars, making $18,000,000 expended here for municipal purposes, because the assessor in this city thought that he had better make his assessment—the rate would act automatically—100 per cent instead of 66 per cent. Such a condition as that is, of course, absurd, whether a mere assessor could cause an expenditure here of $6,000,000 more or $6,000,000 less. The law is a poor law, and there is no amendment offered to this bill and there has been no amendment offered in the Senate or in the other House changing the duties of the assessor. There ought to be, but that is not any crying question. We all want to let things go that are running along pretty well.

Let me show you what the result of that ridiculous and absurd law is. The joint committee reports on that as follows:

The subjects of taxation in Washington differ somewhat from those of many other American cities. Here, for instance, intangible personal property is not a subject of taxation, and taxes on franchises and earnings of public-service corporations are not classed as personal taxes.

We find from the evidence of fair-minded men, residents of Washington familiar with real-estate values in general, that the present assessment of real estate for taxation is fair and reasonable.

We are perfectly aware that many discrepancies may appear even in the best-regulated assessment plan, and instances of inequality may be found in the present assessment in Washington; but, taken as a whole, the assessments made against all classes of property in the different locations in the city are equitable.

An examination of the assessments in some former years leads us to believe that in those years many of the tax valuations were too low and that then many more inequalities of taxation existed than now, and that under the present assessment an earnest and honest effort has been made to adjust assessments for taxation, so that substantial justice may be done to all concerned.

The committee found that the assessor was performing his duties reasonably well for the purposes of the people of the city. Therefore none of us has taken the trouble to bring in a bill here to change his duties.

The point that I desire to make with regard to the discussion of the half-and-half principle is this: Things are going along very well; the people of this city are pretty well satisfied, although they have very little voice in their government. They are not complaining in regard to this matter of taxation very much now; and the officials here in levying the taxes are acting reasonably well, as well, I think, as such officials are acting in any municipality in the country. They are raising per capita in this city $16 for municipal purposes, which is practically the same as is raised by every well-regulated and similarly situated municipality in the United States, so far as I know; certainly by any municipality which is comparable to this. If, as I believe, most of the people of this city desire this condition to continue—if this be true, if property as reported by the committee is fairly assessed, if it raises a reasonable amount for municipal purposes from the people here that cities do elsewhere—why tear up by the roots something which has been going along, and going along well, and which rescued this city from turmoil and trouble 38 years ago, and ever since has continued reasonably to satisfy the expectations of the city? Why enter into ideal schemes of government for this city which, in my humble judgment, nothing shows better than this very bill which is now before us will never be carried out?

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Mr. President, I gave notice just now of a point of order against the amendment of the Senator from California [Mr. WORKS]. I was a good deal surprised by the decision of the Vice President, because I have occasion to recollect the strictness with which on previous occasions he has enforced the rule against general legislation on this particular bill. For that reason I reserved this point of order, and for the particular reason that I do not think, of all the appropriation bills which have come before the Senate, that this bill should be made the one for general local legislation.

The District of Columbia is an unrepresented community, and I do not think it should be laid open to every form of political experiment that may come "down the pike." I do think that vested rights here should be respected to some extent and that the same rules that apply to the national legislation for the general protection of the country should not be taken away from the District of Columbia with reference to this appropriation bill.

Mr. President, I appeal from the decision of the Chair on the previous point of order, and insist that the amendment was out of order because it is broad and general legislation of the most marked type, authorizing the District Commissioners, in the very first line, to do what they have no legal authority now to do—that is, to convey, by good and sufficient deed of conveyance, to the Government of the United States all property belonging to the municipality known as the District of Columbia.

It is not worth while going through the details of this amendment; but from the beginning to the end, it is general legislation of the broadest and most sweeping kind.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I make the point of order that the appeal comes too late. In support of that point, I simply want to cite the Chair to the ruling of Vice President Marshall, on pages 9532 and 9533 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of the second session of the Sixty-third Congress. If the Chair would like to have it read, I will read it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The present occupant of the chair will rule that an appeal may be taken from a ruling of the Chair unless other business has intervened since the ruling was made.

Mr. JONES. Well, other business has intervened.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands no other business has intervened.

Mr. JONES. Yes; there has been a bill relating to the Panama Canal passed.

Mr. GALLINGER. But that was by unanimous consent.

Mr. JONES. I know; but it was business—legislation—just the same.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will have to inform himself on that point. The present occupant of the chair has been here ever since the ruling was made, and, so far as he is aware, no other business has intervened.

Mr. JONES. I desire to appeal to the RECORD on that question, because I know that the Panama Canal bill was passed, for I was here when it was done, and remember that there was quite a colloquy with reference to it.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I suggest that the RECORD be consulted as to what has taken place.

Mr. JONES. Yes; I appeal to the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator will bear with the present occupant of the chair for a moment, it is impossible at the same time to attend to Senators and to ascertain from the Secretary what has intervened and what has not. The Chair is informed that other business has intervened. That being so, the appeal is taken too late.

Mr. GALLINGER. Before the Chair—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire will pardon the Chair for a moment. On this point, as on all others, an appeal will lie from the ruling of the Chair. The Chair, in order to expedite business, rules that the appeal is taken too late. If there is a desire to take an appeal from that ruling of the Chair, the Chair will submit the question to the Senate.

Mr. GALLINGER. I desire to suggest—

The VICE PRESIDENT resumed the chair.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have nothing to say, Mr. President, inasmuch as a change has taken place. I merely wanted to be allowed the courtesy of making an observation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The present occupant of the chair does not want the Senator from New Hampshire to understand that the Vice President took the chair for that purpose.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the observation I wanted to make was that the Senator in the chair a moment ago ruled that other business had intervened. I do not know where the rule is to be found that would even then exclude a point of order being made; but the business that intervened was transacted by unanimous consent, the District bill was being kept continuously before the Senate, and was not even laid aside temporarily.

The VICE PRESIDENT. With due deference to my friend, the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS], who took the chair and who was not aware of what the ruling of the Chair was, the present occupant of the chair announced, in making the ruling, that he made it upon the theory that there was to be an appeal from the decision of the Chair, and would not have made the ruling at all had he not expected to get the opinion of the Senate upon a question that is doubtful, in the mind of the Chair.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Georgia will state it.

Mr. HARDWICK. The ruling being that no appeal can be taken after business has intervened, would it, in the opinion of the Chair, be intervening business to take up a matter by unanimous consent while the pending bill was still before the Senate and not displaced?

Mr. POMERENE. And the pending question being the same then as now.

Mr. HARDWICK. And the pending question even being the precise one that is now under consideration?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The present occupant of the chair, if he had been here at the time, in view of the statement which he made to the Senate of the uncertainty of his own view about it, would have been glad to entertain an appeal.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, in view of the uncertainty about this entire thing, I respectfully appeal from the decision of the Chair with respect to the Works amendment. The pending bill, to wit, the District of Columbia appropriation bill, was not displaced, but was kept continuously before the Senate, and the pending question was the amendment of the Senator from California. Now, the only thing that could be called intervening business was the taking up by unanimous consent of some pro forma matter, to agree to a House bill, or to agree, perhaps, to some House amendment to a Senate bill; and it does seem to me, therefore, that the spirit of the ruling laid down by the Vice President in the Sixty-third Congress, which was undoubtedly sound, that unless there had really been intervening business an appeal would be in order, would be applicable here. I believe, under those circumstances, that the appeal ought to be entertained.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is not very often that the present occupant of the chair prefers any request to the Senate of the United States, but the Chair again wants to say that in the tentative ruling as announced, while the Chair thinks the ruling was right, he understands that there is a very grave question about it, and the Chair expected and believed that there would be an appeal from the ruling of the Chair to the Senate. The Chair respectfully asks that an appeal be granted from the Chair to the Senate, whether it be strictly in order or not, in order that the Senate, which is the final judge of this question, may determine the matter.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, it is a matter of fact that at least three bills have been passed—two, certainly—since the decision of the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The present occupant of the chair was not here during that time.

Mr. CHILTON. Does not the RECORD show that that is the fact about it?

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me, whatever bills were passed were purely passed pro forma, as a matter of consent.

Mr. CHILTON. That is true.

Mr. HARDWICK. While the District bill was still before the Senate.

Mr. CHILTON. But, nevertheless, those bills were passed.

Mr. HARDWICK. The District bill was still before the Senate, and the pending question was then the precise amendment which was the subject matter of the ruling.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The present occupant of the chair is not complaining of the ruling of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS] when in the chair.

Mr. HARDWICK. Oh, no.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair believes that the ruling was right under the circumstances; but in view of what the Chair has said and what the Chair stated when the ruling was made, the Chair would respectfully ask the Senate to permit the appeal to be taken.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President, the ruling announced by the Chair seems to have excited some interest. It is deemed by many to have been a new departure. I am not entirely familiar with the scope of the ruling, and certainly am not familiar with the argument by which the Chair sustains it. I think that the matter can be reached in a perfectly parliamentary way when the bill gets into the Senate, when the same point of order can be raised and the ruling repeated. We can then deal with it directly. In the meantime we may have an opportunity to read in the RECORD what the Chair actually said about it and the ground upon which the ruling was based. There is enough in the bill, outside of this particular question, to consume the remainder of the afternoon; and I think we might lay the matter over until to-morrow, by which time the RECORD will be printed, and we will all have familiarized ourselves at first hand with what the Chair actually ruled. In that way I think we can treat the matter with the dignity and thoroughness that its importance deserves. To continue the discussion this afternoon would probably simply result in dispute about what was done, and most of our time would be consumed in matters that do not go to the substance.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President—

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I shall be very glad to yield to the Senator if he desires to interrupt me.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will wait until the Senator gets through. I had a remark to make.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. What I have said is only a suggestion. Of course I would not want to delay this particular bill, but I think there are enough disputed matters connected with it to consume the remainder of the afternoon.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, when the Chair made the ruling I felt that the ruling was not a sound one, but I believe I was responsible for saying to the Senate that I hoped an appeal would not be taken and that we would vote direct upon the question. I thought then we would get a speedy vote. That has not eventuated.

The reason why I felt that the decision was not well grounded was from the fact that the amendment which was before the Senate changed entirely the form of government for the District of Columbia, and I could not conceive that it was not general legislation. I hope that the suggestion of the Chair, which is a very kindly one, that the matter may be submitted to the Senate will not be resisted, and that we will decide it now, and not put it off until to-morrow. It is pretty well understood what the decision was; and I hope that we will get this bill through in the near future, so as to take up other very important legislation which is ahead of us.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I desire to make a suggestion. I was not in the Chamber when the Presiding Officer rendered the decision now under consideration, but the Vice President has indicated a desire that the Senate shall take a vote upon the appeal from the decision of the Chair. Very clearly it is a matter of very grave importance. Personally my judgment is that this is general legislation. If it be not general legislation, then any Senator can present any amendment which would result in the repeal of any section of any statute which relates to the affairs of the District of Columbia. I simply make that statement now as indicating the importance of the question before the Senate.

In view of the fact—and this seems to be the opinion of many of the Senators who have addressed the Senate upon the subject—that the President of the Senate has asked that an appeal be taken without interposing a technical objection, I want to ask the Senators who have interposed the objection whether they feel it is fair either to the Presiding Officer or to Senators, individually or collectively, to attempt to take advantage of a mere technicality. It smacks of the technical rulings that we sometimes have in courts, which result in a denial of justice; and we are trying to get away from such rulings.

Mr. VARDAMAN. May I suggest to the Senator that if the Senator thinks the ruling of the Chair is correct, why prefer the request that the Senator makes?

Mr. POMERENE. I did not say that it was correct; I do not believe that it is.

Mr. VARDAMAN. But, suppose the Senate thinks it is correct and suppose the Senator from Ohio should be the only Senator here who thought the ruling of the Chair was not correct, why have a vote? It is not taking advantage of any technicality.

Mr. POMERENE. It is quite apparent that the Senator has not been in the Senate Chamber while this discussion was going on, otherwise he would not be of the opinion that the ruling was correct.

Mr. VARDAMAN. The Senator from Mississippi has been in this Chamber ever since we met this morning.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I will ask the Chair to repeat the request that was made to the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The request that the present occupant of the chair made was this: He stated that he was ruling upon the point of order with the belief that an appeal would be taken from his ruling to the Senate, and that he did it with very great diffidence. Subsequently no appeal was taken.

There are manifestly Senators here who want the Senate to be the ultimate judge of the ruling of the Chair, and want to be heard upon the question. The Chair would not have ruled, but would have originally submitted the question to the Senate, if it had not been for the belief of the Chair that an appeal would be taken, and the question settled by the Senate. So the Chair was asking, regardless of any precedent that there may be, or intervening rulings, that an appeal may be taken from the Chair, and the Senate may settle the question.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I suppose I am as directly interested in this ruling as any other Senator. I am sorry to have been the innocent cause of all this disturbance. I am not myself inclined to take advantage of a mere technicality at this time, and I shall certainly not object to the taking of this appeal after the request is made by the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to the Senate settling the question whether the ruling of the Chair is right or wrong? The Chair hears none, and the question is now before the Senate.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President, what is the question the Chair submits to the Senate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question the Chair submits to the Senate is, Shall the ruling of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. There is no occasion to submit a request for unanimous consent. There is no practical doubt about what occurred in the Senate on June 1, 1914. It is hardly necessary to read it, although I will if it is necessary.

The ruling of the Chair stands until it has been reversed by the action of the Senate. If an objection to setting aside by unanimous consent the decision of the Presiding Officer who occupied the chair during the absence of the Vice President precluded the Senate from passing on this appeal, I should, of course, not insist upon it. I think the matter ought to be submitted to the Senate, and I shall do anything that is necessary to bring it properly before the Senate; but I think before we vote upon a question of that sort we ought to have the benefit of the reasons advanced by the Chair for his action. It seems to have provoked some comment. It does not seem to be universally accepted. I think we can reach that result by conforming to what has heretofore been done.

On the 1st of June, 1914, this occurred:

Mr. REED. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Do I understand that the amendment offered by the Senator from New York has been ruled out of order?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has ruled it out on the ground that it is general legislation.

Mr. REED. Has any business intervened?

The VICE PRESIDENT. An amendment has been presented just now, but the Chair has not the slightest objection to an appeal being taken from the decision of the Chair and will grant that right.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, with all respect in the world for the opinion of the Chair, I appeal from the decision. I think, for once, the Chair is mistaken.

Mr. SWANSON. I make the point of order that business has intervened.

The VICE PRESIDENT. But the Chair never proposes to take advantage of that. The Chair will recognize the right of the Senator from Missouri to appeal.

Mr. SWANSON. The Chair might not; but business has intervened.

Mr. REED. I will say to the Senator from Virginia that I was in the Senate; I heard the colloquy; my attention was distracted for an instant by some one speaking to me and I was utterly surprised when I knew that the point of order had been sustained. I do not think we ought to stand on a technicality of that sort when the Chair is entirely willing to let the Senate pass on the proposition.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, it is not a question, as I see it, as to what would be pleasing to the Chair; but it is a question of order on which we, of course, expect—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Of course, business has intervened; and if any Senator objects—

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I object. I consider the matter finally disposed of, and I raise the point of order.

Mr. REED. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is therefore not the fault of the Chair that the Senator from Missouri can not now appeal from the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. JONES. I should like to have the amendment last submitted again stated.

Mr. REED. I beg the Senator's pardon. I heard the Chair rule this particular question in order. I was called from the Chamber a moment, and no appeal was entered to the ruling of the Chair that the amendment was in order. On my return I heard the colloquy. Of course, if the Senator from Virginia insists upon it, I presume the only way to bring the question up will be upon the floor of the Senate when we are sitting as a Senate, and I give notice now that I shall raise the question at that time. I desire to debate it.

Now, that is the proper practice here. It has this added virtue: It gives us an opportunity to familiarize ourselves with what the Chair actually did rule, and have the additional benefit of the reasons upon which he rested his judgment. We do not have that opportunity now.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield just a moment?

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Certainly.

Mr. HARDWICK. It might put us at this disadvantage, however: If other propositions are submitted during the day that rest upon this ruling, the Senate might be embarrassed by the fact that that ruling stands unreversed. Therefore, it may be of some practical importance to the Senate to determine it now, and we can take the time now. Now is the time to determine whether this ruling is right or wrong. That is the reason why I think it ought to be decided now.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. If my consent were necessary to bring the matter before the Senate in the very broadest sense, I should, of course, give it very cheerfully, but I think the procedure indicated in the colloquy in which the junior Senator from Missouri took part is so clearly laid down and so satisfactory and so comprehensive that it is hardly necessary to invent something especially for this case. The consideration of this bill might proceed, and when the matter gets to the Senate it can be then disposed of. It may turn out that a decision of this appeal is not required at all, because this amendment may be defeated and may never be brought up in the Senate. It would present at this stage a moot question; and we are not called upon to decide those things unless there is involved a principle that needs immediate recognition. Now, I am going to object.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Certainly.

Mr. SMOOT. In connection with the remarks that the Senator has just made, would it not be better to have a decision of the Senate upon the ruling? I say that because if the amendment is not agreed to there will be no chance at all to consider the matter when it gets into the Senate, and the ruling of the Chair will stand as the ruling of the Senate.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. It can be challenged at any time it is sought to enforce it.

Mr. SMOOT. But there will be nothing to enforce it on if the Senate votes upon the amendment and rejects it. I think the ruling was wrong. I think the Senate ought to vote upon the matter, and I do not know how we will get a chance unless we vote upon it now, because I do not believe the Senate is going to agree to the amendment of the Senator from California, and then the ruling will stand.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I am not prepared to say it is wrong. I thought I heard a good many things said by the Chair that seemed plausible, if not conclusive. I am not familiar with the entire matter, and therefore I do not care to proceed with it now. I think that the balance of the afternoon will be consumed in proceeding with other matters that do not particularly relate to this question, and by to-morrow morning we will have the benefit of the printed Record and can pass upon the matter more intelligently than we can this afternoon.

Of course, that is only in the nature of a request. For the present I object to the consideration of the reversal of the ruling of the Senator from New Hampshire, and unanimous consent is properly required for that.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, in view of the suggestion made by the Senator, and as I know there are other matters to be taken up here that will probably take the balance of the afternoon, I ask that this amendment may be passed over for the present.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. JONES. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Just one further question. There is an objection now to the request that the Chair preferred. Of course, it can not be granted unless unanimously. The Chair's recollection is, though he does not recollect what Senator took it, that there was an appeal from the ruling of the Senator from New Hampshire. Is the Chair correct about that?

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I understood that that was the question that the Senate was discussing—that there was an appeal taken from the decision of the Chair, when occupied by the junior Senator from New Hampshire, that the appeal from the decision of the Vice President was not in order because business had intervened.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Then, that appeal is pending before the Senate—as to whether the ruling of the Senator from New Hampshire, who was then the occupant of the Chair, shall stand as the judgment of the Senate.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, there was no appeal taken from the ruling of the Senator from New Hampshire. He intimated that an appeal would lie if any one desired to take it; but none was taken, so far as I recall.

Mr. WORKS. The Senator is mistaken about that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. I think it was taken after I resumed the chair.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President—

Mr. WORKS. An appeal was taken, I am sure.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President—

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I rise merely to say that a day or two ago I heard the Chair complain, and almost reprimand the Senate, because Senators did not speak loud enough for the Chair to hear. I think the rule should work both ways.

Mr. HARDWICK. I am following the precedent of some years ago. I merely desire to give notice now that when this matter is reached in the Senate I shall then ask to take the judgment of the Senate on the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. STONE. By taking an appeal?

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oregon.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I assume that this matter has gone over now, and I desire to make a few observations.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is not over if the Chair's recollection is correct. The Chair has a recollection that somebody, after the present occupant took the chair, appealed from the ruling of the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. That somebody can not be found now. "Somebody" can not take an appeal. A Senator can take an appeal.

The VICE PRESIDENT. No; some Senator must.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I do not believe I am confined in my remarks to the point before the Senate now, and I desire to make some general observations on this bill.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, may I make a parliamentary inquiry? I do not wish to leave this question where it is until we have some more definite ruling. I do not wish to interfere with the Senator from Oregon if his speech being made now does not change the status of the case.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I think I have the floor.

Mr. STONE. Well, I do not know. Of course, the Senator has in a way. He has been recognized; but as there is a point of order pending before the Chair, I think that is the thing in order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The reporters will kindly look up the RECORD and see whether any appeal was taken from the decision of the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Could not the result be reached more quickly by asking the Senators if any one of them took an appeal?

SEVERAL SENATORS. He may not be here now.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The Senator from Maryland [Mr. LEE] took an appeal from the decision of the Senator from New Hampshire while he was temporarily occupying the chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Then that must be the pending question.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I believe I have the floor.

Mr. STONE. The Senator has. I wanted to make sure what was the pending question.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Mr. President, I do not understand, however, that this amendment has been laid aside.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Oh, no.

Mr. President, I presume I will be as much in order as Senators usually are in discussing the question before the Senate if I do not confine myself to the point of order that has been made and proceed to discuss briefly the bill itself, or the proposed change in the so-called half-and-half plan.

The distinguished Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON], in speaking of the so-called half-and-half plan, said that there was really nothing in it, but that it was altogether a matter of the attitude of mind of the Members of Congress. Now, Mr. President, I have very great respect for the opinion of the Senator from West Virginia, but in order that the Senate and others who may be interested in the subject may know that it is not altogether an attitude of mind, I am going to ask to have printed, as a part of my remarks, the organic act of 1878.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, that may be done.

The act is as follows:

ACT OF 1878.

[Chapter 180.]

An act providing a permanent form of government for the District of Columbia.

Be it enacted, etc., That all the territory which was ceded by the State of Maryland to the Congress of the United States for the permanent seat of the Government of the United States shall continue to be designated as the District of Columbia. Said District and the property and persons that may be therein shall be subject to the following provisions for the government of the same, and also to any existing laws applicable thereto not hereby repealed or inconsistent with the provisions of this act. The District of Columbia shall remain and continue a municipal corporation, as provided in section 2 of the Revised Statutes relating to said District, and the commissioners herein provided for shall be deemed and taken as officers of such corporation; and all laws now in force relating to the District of Columbia not inconsistent with the provisions of this act shall remain in full force and effect.

SEC. 2. That within 20 days after the approval of this act the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, is hereby authorized to appoint two persons, who, with an officer of the Corps of Engineers of the United States Army, whose lineal rank shall be above that of captain, shall be Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and who, from and after July 1, 1878, shall exercise all the powers and authority now vested in the Commissioners of said District except as are hereinafter limited or provided, and shall be subject to all restrictions and limitations and duties which are now imposed upon said commissioners. The commissioner who shall be an officer detailed, from time to time, from the Corps of Engineers, by the President, for this duty, shall not be required to perform any other, nor shall he receive any other compensation than his regular pay and allowances as an officer of the Army. The two persons appointed from civil life shall, at the time of their appointment, be citizens of the United States, and shall have been actual residents of the District of Columbia for three years next before their appointment, and have, during that period, claimed residence nowhere else, and one of said three commissioners shall be chosen president of the board of commissioners at their first meeting, and annually and whenever a vacancy shall occur, thereafter; and said commissioners shall each of them, before entering upon the discharge of his duties, take an oath or affirmation to support the Constitution of the United States, and to faithfully discharge the duties imposed upon him by law; and said commissioners appointed from civil life shall each receive for his services a compensation at the rate of $5,000 per annum, and shall, before entering upon the duties of the office, each give bond in the sum of $50,000, with surety as is required by existing law. The official term of said commissioners appointed from civil life shall be three years, and until their successors are appointed and qualified; but the first appointment shall be one commissioner for one year and one for two years, and at the expiration of their respective terms their successors shall be appointed for three years. Neither of said commissioners, nor any officer whatsoever of the District of Columbia, shall be accepted as surety upon any bond required to be given to the District of Columbia; nor shall any contractor be accepted as surety for any officer or other contractor in said District.

SEC. 3. That as soon as the commissioners appointed and detailed as aforesaid shall have taken and subscribed the oath or affirmation hereinbefore required, all the powers, rights, duties, and privileges lawfully exercised by, and all property, estate, and effects now vested by law in the commissioners appointed under the provisions of the act of Congress approved June 20, 1874, shall be transferred to and vested in and imposed upon said commissioners; and the functions of the commissioners so appointed under the act of June 20, 1874, shall cease and determine. And the Commissioners of the District of Columbia shall have power, subject to the limitations and provisions herein contained, to apply the taxes or other revenues of said District to the payment of the current expenses thereof, to the support of the public schools, the fire department, and the police, and for that purpose shall take possession and supervision of all the offices, books, papers, records, moneys, credits, securities, assets, and accounts belonging or appertaining to the business or interests of the government of the District of Columbia, and exercise the duties, powers, and authority aforesaid; but said commissioners, in the exercise of such duties, powers, and authority, shall make no contract nor incur any obligation other than such contracts and obligations as are hereinafter provided for and shall be approved by Congress. The commissioners shall have power to locate the places where hacks shall stand and change them as often as the public interests require. Any person violating any orders lawfully made in pursuance of this power shall be subject to a fine of not less than $10 nor more than $100, to be recovered before any justice of the peace in an action in the name of the commissioners. All taxes heretofore lawfully assessed and due, or to become due, shall be collected pursuant to law, except as herein otherwise provided; but said commissioners shall have no power to anticipate taxes by a sale or hypothecation of any such taxes or evidences thereof, but they may borrow, for the first fiscal year after this act takes effect, in anticipation of collection of revenues, not to exceed $200,000, at a rate of interest not exceeding 5 per cent per annum, which shall be repaid out of the revenues of that year. And said commissioners are hereby authorized to abolish any office, to consolidate two or more offices, reduce the number of employees, remove from office, and make appointments to any office under them authorized by law; said commissioners shall have power to erect, light, and maintain lamp-posts, with lamps, outside of the city limits when, in their judgment, it shall be deemed proper or necessary. Provided, That nothing in this act contained shall be construed to abate in any wise or interfere with any suit pending in favor of or against the District of Columbia or the commissioners thereof, or affect any right, penalty, forfeiture, or cause of action existing in favor of said District or commissioners, or any citizen of the District of Columbia, or any other person, but the same may be commenced, proceeded for, or prosecuted to final judgment, and the corporation shall be bound thereby as if the suit had been originally commenced for or against said corporation. The said commissioners shall submit to the Secretary of the Treasury for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879, and annually thereafter, for his examination and approval, a statement showing in detail the work proposed to be undertaken by them during the fiscal year next ensuing, and the estimated cost thereof; also the cost of constructing, repairing, and maintaining all bridges authorized by law across the Potomac River within the District of Columbia, and also all other streams in said District; the cost of maintaining all public institutions of charity, reformatories, and prisons belonging to or controlled wholly or in part by the District of Columbia, and which are now by law supported wholly or in part by the United States or District of Columbia; and also the expenses of the Washington Aqueduct and its appurtenances; and also an itemized statement and estimate of the amount necessary to defray the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the next fiscal year: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed as transferring from the United States authorities any of the public works within the District of Columbia now in the control or supervision of said authorities. The Secretary of the Treasury shall carefully consider all estimates submitted to him as above provided, and shall approve, disapprove, or suggest such changes in the same, or any item thereof, as he may think the public interest demands; and after he shall have considered and passed upon such estimates submitted to him, he shall cause to be made a statement of the amount approved by him and the fund or purpose to which each item belongs, which statement shall be certified by him, and delivered, together with the estimates as originally submitted, to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, who shall transmit the same to Congress. To the extent to which Congress shall approve of said estimates, Congress shall appropriate the amount of 50 per cent thereof; and the remaining 50 per cent of such approved estimates shall be levied and assessed upon the taxable property and privileges in said District other than the property of the United States and of the District of Columbia; and all proceedings in the assessing, equalizing, and levying of said taxes, the collection thereof, the listing and return and penalty for taxes in arrears, the advertising for sale and the sale of property for delinquent taxes, the redemption thereof, the proceedings to enforce the lien upon unredempted property, and every other act and thing now required to be done in the premises, shall be done and performed at the times and in the manner now provided by law, except in so far as is otherwise provided by this act: Provided, That the rate of taxation in any one year shall not exceed $1.50 on every $100 of real estate not exempted by law; and on personal property not taxable elsewhere $1.50 on every $100, according to the cash valuation thereof: And provided further, Upon real property held and used exclusively for agricultural purposes, without the limits of the cities of Washington and Georgetown, and to be so designated by the assessors in their annual returns, the rate for any one year shall not exceed $1 on every $100. The collector of taxes, upon the receipt of the duplicate of assessment, shall give notice for one week, in one newspaper published in the city of Washington, that he is ready to receive taxes; and any person who shall, within 30 days after such notice given, pay the taxes assessed against him, shall be allowed by the collector a deduction of 5 per cent on the amount of his tax; all penalties imposed by the act approved March 3, 1877, chapter 117, upon delinquents for default in the payment of taxes levied under said act, at the times specified therein, shall, upon payment of the said taxes assessed against such delinquents within three months from the passage of this act, with interest at the rate of 6 per cent thereon, be remitted.

SEC. 4. That the said commissioners may, by general regulations consistent with the act of Congress of March 3, 1877, entitled "An act for the support of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes," or with other existing laws, prescribe the time or times for the payment of all taxes and the duties of assessors and collectors in relation thereto. All taxes collected shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States, and the same, as well as the appropriations to be made by Congress as aforesaid, shall be disbursed for the expenses of said District, on itemized vouchers, which shall have been audited and approved by the auditor of the District of Columbia, certified by said commissioners, or a majority of them; and the accounts of said commissioners, and the tax collectors, and all other officers required to account, shall be settled and adjusted by the accounting officers of the Treasury Department of the United States. Hereafter the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay the interest on the 3.65 bonds of the District of Columbia issued in pursuance of the act of Congress approved June 20, 1874, when the same shall become due and payable; and all amounts so paid shall be credited as a part of the appropriation for the year by the United States toward the expenses of the District of Columbia, as hereinbefore provided.

SEC. 5. That hereafter when any repairs of streets, avenues, alleys, or sewers within the District of Columbia are to be made, or when new pavements are to be substituted in place of those worn out, new ones laid, or new streets opened, sewers built, or any works the total cost of which shall exceed the sum of $1,000, notice shall be given in one newspaper in Washington, and if the total cost shall exceed $5,000, then in one newspaper in each of the cities of New York, Philadelphia, and Baltimore also for one week, for proposals, with full specifications as to the materials for the whole or any portion of the works proposed to be done; and the lowest responsible proposal for the kind and character of pavement or other work which the commissioners shall determine upon shall in all cases be accepted: Provided, however, That the commissioners shall have the right, in their discretion, to reject all of such proposals: Provided, That work capable of being executed under a single contract shall not be subdivided so as to reduce the sum of money to be paid therefor to less than $1,000. All contracts for the construction, improvement, alteration, or repairs of the streets, avenues, highways, alleys, gutters, sewers, and all work of like nature shall be made and entered into only by and with the official unanimous consent of the commissioners of the District, and all contracts shall be copied in a book kept for that purpose and be signed by the said commissioners, and no contract involving an expenditure of more than $100 shall be valid until recorded and signed as aforesaid. No pavement shall be accepted nor any pavement laid except that of the best material of its kind known for that purpose, laid in the most substantial manner; and good and sufficient bonds to the United States, in a penal sum not less than the amount of the contract, with sureties to be approved by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, shall be required from all contractors, guaranteeing that the terms of their contracts shall be strictly and faithfully performed to the satisfaction of and acceptance by said commissioners; and that the contractors shall keep new pavements or other new works in repair for a term of five years from the date of the completion of their contracts; and 10 per cent of the cost of all new works shall be retained as an additional security and a guarantee fund to keep the same in repair for said term, which said per cent shall be invested in registered bonds of the United States or of the District of Columbia and the interest thereon paid to said contractors. The cost of laying down said pavement, sewers, and other works, or of repairing the same, shall be paid for in the following proportions and manner, to wit: When any street or avenue through which a street railway runs shall be paved, such railway company shall bear all of the expense for that portion of the work lying between the exterior rails of the tracks of such roads, and for a distance of 2 feet from and exterior to such track or tracks on each side thereof, and of keeping the same in repair; but the said railway companies, having conformed to the grades established by the commissioners, may use such cobblestone or Belgian blocks for paving their tracks or the space between their tracks, as the commissioners may direct; the United States shall pay one-half of the cost of all work done under the provisions of this section, except that done by the railway companies, which payment shall be credited as part of the 50 per cent which the United States contributes toward the expenses of the District of Columbia for that year; and all payments shall be made by the Secretary of the Treasury on the warrant or order of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia or a majority thereof, in such amounts and at such times as they may deem safe and proper in view of the progress of the work: That if any street railway company shall neglect or refuse to perform the work required by this act, said pavement shall be laid between the tracks and exterior thereto of such railway by the District of Columbia; and if such company shall fail or refuse to pay the sum due from them in respect of the work done by or under the orders of the proper officials of said District in such case of the neglect or refusal of such railway company to perform the work required as aforesaid, the Commissioners of the District of Columbia shall issue certificates of indebtedness against the property, real or personal, of such railway company, which certificates shall bear interest at the rate of 10 per cent per annum until paid, and which, until they are paid, shall remain and be a lien upon the property on or against which they are issued together with the franchise of said company; and if the said certificates are not paid within one year, the said Commissioners of the District of Columbia may proceed to sell the property against which they are issued, or so much thereof as may be necessary to pay the amount due, such sale to be first duly advertised daily for one week in some newspaper published in the city of Washington, and to be at public auction to the highest bidder. When street railways cross any street or avenue, the pavement between the tracks of such railway shall conform to the pavement used upon such street or avenue, and the companies owning these intersecting railroads shall pay for such pavements in the same manner and proportion as required of other railway companies under the provisions of this section. It shall be the duty of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to see that all water and gas mains, service pipes, and sewer connections are laid upon any street or avenue proposed to be paved or otherwise improved before any such pavement or other permanent works are put down; and the Washington Gas Light Co. under the direction of said commissioners, shall at its own expense take up, lay, and replace all gas mains on any street or avenue to be paved, at such time and place as said commissioners shall direct. The President of the United States may detail from the Engineer Corps of the Army not more than two officers, of rank subordinate to that of the engineer officer belonging to the Board of Commissioners of said District to act as assistants to said engineer commissioner in the discharge of the special duties imposed upon him by the provisions of this act.

SEC. 6. That from and after the 1st day of July, 1878, the board of Metropolitan police and the board of school trustees shall be abolished, and all the powers and duties now exercised by them shall be transferred to the said Commissioners of the District of Columbia, who shall have authority to employ such officers and agents and to adopt such provisions as may be necessary to carry into execution the powers and duties devolved upon them by this act. And the Commissioners of the District of Columbia shall from time to time appoint 10 persons, actual residents of said District of Columbia, to constitute the trustees of public schools of said District, who shall serve without compensation and for such terms as said commissioners shall fix. Said trustees shall have the powers and perform the duties in relation to the care and management of the public schools which are now authorized by law.

SEC. 7. That the offices of sinking-fund commissioners are hereby abolished, and all duties and powers possessed by said commissioners are transferred to and shall be exercised by the Treasurer of the United States, who shall perform the same in accordance with the provisions of existing laws.

SEC. 8. That in lieu of the board of health now authorized by law, the Commissioners of the District of Columbia shall appoint a physician as health officer, whose duty it shall be, under the direction of the said commissioners, to execute and enforce all laws and regulations relating to the public health and vital statistics, and to perform all such duties as may be assigned to him by said commissioners; and the board of health now existing shall, from the date of appointment of said health officer, be abolished.

SEC. 9. That there may be appointed by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, on the recommendation of the health officer, a reasonable number of sanitary inspectors for said District, not exceeding six, to hold such appointment at any one time, of whom two may be physicians, and one shall be a person skilled in the matters of drainage and ventilation; and said commissioners may remove any of the subordinates, and from time to time may prescribe the duties of each; and said inspectors shall be respectively required to make, at least once in two weeks, a report to said health officer, in writing, of their inspections, which shall be preserved on file; and said health officer shall report in writing annually to said Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and so much oftener as they shall require.

SEC. 10. That the commissioners may appoint, on the like recommendation of the health officer, a reasonable number of clerks, but no greater number shall be appointed, and no more persons shall be employed under said health officer than the public interests demand and the appropriation shall justify.

SEC. 11. That the salary of the health officer shall be $3,000 per annum; and the salary of the sanitary inspectors shall not exceed the sum of $1,200 per annum each; and the salary of the clerks and other assistants of the health officer shall not exceed in the aggregate the amount of $7,000, to be apportioned as the Commissioners of the District of Columbia deem best.

Sec. 12. That it shall be the duty of the said commissioners to report to Congress at the next session succeeding their appointment a draft of such additional laws or amendments to existing laws as in their opinion are necessary for the harmonious working of the system hereby adopted, and for the effectual and proper government of the District of Columbia; and said commissioners shall annually report their official doings in detail to Congress on or before the first Monday of December.

Sec. 13. That there shall be no increase of the present amount of the total indebtedness of the District of Columbia; and any officer or person who shall knowingly increase, or aid or abet in increasing, such total indebtedness, except to the amount of the $200,000, as authorized by this act, shall be deemed guilty of a high misdemeanor, and, on conviction thereof, shall be punished by imprisonment not exceeding 10 years and by fine not exceeding $10,000.

Sec. 14. That the term "schoolhouses" in the act of June 17, 1870, chapter 30, was intended to embrace all collegiate establishments actually used for educational purposes, and not for private gain; and that all taxes heretofore imposed upon such establishments in the District of Columbia since the date of said act are hereby remitted, and where the same or any part thereof has been paid, the sum so paid shall be refunded. But if any portion of any said building, house, or grounds in terms excepted is used to secure a rent or income, or for any business purpose, such portion of the same, or a sum equal in value to such portion, shall be taxed.

Sec. 15. That all laws inconsistent with the provisions of this act be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

Approved, June 11, 1878.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Now, Mr. President, that is a positive enactment. In speaking of that, to show that there have been eminent gentlemen who have taken a different view from the Senator from West Virginia, I call attention to the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Eckloff v. The District of Columbia (135 U. S., 240).

The court below—

Says the court in that case, referring to the Supreme Court of the District—placed its decision on what we conceive to be the true significance of the act of 1878. As said by that court, it is to be regarded as an organic act, intended to dispose of the whole question of a government for this District. It is, as it were, a constitution for the District. It is declared by its title to be an act to provide "a permanent form of government for the District." The word permanent is suggestive. It implies that prior systems had been temporary and provisional. As permanent it is complete in itself. It is the system of government. The powers which are conferred are organic powers. We look to the act itself for their extent and limitations. It is not one act in a series of legislation, and to be made to fit into the provisions of the prior legislation, but is a single complete act, the outcome of previous experiments, and the final judgment of Congress as to the system of government which should obtain. It is the constitution of the District, and its grants of power are to be taken as new and independent grants, and expressing in themselves both their extent and limitations. Such was the view taken by the court below, and such, we believe, is the true view to be taken of the statute.

So we have here, Mr. President, the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States that this is more than a mere attitude of mind, and that it is the constitution of the District of Columbia. That view has been maintained ever since 1878, when the organic act was passed, and has been so acted upon by Congress and by the people of the District.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President—

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WORKS. The Senator from West Virginia does not seem to be here to answer with respect to—

Mr. CHILTON. The Senator from West Virginia is here.

Mr. WORKS. I beg pardon. Then I will say what I have to say on my own account. I have never maintained that the act itself was a mere attitude of mind. My position is that the effect of the act is to create the District of Columbia a mere agency of the Government; it has no distinct functions of its own of any kind either to raise revenue or to maintain a treasury or anything of the sort; that therefore the District, even conceding the whole effect of the bill, is merely a shell, it has no practical existence.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I do not believe the Senator from California used the expression "attitude of mind" but we who have differed from the Senator from West Virginia are included in the very broad category of being in a sort of fog upon the meaning and intent of the act of 1878.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President—

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. CHILTON. Does the Senator regard Judge Worthington, of the city of Washington, as a lawyer and man who knows something about the government of the District of Columbia?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. He is a very able man.

Mr. CHILTON. What do you think of his opinion when he was appearing as an advocate? Do you think his opinion was purely a fiction?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I will say that while I have a very high regard for the ability of this distinguished lawyer I have a higher opinion of the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States which I read before the Senator came into the Chamber.

However that may be, Mr. President, the people of the District since that last act went into effect have acted under it and upon its terms and conditions exactly as the people of a Territory would act under a constitution which had been adopted by the people and by the Congress of the United States.

I know as well as the Senators do that it is an act which may be repealed. It may be amended, it may be dealt with as any other act of Congress, but it goes deeper and has greater significance than that in view of the fact that at the time it was enacted it was intended to be a permanent act for the government of the District, and the people here have lived up to its provisions. In Congress itself, although there have been repeated efforts to change the organic act, they have failed in every instance to accomplish its utter downfall and destruction, and I think it ought not to be disturbed now.

I am very glad indeed to see that one of the members of this joint select commission, the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY], was in utter disagreement with the distinguished Senator from West Virginia and the distinguished Senator from California on this subject.

Let me as briefly as possible review the history of the District, its government, and the conditions which prevail under the act of 1878, and the results likely to follow from the proposed change.

Under its constitutional authority and responsibility Congress is vested with exclusive jurisdiction over the 10 miles square set apart as the seat of Government of the United States. In the exercise of that authority and the discharge of that responsibility Congress has been called upon from time to time to consider the matter of District government and to determine the manner in which the municipal organization shall be maintained. For many years, however, that duty was neglected and the District was permitted to develop municipally and as a community with but little attention from the United States and with less assistance. Definitely restricted in area by the original act of creation out of soil given by two States, and subsequently reduced in area by the retrocession to Virginia, the District has never had before it the possibility of growth into a great commercial or industrial center. It has, indeed, been kept by deliberate policy from growth in that direction and is now regarded permanently as a place for the maintenance exclusively of the business of government, with incidental municipal organization for the care of the community thus created.

It is not to be said that Congress has discharged its duty toward its ward, the District of Columbia, in full conscientiousness. It has left it neglected during long periods and has, in the moments of attention, treated it at times harshly and with a singular injustice and inability to realize the needs and rights of the voteless citizens intrusted to its care. In 1878, after a long procedure of inquiry, which was the climax of decades of congressional inattention and indifference, resulting in the virtual bankruptcy of the District, Congress passed an act which placed upon the United States the burden of one half of the expenses of the National Capital municipality and the other half upon the taxpayers of the District.

The inquiry which led to the act of 1878, which has come to be known as the organic act, was exhaustively conducted by Members of the House and Senate in a practical effort to secure the most equitable and workable method of providing for the development of Washington the city as well as Washington the Capital. Experiments had been tried which had proved failures. It was plain that the municipal administration could not be maintained upon the old basis of corporations and levy courts or upon the later basis of the territorial government.

It is, of course, within the power of Congress to amend or repeal any enactment. Nothing in our system of government is fixed beyond the possibility of change. Even the Constitution of the United States itself can be amended by one of two processes, and it has been several times so amended by the invocation of one of those processes. But every change is attended with formalities, with ample notice, with care that the change is not hastily effected. When the organic act of the District of Columbia was adopted in 1878 it was recognized by the District and viewed by Congress as, in a way, a constitution; in a way, I may say, of a guaranty of future relationship and obligation, not to be lightly amended or changed, not to be modified by indirection, but to be observed in good faith and with strictness in its essentials so that from year to year, from decade to decade the District would know what was expected of it, and what it might expect from the United States save in the mere details of legislative enactments.

Although from time to time after the enactment of 1878 there were protests by Members of both Houses, it was viewed generally as equitable, as practicable, and most of all as assuring for the first time in the history of the District the proper development of the seat of government as a Capital worthy of the United States and befitting its dignity among the nations of the world. No one can hold that Washington did not prosper as a community under the organic act. It was intended that it should prosper, that its people should be relieved of the burden of hopeless indebtedness, should be given the benefit of public improvements adequately financed, should enjoy municipal life. It was intended that Washington should become more attractive, that it should be lifted from the slough into which it had fallen as a result of long years of neglect and haphazard improvements, and inadequate provision of the bare necessities of municipal life.

The organic act was a great success. Had it been designed by Congress as a temporary expedient, however, it may be questioned whether it would have been so successful. With permanency as the foundation after years of transitions the District grew from its own impulses, grew in the spirit and in the flesh, expanded beyond its boundaries, became a live municipality. Had there been a time limit on the organic act, expressed or implied or reserved, that growth would never have occurred. Washington went forward in good faith, confident that Congress in equal good faith would not destroy or change the basis of its new development.

And the course of Congress during over a quarter of a century, nearly a third of a century, justified the belief that the act of 1878 was in truth organic, that it was a foundation, that it was not an expedient or an experiment. Now and again efforts were made to evade the Federal obligation of equal sharing of the District's cost of maintenance, but in the main these efforts were always defeated and the organic act was recognized until a very recent time as a fixed equity for a change in which there was no reason and no necessity.

It would have been infinitely better if 10 years ago, when these efforts began to be made in one form and another, Congress had deliberately referred the matter to some commission, as it did in the seventies, to ascertain whether the relationship established in 1878 was equitable still, whether the 50 per cent payments by the United States were still necessary or desirable, whether the District should pay more than half of the cost or less in view of the change of conditions since the organic act was adopted.

That conditions to-day are greatly different from those that prevailed when the organic act was passed is evidenced at a single glance at the Washington which lies around this building. The changes have been physical, social, economic, and political. Washington has become a city of permanent homes. It has become a great social, artistic, and literary center. It has grown to be one of the great convention cities of the country. It has not grown in business save as it has needed to grow to care for its own necessities. It has become infinitely more comfortable, more agreeable, more secure. It is healthier. It has grown in beauty.

These changes are the result of the equity underlying the act of 1878, the equity of equal financial responsibility, the equity of congressional interest. The United States has done much on its own account toward making Washington attractive and dignified and giving it a world-wide prestige. But the people of Washington have done no less. They have built beautiful homes, have done their share of improvements, have given lands for street extensions, have invested their money wisely and effectively, and have become as never before a community of highly developed public spirit. It is to me a marvel that without political rights, with no outlet for the expression of their views save their own neighborhood associations, with no representatives to speak for them before their legislature save those who volunteer this difficult service, with no voice in the selection of their rulers, and barred by a foolish law of apportionment from employment in the Government of the United States, the people of Washington have done so well and are to-day such splendid examples of American citizenship.

Mr. President, here let me say that some time ago I introduced in the Senate a proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States so as to permit the people of the District to have representation in Congress. It is the only government in the civilized world that is taxed without any representation. As yet nothing has come of this effort in behalf of this splendid and typically American citizenship.

Although the organic act has been maintained for all these years as the guiding principle in the treatment of the District by Congress, there has been an increasing disposition for some time to disregard it, to nullify it by indirection. These efforts have persisted for more than a decade, culminating in the action of the last session. Meanwhile the essential factor of this relationship between the District and the Government—the equal division of cost of capital maintenance—has been disregarded now and again. Under a strict observance of the organic act a surplus of District tax money is impossible, as according to the act of 1878 the District supposedly raises only so much by taxation as is necessary to meet half the cost of the estimated expenses. Actually, as a matter of practice, the appropriations have been made on the basis of the estimated revenues, but even under that system there should never be a surplus of District tax revenues. Nevertheless, occasionally Congress has failed to appropriate a sum equal to twice the amount of the District's revenues, thus leaving a surplus of local tax funds unmatched by Federal dollars. This process, continued for several years, resulted in the accumulation of a large amount of unused District money, which, in equity, should have been appropriated for some needed public work on the half-and-half basis. Instead, however, of doing this, Congress took this surplus and applied it to the payment, exclusively out of District revenues, of a large share of the cost of making a great aqueduct extension. It also took a considerable sum of this surplus and applied it to the cost of entertaining the Grand Army of the Republic on the occasion of its encampment here in 1893, without an equal sum of Federal money.

These inequities were never justified by any condition of the Federal Treasury. Congress yielded to a temptation presented by the spectacle of a large sum of District tax money lying idle in the Treasury.

The distinguished Senator from West Virginia complained a while ago that the District is the Mecca to which the eyes of the wealthy turn, and that it is a place to which this class come in order that they may escape taxation, particularly on intangible property.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President—

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. If the joint select committee had devised some system, not through the repeal and destruction of this organic act but to reach and assess property that it is charged is brought here to escape taxation, they would have done not only the District good but the National Government as well.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I yield.

Mr. CHILTON. I wish to say to the Senator that I did not make exactly the statement he attributes to me. I said it had been charged that this was the home of the tax dodger. I did not say that we said that in our report, and that I thought that myself. I distinctly stated, as the report will show, that we did not propose to tax intangible property. I made no such criticism.

I want to say to the Senator in regard to the inequitable thing he speaks of regarding the management and the improvement of streets having one rule for what we might call the rural part of the city and another for that part which is in the business and residential section. Certainly, the plan by which the Government shall take all that upon its shoulders and relieve property of individuals entirely would be preferable. The report of the committee contemplates that the individual shall have nothing to do with pavements and improvements, but that all of it shall be done, as it should be done, in our opinion, out of the Public Treasury.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I understand the full purport of the report of the joint committee; I studied it with a good deal of interest and followed the proceedings of the committee; but I predict, Mr. President, that if the Congress adopts the recommendations of the committee, appropriations will never be large enough to do more than provide for the actual and necessary expenses of the District, and the matter of making Washington what it ought to be, the most beautiful Capital in the world, will be entirely neglected. Congress will not appropriate money in excess of the taxes paid into the Treasury. Even now, although the general average is fifty-fifty, for many years Congress did not appropriate 50 per cent, and sometimes provided for barely enough to defray the expenses of the Government.

During the recent period of insidious attacks upon the organic act a disposition has prevailed to put more and more items upon the whole-cost basis; that is, to force the District here and there to bear the full burden of maintenance. This was done in the case of the playgrounds, which are as much a part of the municipal system as the schools, the police, the fire department, or the health service.

It is urged by those who contend against the continuation of the organic act that under it the District has become an under-taxed community. For a long time this charge was made in the course of debates on the District bill and other measures, but was not effectively refuted on the floor of Congress, although statistics were being published in Washington repeatedly demonstrating its fallacy.

Mr. President, I am a small property owner here, but I want to say that the assessment rate and the taxes are as high as they are in the progressive and growing city of Portland, Oreg., where the people are forging ahead and beautifying the city from local taxation. Every foot of property is subject to taxation except a few exemptions made by law.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes; I yield.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator has very wisely said that there is great danger that adequate appropriations will not be made for the upbuilding and beautification of the city of Washington. The Senator has spoken truthfully. I have been trying for 25 or 26 years to do what I could for Washington, for the betterment of the citizens, and for the beautification of the city. It just occurs to me at this moment that twice, if not three times, I have been instrumental in passing a bill through the Senate, having introduced it myself, for the establishment of a home for the feeble-minded in the District of Columbia, something that every State in the Union has, but it has had no consideration elsewhere. I was instrumental in getting a bill through for an inebriate asylum in the District of Columbia, but it fell by the wayside. I have been struggling for a great many years to get a decent municipal hospital, but we have not got it yet. I have taken great interest in a municipal lodging house. The one we have here would be a disgrace to any community on the face of the earth. I have been interested in a great many other improvements, but we do not get them. The Senate passes appropriations for them, but they fail.

The Senator from California [Mr. WORKS] to-day spoke of the alleys of the District of Columbia. We have done what we could in that direction, but we do not get sufficient appropriations to clean them up. So I say to the Senator that he is uttering words of truth and wisdom when he says that what we want is a more liberal policy on the part of the Government toward the District of Columbia.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I do not think there is any question about that; and I want to say to the Senate that I can verify the statement which the Senator from New Hampshire makes with reference to his efforts in behalf of this District. I am glad, indeed, that he has called attention to these things, because in the "wild and woolly West" we treat diseased animals with more consideration and more humanity than the poor and unfortunate of the human family are treated in this the Capital of the Nation.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I might have added that for 10 years I advocated the establishment—and other Senators also did so—of a tuberculosis hospital. We have it now, but it took us a good while to get it.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. That is true, Mr. President. It may be that Congress does not mean to be niggardly on these subjects, but, like the Senator from New Hampshire, since I have been here I have taken very great interest in the affairs of the District. I have visited some of its eleemosynary institutions and its hospitals. Less than a week ago I visited a hospital in the eastern section of the city that pretends to be supported by the Congress of the United States—

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. It is a disgrace.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. It is a disgrace to a civilized people, and particularly to the Capital of the Nation. Mr. President, in that place are to be found men, women, and children, black and white, and of different nationalities, crowded into old and out-of-date structures, so poorly equipped as not to protect the inmates from the inclemencies of the weather or against insect life, the bearers of every form of infection and disease.

I say it may not be niggardliness on the part of Congress, but sure it is that Congress does not take enough interest in the subject to go and advise itself about the conditions which exist here.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I do.

Mr. CHILTON. Of course it is very pleasant to have the members of the Appropriations Committee hand bouquets to one another on the floor of the Senate and criticize the rest of us for not making liberal appropriations—

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I am not criticizing the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. CHILTON. But I want to say now we may get this proposition agreed to by unanimous consent if the Committee on Appropriations has struck a liberal attitude in its history and if they want to do what the joint committee has recommended let them go on with their appropriations; but what I do not understand and what I should like to have the Senator explain is how he has gotten himself worked up to a position where he can see that we can remedy these things any better under a fiction than we can by ourselves getting down on the ground and admitting the facts?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, the Senator keeps talking about a fiction, an attitude of mind. The organic act is a fact; it is an act of Congress passed in 1878 and which has been construed by the Supreme Court of the United States as being "a constitution for the District of Columbia"—a permanent form of government.

I am not criticizing the Senator from West Virginia; I am criticizing Congress because it does not do its whole duty toward the District. The Senate committee are frequently liberal, but the Senator knows the difficulties they have about getting appropriations through both Houses.

The suggestion has been made here that the distinguished chairman of this committee has been looking after the larger interests. If Senators will take the trouble to examine the bill, they will find that many of the increases in the bill have been in behalf of the moderately paid employee who does not get enough to live on.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I do.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Does not the Senator from Oregon think that it shows rather a dereliction of duty on the part of officers in charge of the government of this city in not calling attention to the sad condition of the hospital which the Senator has just described, and which, I agree with him, is a disgrace to the civilization of the country?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Even when estimates are made Congress fails to allow for them, but, on the contrary, reduces the appropriations far below the estimates.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Mr. President, we have more than once put into our bill an appropriation for a hospital here for municipal purposes, and it has been taken out; we could not carry the appropriation through.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I confess this is the first time I have ever heard that neglect mentioned on the floor of the Senate since I came here. The Senator from Oregon and I have talked about this matter privately, but this is the first time that I have heard the attention of Congress called to the condition of that hospital.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have referred to the matter on the floor of the Senate once before, and I am again calling attention to these conditions.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Mr. President, during the consideration of the last District of Columbia appropriation bill, I myself called attention to this hospital, and I then pronounced it as a disgrace to the city of Washington.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I desire to say that I shall be glad at any time to vote any amount of money which may be necessary for the improvement of the character of that hospital.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I want it understood that I am not criticizing the men who have these institutions in charge. They do the very best they can with the money that Congress allows them, and they are sometimes compelled to create small deficiencies, but, as a rule, they are afraid to do that. I merely invite Senators to visit these places and see for themselves. I am calling attention to the delinquencies of Congress, and I predict that, if the proposition urged by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON] becomes the law, those people will be worse off next year than they are this year, and that Congress will not make the appropriation necessary to meet the conditions.

Mr. OVERMAN. Was the item for the hospital in the estimate sent in by the commissioners? The committee acted upon the estimate sent in by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and if it has not been provided does not the fault lie at the feet of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Not entirely. I think Congress, in the first instance, is responsible. Congress holds the purse strings, and even when the appropriations are increased in the Senate they are usually reduced in conference. I ask the chairman of the committee How much does the Senate bill increase the appropriations as the bill came to us from the House?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. It increases the amount carried by the House bill about $3,000,000.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Three million dollars.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, the estimates which came to Congress through the regular channels for the District of Columbia this year amounted to $15,476,676.34.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. How much is appropriated in the bill as it came to the Senate?

Mr. GALLINGER. As the bill came to the Senate it carried $11,931,817.34, nearly $4,000,000 less than the estimates. The Senate committee has increased the amount to $14,952,002.96, or about $500,000 less than the estimates.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. That answers the distinguished Senator from North Carolina. The bill comes to the Senate carrying $11,931,817.34, when the estimates were $15,476,676.34.

Mr. OVERMAN. What I asked the Senator was whether the hospital had been estimated for. When an estimate is made and sent to the committee, the committee usually follow the estimate.

Mr. GALLINGER. It has been estimated for.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The Senator asked the question if the Commissioners of the District were not responsible for this neglect. I say no. They came to Congress this year with estimates of $15,000,000, and they got two-thirds of that amount in the House, while the Senate increases it not quite up to the estimate.

Mr. OVERMAN. I was asking the Senator in reference to this particular hospital.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes.

Mr. SAULSBURY. If the Senator will yield for a statement, the point he is bringing up shows very strongly how the law in relation to the conduct of District affairs might be improved very greatly. I do not think that any fault can be charged against the District Commissioners, for the reason that they are limited in their estimates to double the amount that is raised by taxation; and, even when so limited, when they come to Congress they do not secure all they estimate for.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Certainly not.

Mr. SAULSBURY. So that the taxing laws of this District undoubtedly need very great modification, because there should be lodged somewhere in somebody other than the assessor a discretion in tax matters. At present there is a positive rule that property shall be assessed at a valuation of two-thirds; and, in fact, in regard to the raising of funds in the District there is no discretion anywhere which may enable it to raise money for the needs of the District as those needs arise.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I appreciate what the Senator says; and I am not criticizing the District Commissioners or any other city official. Their power and authority are limited. My criticism is directed to Congress and not to any particular individual. I say that Congress does not treat the unfortunates of the District of Columbia as humanely as most of the States treat the brute creation. That is a pretty broad statement to make, but I say that is true because I know from actual observation.

Mr. President, I say to you without fear of contradiction, that the patients in the Washington Asylum are not housed as well as the cows kept at the insane asylum of the State of Oregon, for the use of the patients at that institution. These latter are housed in modern barns, with screens to keep out the flies and other insects, and with running water and other up-to-date appliances. I was led to digress from what I had in mind by the suggestion of the Senator from New Hampshire, and I am glad that he called attention to the matters suggested by him, and I hope Members of the Senate will visit these institutions and verify what has been said on the subject.

Mr. GALLINGER. And, Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, in response to the suggestion made by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN], I will say that I have on a great many occasions called attention in the debates in the Senate to that wretched institution which we call a municipal hospital in Washington.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. And tried to secure an appropriation to remedy the condition?

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Now, Mr. President, if we revert to the system that the Senator from West Virginia proposes, the conditions will be even worse than they are now.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I am not asking the question I am about to ask in any spirit of criticism, but for information. As I understand the situation, Congress can not appropriate more than the District Commissioners estimate for; that is, Congress can not directly impose a tax upon the property in the District. That property is assessed by the assessor and the amount to be obtained from that assessment, plus an equal amount supposed to be contributed by the Government, is the limit of what the commissioners, who are the ones who make the estimate, can estimate for; but Congress can not of its own volition by an appropriation in excess of that impose any additional tax upon the District. I ask whether that is not the case?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I think not. I think that Congress is limited in its appropriations to 50 per cent of the amount of the estimates approved by them, the remaining 50 per cent of such approved estimates to be levied and assessed upon the taxable property of the District.

Mr. CLAPP. In other words, the Senate could not now go ahead and add $2,000,000 more, say, for hospitals and schools, having already reached in the bill reported by the committee the limit under the present assessment.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I do not know that they have done that. I have not examined the estimates critically or the assessment roll for the current year.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that Congress does not appropriate in excess of the estimates that are made. The Senate committee has recommended $3,000,000 additional, thus approximating the estimates made by the commissioners.

Mr. CLAPP. I understand that; but I am trying to get at the fault here. Under the present system, as outlined by the Senator from West Virginia this afternoon, the assessor is bound by certain rules in making the assessment. The assessment, of course, is the basis of the tax and is the basis also of the appropriations. Consequently, no matter how deplorable the conditions at the hospital may be, until we get some system under which other than by action of the assessor, bound as he is automatically by law, Congress can apply the remedy by additional appropriations.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. On several occasions an appropriation for this hospital has been put in the bill in the Senate and subsequently stricken out.

Mr. CLAPP. I am speaking of the condition that the Senator from Oregon has described. He says, very properly, that the District authorities are not to blame. That is undoubtedly true; but, on the other hand, it seems to me that a system exists here under which Congress is also limited. There is the evil that ought to be remedied.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The fault lies largely in the inaction of Congress. It does not appropriate to the limit.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. If Congress would go up to the limit of appropriations which it might make for the District, there would be a healthy condition.

Mr. CLAPP. In this bill we approach the limit, do we not?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. For this year we nearly approach it.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. That can not be said to be so as yet, for, in the first place, we do not know what will happen when the bill gets into conference.

Mr. CLAPP. But assuming that the larger amount will be granted in conference?

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Then we will come up to within about $500,000 of the estimate.

Mr. CLAPP. Exactly.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. But we do not know what will be taken out before the bill finally becomes a law. In other years appropriations have been made by the Senate committee, from which they have been compelled to recede.

Mr. CLAPP. Now, if the Senator should discover to-day some need in the District of Columbia that required an additional million dollars, the hands of the Senate would be tied, as I understand?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Is that quite so?

Mr. CLAPP. That is what I am asking.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. No; it is not entirely correct to say that. I have stated the rule of apportionment as between Congress and the revenue derived from taxing the property of the District.

Mr. CLAPP. Then there is a condition here under which it may be that neither the District nor the Congress is to blame, but the fault lies with the condition.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I will say to the Senator, however, that local taxes could be increased if it were necessary, and then, of course, under the present law the appropriations could be increased.

Mr. CLAPP. But Congress could not enforce such an increase.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. The rate of taxation could be increased in the District. The tax rate now is a dollar a half a hundred. That could be made higher.

Mr. CLAPP. After the assessment has been made?

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. No; not after the assessment has been made.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Let me ask the chairman of the committee this question: The commissioners having estimated $15,000,000, suppose Congress wanted to appropriate $8,000,000 as the contribution of the General Government, which would be more than half of the revenues raised in the District, is there anything in the law that would prevent Congress from appropriating more than one-half of the expenses of the District?

Mr. CLAPP. No; except that Congress would be appropriating more than its share, more than half.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Yes; that is true.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, Congress has in the past appropriated more than the share as a debt against the District, which is paid back to the Government, I think, at the rate of 2 per cent.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The law now governing the matter is contained in the act of 1878. That act was passed, containing the following legislative provision:

To the extent to which Congress shall approve of said estimates—

That is, the estimates made by the officers of the District—

Congress shall appropriate the amount of 50 per cent thereof, and the remaining 50 per cent of such approved estimate shall be levied and assessed upon the taxable property and privileges in said District other than the property of the United States and the District of Columbia.

Now, Mr. President, continuing after this digression—which I assure you I did not intend—speaking again of the charge of underassessment upon the citizens of the District, permit me to say that for a long time this charge was made in the course of debates on the District bill and other measures, but was not effectively refuted on the floor of Congress, although statistics were being published in Washington repeatedly demonstrating its fallacy. The result of this iteration was that it came actually to be believed in some quarters that the effect of the half-and-half system was to absolve the people of the District from taxation to such an extent that they had become mendicants upon the Federal bounty. When the matter was considered by the joint select committee named at the last session of Congress, however, abundant proof was brought forward by representatives of the citizens to show its complete lack of foundation. The joint committee's report shows on the face of it, in its conclusions, that the citizens here are taxed at reasonable rates.

Mr. SAULSBURY. That is what it says.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes; it says so in express terms. So that from the charge that the District people here were mendicants before Congress the report of the committee absolves them, and shows that they are taxed about as are the people in other cities of the same size.

The only way to measure taxation comparatively is by per capita tax payments; that is, the amount of money which the average citizen pays in taxes.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. CHILTON. I know the Senator does not want to misquote the report. The statement which was made expressly confines it to the tax upon real estate. I read it this morning. It does not pretend to decide this moot question that originated all of this talk about intangible property. It simply says that the taxes upon real estate are about fair, about reasonable, as compared with cities with which this city should be compared in making that kind of an estimate.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, I happened to be a member of that committee, and I think the chairman of the committee, the Senator from West Virginia, is quite wrong in saying that that refers to real estate. If the Senator from Oregon will permit me, I will refer to two lines of this report, which will show that he is mistaken.

Mr. CHILTON. What page?

Mr. SAULSBURY. On page 12. The committee says:

We would therefore recommend that the people of Washington pay a tax comparable in assessment rate and amount to that tax paid by the residents of other cities similar in population and location to the city of Washington.

This, we believe, is eminently fair, and there should be no greater exaction in taxation from the people of the District of Columbia.

And that, they say, the people of the District have done in their $16 per capita rate.

Mr. CHILTON. If the Senator will look at page 8, which I have already put in the Record—I do not want to do so again—that all fits in with the recommendation of the committee and with the statement that this only relates to the tax upon real estate; that is all.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Assuming, however, that that is correct, the general conclusion of the committee was that, leaving out of consideration a lot of property that ought to be brought under the taxing power, still the people of the District are reasonably taxed. Now, I repeat that this committee would have erected a monument to themselves if they had suggested some system for bringing within the taxing power this property which they say escapes taxation. It would not only relieve the citizens of the District who now pay taxes, but it would relieve the Government of the United States from an additional burden and so lower the appropriation made by Congress.

The committee in its report says:

The subjects of taxation in Washington differ somewhat from those of many other American cities. Here, for instance, intangible personal property is not a subject of taxation, and taxes on franchises and earnings of public-service corporations are not classed as personal taxes.

Why did not the committee bring in some system for reaching this class of property that they say is escaping taxation instead of suggesting that a well-tried plan of 38 years should be abandoned and a new system attempted?

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I yield.

Mr. CHILTON. While the Senator says he is not criticizing, yet he does ask, with a vigor which implies criticism, that the committee should have proposed something to the Congress. If he will look at the resolution appointing the committee, he will find that the sole purpose of the appointment of the committee was to ascertain what was a just proportion of the burdens of government to be borne by the property of the District and the proportion to be borne by the Government. We had no power to go further. That would have been overstepping the bounds of the commitment which we had.

Mr. President, I want to answer what the Senator is saying about that. We found many other things which should be said in favor of the people of the District. For instance, we found that the number of property holders here who pay taxes is comparatively small; in other words, that a large proportion of the people here do not pay taxes, and for that reason the per capita estimate that is given here is really complimentary to the people of the District who do pay taxes. Nobody is criticizing the taxpayers of the city, and in all that the Senator says as to the needs of the city and the duty of Congress we concur, and the report so shows. But we are still up to the question, How are you going to remedy it, and what difference does this fiction of half-and-half make?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I concede the limitation upon the powers of the joint select committee, but the committee had it in its power to make some very valuable suggestions there as to the way to reach the tax dodgers. They did make some suggestions. They did not have power to do that much, but they did make some; but they did not make the right kind of suggestions to meet the difficulties which they point out in their report.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, with the permission of the Senator from Oregon—

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I yield.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I want to say that I do not enjoy occupying the position of the "innocent bystander" who is getting shot in this matter. I do think the Senator from Oregon is criticizing the committee, and is criticizing it unjustly. I would not have signed this report had it recommended the abolition of the half-and-half system until the committee had proposed some different method of assessment and collection of taxes and appropriation by Congress. That committee did no such thing.

The only thing that the committee said which can be construed into a recommendation of its abolition is that it need not be continued. That need, in my judgment, will exist until a better system of appropriation is devised.

I think the criticism of the Senator from Oregon, had we been charged with the duty of proposing some other than the present system, would be a perfectly good criticism of the committee. We were not, however, charged with that duty. It may be that we should have asked for authority to bring in a bill of that sort, proposing such changes as we thought would better the conditions in this city; but we did not do it, as that would have necessitated asking for additional power. Now, we might possibly have brought it in and then asked that it be considered. I should have been very glad for myself, as one member of the committee, to do that; but if this report had said that the half-and-half system should be abolished until some better system was proposed, I would not have signed it.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I am glad to have the Senator say that he is opposed to the repeal of the half-and-half principle, Mr. President.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. CHILTON. The statement of the Senator from Delaware, it seems to me, makes it proper to make a correction at that point. I can not see how anyone can say that this committee did not specifically and affirmatively make another recommendation to the Congress. It is inexplicable to me how anyone can read this report and then charge the committee not only with having recommended against the half-and-half plan but with failure to recommend something specifically and affirmatively to take its place.

If the Senator will pardon me for just a word, there never has been a time when there has been any act of Congress upon the statute books which the next Congress could not repeal; there is not now and there can not be any under the present Constitution. We recommend that we do what? That instead of taking the plan—it is not a system—instead of taking the old plan of Congress, adopted in 1878, of appropriating half-and-half, so to speak, that hereafter Congress shall fix definitely what the people of the District shall be taxed, and that the Government shall pay all of the balance, whether it is four-fifths, two-thirds, five-sixths, or one-half. That is what we adopted, and we especially recommended it. It takes no system. It takes no act of Congress. It can be done in this appropriation bill. It does not require any report of a committee. We are talking about something that we know we can do right in this appropriation bill, because that is the way it always has been done in the past.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I concede that Congress can do as it sees fit in the matter of legislation affecting the District. The question is as to the wisdom of changing the organic act of 1878. I think it unwise.

I am advised by people who live here, and who know what they are talking about, that since this agitation for the repeal of the half-and-half plan, properties have depreciated in value. In other words, it has been accepted as a sort of a constitution for the District. Values have adjusted themselves around it. People have gone ahead and invested, and relied upon the good faith of the Government to keep their part of the contract, believing this to be a permanent form of government; and yet this constant agitation on the subject unsettles values. Men do not know what to do. They do not know what their taxes may be next year. They are afraid to invest; and, Mr. President, once for all, any proposition to change the half-and-half plan ought to be so overwhelmingly voted down at this time that it will never be brought up again.

Now, speaking about this charge of undervaluation again, the per capita tax levy, the amount paid by the average citizen, is a composite of the tax rate and the assessment. If the assessment and the rate are low, the tax levy will be low. If the assessment is high and the rate is low, the tax levy will be average; and just so, if the tax rate is high and the assessment is low; whereas if the assessment is high and the rate is high, the tax levy will be high. That is an economic fact. In order to find out whether the people of Washington pay much or little in taxes it is necessary to combine the rate and the assessment, bringing everything to the same standard. When this is done it appears conclusively that Washington is not undertaxed. On the contrary, it is highly taxed. The participation of the Government in capital maintenance, theoretically on the half-and-half basis, has not relieved the average Washingtonian from any share of the tax burden which, as an average American, he ought to pay. In 1913, the last year for which comparative figures are obtainable, the District's per capita property tax was $16. It was exceeded by only 42 out of 198 cities having more than 30,000 population, while in 158 of those cities the per capita tax was smaller. It was smaller in Baltimore, in Richmond, in New Orleans, Indianapolis, and Louisville, for instance. Even in wealthy Chicago it was exceeded by only 60 cents, and in Cleveland by only 9 cents. A study of the taxation figures presented to the joint select committee leaves the unavoidable conclusion, instead of being an undertaxed community, it is highly taxed. And there is a reason for it, Mr. President. All you have to do is to go down here on the Mall and walk from one end of it to the other and see the magnificent properties there that are absolutely exempted from taxation. If the Government properties in this city—and I have read the statements here as to the value of the properties of the United States in the District of Columbia—were assessed at their just valuation, there is not any question but that the United States would pay as much as half, if not more than that, toward the support of the District.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that in 1914 the valuation of the property of the Government was $396,000,000, as against about $392,000,000 for the property of the citizens of the District of Columbia. In other words, the Government property was valued at $4,000,000 more than the property of the citizens of the District of Columbia, showing that the half-and-half plan is not unjust to the Government.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. That is the reason, Mr. President, why there is no justice in interfering with the fifty-fifty provision of the organic act. If any change is to be made, the Government of the United States ought to pay more. The most valuable properties in the city of Washington are owned by the United States, and they are exempted from taxation.

Much has been made in the attacks upon the organic act of inequalities of assessment in this city. It is probably true that there are inequalities. They are acknowledged frankly by the citizens who have endeavored to maintain the half-and-half system by means of their public-spirited labors before Congress. They are an inevitable result of our taxation methods. They exist everywhere, in the cities of all the States represented in this body. Every Senator here knows that in his own home town there are assessment inequalities. Until you get superhuman tax assessors you will have these inequalities. They are no worse in Washington than elsewhere.

Further, Mr. President, many of the citizens of this District hesitate to come up before the committees of Congress. They hesitate to confer with the individual Congressmen or to talk to them about their needs. I do not know why it is, Mr. President, but it is so in every capital city. I think it is unfortunate that there is a sort of chasm between Congress and the citizens of the District, speaking, of course, in a general way.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, will the Senator pardon me?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Certainly.

Mr. CLAPP. I do not think it is that. I think the Senator himself, if he were a resident of this District, would be loath to hang around and try to importune men that he knew were busy. There is a natural hesitation which the Senator would feel himself if he were a citizen of the District. Not having been a Member of the Senate, not possessing the privilege of the floor, he would hesitate to come up here to the Senate.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I am not claiming that the citizens should feel that way.

Mr. CLAPP. Oh, no. I know the Senator is not. He is referring to a condition.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. It is a condition that exists. It is a mental attitude, as the Senator from West Virginia says.

One of the leading opponents of the half-and-half system came forward early in the discussion, in testimony before a committee, and made the claim that if the District realty were properly assessed it would show a valuation in 1912 of $744,000,000, although in that year it was assessed for only $330,000,000. It is extraordinary how this statement persisted in commanding belief and consideration, although it was absurd up its face and would not stand analysis for a moment. It seems to have been at the bottom of all this persistent attack upon a system that has given the American people a magnificent capital city of which they are to-day so proud. This grotesque claim of a true assessment value in Washington of $744,000,000 was completely shot to pieces in the course of the hearings before the joint select committee, and I am glad to say that it has never been seriously heard from since, although by a singular persistence, the idea of an under-taxed Washington, which was so effectively refuted during that hearing, has cropped out again in the course of a debate previously had upon this bill.

Mr. President, I believe the testimony before this committee showed that the assessments varied from one-half to two-thirds of the cash value of the property. I venture to say that there is not a city in the United States where that same rule does not prevail. Not only does it prevail with reference to municipal property, but it prevails with reference to farm property. It is so in my State, and I think I may safely say it is true in nearly all the States.

It was shown before the joint select committee that if Washington, in truth, had real property actually worth $744,000,000 upon a proper assessment it would raise in taxation from that source alone $11,160,000 and would thus raise from that single source more than was raised in that year of 1912 from both realty and personalty by such cities as Cleveland, Baltimore, Detroit, Buffalo, Cincinnati, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Milwaukee, Newark, and New Orleans. It would have raised more from this single source than was raised from both realty and personalty by Minneapolis and Jersey City combined. That shows the absurdity of the contention.

Illustrations might be multiplied, from the undisputed testimony given before the joint select committee, to show the complete absurdity of this claim of a true valuation in this District of $744,000,000 in 1912. It is needless to go further than to say that the joint select committee accepted that testimony and declared that Washington was fairly taxed and in the main fairly assessed. The committee said:

The annual tax in Washington is approximately $10 per capita. In the judgment of your committee this is a reasonable tax levy at this time, especially when we consider, as we must, that a large proportion of the population here pays but a small amount of the taxes imposed. * * * The committee believes that independently of the question of what should be the proper subjects of taxation in the District of Columbia, the payment of taxes on real estate from the assessments as they are now constituted is a fair and reasonable response in such taxation for municipal benefits received by the citizens of the District.

This bill as it was passed by the House radically departed from the vital principle of the organic act, that of a fixed, dependable ratio of participation by the District and the United States in the maintenance of the Capital. It substituted a sliding scale of indeterminate contribution by the Federal Government. As the bill was passed it made appropriations on the basis of which the District would be paying about 70 per cent and the United States about 30 per cent, roughly speaking, of the cost of capital maintenance. It would be infinitely better to declare in positive terms that henceforth the proportions should be seventy-thirty instead of fifty-fifty than to leave the matter on the basis of the indeterminate shifting percentage. The indefinite contribution plan embodied in this bill as it came to the Senate is full of evil for the District, and is but a sorry discharge of duty by the constitutionally designated District Legislature, the Congress of the United States. It deprives the Capital of the effective safeguard, afforded by the half-and-half plan, against excessive local taxation and of the guarantee of a substantial, annual contribution by the Nation toward the proper maintenance of the District. It furnishes no ground whatever for stimulating and enlarging the Nation's sense of obligation toward the Capital. It was the plan, in truth, upon which Congress treated the District from 1800 to 1878. Throughout that period the national obligation was primary, exclusive, and dominating as it is to-day. With full liberty to measure its obligation to the Capital in dollars and contributing just what it pleased, it actually contributed little or nothing. The result of this fluctuating, indefinite plan was distress for Washington and shame for both Washington and the Nation.

In order to corroborate what I was saying, I only call attention to the arguments of the distinguished men who participated in the organic act of 1878 in an effort to cure the evils that had grown up under former systems.

It has been urged that the abandonment of the half-and-half plan in favor of indefinite contributions varying from year to year would have the effect of stimulating Capital development by the United States alone. There is no reason to believe this. There is no ground for assuming that what it is not compelled by its obligations to do the United States will do freely and generously when relieved of all obligations whatsoever.

Under this bill as it stood when it reached the Senate the citizens of Washington would be deprived of the last vestige of participating and governing themselves which remains to them under the operations of the organic act. It virtually fixes the tax rate and governs the assessment and thereby mulcts the District in a certain sum of tax money and then sweeps that money into the Treasury of the United States to be classed as Federal funds and to be expended with just so much of additional revenue as one Congress after another may see fit to appropriate. It is the last word in taxation without representation.

Why should the organic act be changed? What urgent reason is there for destroying that which has resulted in the Washington of to-day, the Washington of which we, as American citizens, are proud; the Washington which is recognized as developing into the most attractive city in the world? What urgent reason is there for making this change? None has been advanced. It has been shown that the half-and-half plan does not tend to a low taxation here. It has been shown that it has not cost the people of the country at large an appreciable penny to do the Nation's part in Capital maintenance which the framers of the Constitution plainly recognized as part of the Federal responsibility.

The real issue in this case is whether there should be a fixed or indeterminate sharing of the cost between the people of the District and the United States.

From the point of view of the District taxpayer the indeterminate system is a menace and he has reason to shrink from it with dread. Under it every dollar that can be wrung from him by an increased rate or increased assessment, or both, or by the imposition of new and strange forms of taxation, will have the effect of reducing the amount of money paid by the United States and the Federal contribution. It puts a premium upon increasing the District tax revenues, which are to be held, in the future as in the past, within the control of Congress. Even though the total amount expended for District maintenance should never be increased, the almost inevitable result of an indeterminate contribution system would be a gradual swelling of the volume of District tax revenues, an increase of the per capita tax burden upon the average Washingtonian.

As the case stands under the half-and-half system, this matter of taxation operates under an automatic check. Every dollar raised from the District by taxation must be matched by a Federal dollar. As long as the organic act stands, Congress is prevented by national selfishness from greatly and inequitably increasing the local tax revenues lest they call for similarly increased sums from the Federal Treasury. And in this fact alone lies the guarantee of the unrepresented Washingtonian against injustice at the hands of its irresponsible local legislation.

Mr. President, I for one feel a pride in the growth and development of this city, and shall live in the hope that in time to come it may at least equal the beauties of the capitals of Brazil and Argentina and other capitals of the world. I stand opposed to any change in a law that for 38 years has worked beneficially to the people of the city and the District.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I think if Senators will read the first provision of the bill as it came from the House and then read the figures they will see what a great injustice is done in this new plan to the citizens of the District. I want to call the attention of the Senate to this House provision:

That hereafter all appropriations made for the support of the government of the District of Columbia, including all sums appropriated in any general appropriation act indicated to be paid out of the District of Columbia revenues except amounts to pay the interest and sinking fund on the funded debt of said District, shall be paid out of the revenues of the District of Columbia to the extent that the same shall be sufficient therefor and the remainder out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

That is the provision that is sent here by the House.

Now, I want to call the attention of the Senate to the figures. The bill appropriates, as it came to the Senate, $11,662,000. The tax on the District of Columbia would raise from the people of this District $8,235,000. In other words, if the House provision is agreed to the citizens of the District of Columbia will pay of the $11,662,000, $8,235,000, while the General Government will pay only $3,396,000.

Mr. WORKS. Is the Senator giving the figures under the bill as passed by the House?

Mr. CURTIS. I am giving the figures under the bill as it came from the House. Later on I will give the figures under the bill as amended on the report of the Senate committee. I do this, if the Senator will excuse me for a minute, for the reason that the Senator from West Virginia said that this House provision carried out the plans recommended by the joint committee. He also stated that it was fair. I want to ask the Senators here this afternoon if it is fair to compel the citizens of the District of Columbia to contribute $8,200,000 and to take from the Federal Treasury only a little over $3,000,000?

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President—

Mr. CURTIS. I yield.

Mr. WORKS. I want to say that the provision of the House does not carry out the spirit and purpose of the report made by the committee as I understand it. I have never believed that the people of the District ought to be compelled to pay more than half the amount, even under the present system. My contention has been that the Government is not paying enough, instead of paying too much. Therefore the House provision does not meet with my approbation at all.

Mr. CURTIS. I realized that; but I simply call the attention of the Senate to the fact because the chairman of the joint committee, the Senator from West Virginia, does indorse the House plan, and is not, as I understand it, in favor of the proposition submitted by the Senator from California.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President—

Mr. CURTIS. I yield.

Mr. CHILTON. This shows the vice of taking an individual instance without going to the principle. I never have said that. I said to the contrary, that I did not agree with the House as to the amount of some of the appropriations. I judge the principle was carried out, which is simply this, as the Senator from Oregon said: The important thing to the people of the District is to have certainty of taxation. The joint committee reported that they should be taxed a specific sum. I would rather have it even a little lower than the average that we have ascertained, and have fixed taxation, so that every property owner knows what he is to be taxed. Then whatever else is required, little or much, is to be paid by the General Government.

That is the principle announced by the bill as passed by the House. Of course I do not agree with the division that happens to be made, and I am here ready to help the Senator and the committee to rectify it, but the principle is correct. The principle announced by the House makes that certainty of taxation which the Senator from Oregon says he wants. There should be certainty of taxation, and then you have the incentive to Congress to make the appropriations liberal and generous.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, the measure as it came to us from the House carries out the principle advocated by the Senator from West Virginia and shows that that can not be depended upon. The people of this District have been fearful all the time that Congress would not deal liberally with them. That is the trouble. Congress has not dealt liberally with the people of the District of Columbia.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President—

Mr. CURTIS. Congress is constantly cutting down the estimates in behalf of the District which are submitted to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. CURTIS. Certainly, I yield.

Mr. CHILTON. Now, let us see where we are. The Senator says the people are fearful that Congress will not be liberal. Then does he not admit, does he not know, that they want to hold the half-and-half plan to compel Congress to do something which Congress might not want to do? Is he in favor of that? Does he want them to hold the whip hand on the Congress of the United States to make the appropriation?

Mr. CURTIS. The Congress of the United States always holds the whip hand. The people of the District can not be placed in a position where they would hold the whip hand. Congress holds the whip hand. I am in favor of carrying out this half-and-half plan until some definite plan that is better for the people and for the General Government can be suggested and adopted as a law.

Now, let us see what the result is in the Senate committee's bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me, first, I think the Senator has overstated the revenues of the District for the present year. If the Senator will turn to the report, he will find that it is $7,410,761.48.

Mr. CURTIS. If the Senator will excuse me, I was reading from the bill as passed by the House and the House report. The House report says that the general revenues of the District for the fiscal year 1917, it is estimated, will amount to $8,235,050.

Mr. GALLINGER. There is a mistake in that; but, no matter whether it is $7,000,000 or $8,000,000, the District of Columbia is a growing community and is being extended very rapidly. They raise approximately $8,000,000 this year. Suppose this new scheme goes into operation; 10 years from now they will raise $15,000,000. Is it beyond the bounds of reasonable possibility that an economical Congress may say that is enough to run the government without the General Government making a contribution? There is where the danger comes, and I do not wonder that the people of the District fear that probable result.

Mr. CURTIS. That is exactly the danger, and that shows the trend of Congress. Last year under the appropriation there was a surplus in the District of about $2,000,000. If the bill had been adopted as it came from the House, there would have been a surplus of some $4,000,000 this year.

The bill as presented by the Senate committee appropriates $14,952,000. If the Senate conferees would happen to be successful and induce the House conferees to agree to all the amendments, yet the Government would not pay as much money as would be raised by the District of Columbia.

I need not tell Members of this body how hard it is to get the House to agree to these various amendments. There is no one here who hopes that all the amendments put in by the Senate will be retained; but this must be said for the Senate committee: Every material amendment placed in the bill by the Senate committee is one that will result in benefit to the people of the District of Columbia. The Senate committee provided for new streets, new schoolhouses, new hospitals, better police service, better fire service, playgrounds for the children, and made appropriations that the District badly needs now.

As was said, I think by the Senator from California, the appropriation could be greatly increased and many more million dollars spent each and every year in this District to the benefit of the people of the District.

I do not care to take up much of the time of the Senate on this measure, but I wish to call the attention of the Senate to this part of the report of the joint committee. If the half-and-half plan should be abandoned, I want to ask the chairman of the joint committee why it was that, on page 7 of this report, the joint committee recommend that the interest on the sinking fund shall be paid half and half? I call attention to the language of the report:

It is our opinion that the original intent, the understanding of Members of Congress, the unvarying practice of the years, the provisions of the various laws of appropriation, the law definitely fixing the respective apportionment of payment, and, above all, the justice of the matter as affecting the General Government, the holders of the bonds, and the District of Columbia lead certainly to the conclusion that the interest on the funded debt be continued, to be paid 50 per cent from the revenues of the District of Columbia and 50 per cent by appropriation from the moneys of the United States.

That is what the joint committee reported; and if the District of Columbia should pay half of the interest on the funded debt, why should it not be limited to half on the expenses of the General Government? The funded debt was created to pay the obligations of the District of Columbia for improvements that had not been paid for prior to the organic act.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President—

Mr. CURTIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, the Senator has asked me a question, and in answer to it I will say that the part of the resolution appointing the joint committee required us to report upon the funded debt and what proportion of that debt both the District and the General Government should pay. I went into that subject because a controversy came up in another place about the liability of the Government upon that funded debt. We went back into all of the acts of Congress; we got the various appropriation bills and the different acts in which that was mentioned; and we came to the conclusion that, under law and under specific acts of Congress, the Government had bound itself to pay one-half of that indebtedness; that it was not right to regard it in any other way than that it was a part of the original contract, and we so reported; in other words, a condition arose—and that is the only case where there was any difficulty—and we reported the fact and reported that recommendation.

If, however, the plan under the amendment of the Senator from California [Mr. WORKS] should be adopted, that would at once cause the assumption of all of the indebtedness by the Federal Government. That is the only way in which you could negotiate the indebtedness. The bonds could not have been sold originally but for the indorsement and the guaranty of the Federal Government, to wit, that it would itself pay half of the indebtedness, and as trustee would see to it that half the revenues from the District of Columbia should be kept as a fund with which it should be paid. Of course, the Government is a guarantor.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President—

Mr. CURTIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. GALLINGER. Notwithstanding the suggestion of the Senator from West Virginia that he has investigated this matter and found that the Government is held for one-half of this debt, and the court has decided likewise—

Mr. CHILTON. And there is no doubt the court decided right.

Mr. GALLINGER. But, notwithstanding the findings of the commission and the decision of the court, the original bill offered in the House of Representatives placed that entire burden on the District of Columbia, but they found out better after a while.

Mr. CHILTON. But the Senator from New Hampshire will recall that that never bothered this committee a particle. We have reported the exact condition and the exact legal status in regard to it.

In justice, now, to the amendment of the Senator from California, I will say it disposes of that, and proposes that the Government shall assume the whole indebtedness or pay it.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I am not criticizing the committee; I believe the committee has done a wonderful work. All I regret is, that the committee did not, after it had gathered all the evidence, and after it had made its report, prepare a bill and have it introduced in the House and in the Senate, and have, if necessary, a joint committee of the House and Senate consider the measure so as to give a permanent law for the District of Columbia one that would be an improvement over the present plan.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I should like the Senator from Kansas and the Senate to understand that the funded debt stands upon an entirely different footing from the ordinary expenses of the District. That was covered by a special statute on the subject, which obligated the Government to pay one-half of that indebtedness. That had already occurred, and does not depend upon the organic act at all.

Mr. CURTIS. But if the Senator is going to change the organic act, he might just as well change the provision in reference to the funded debt.

There has been some question raised as to the justness of the half-and-half plan. I find in the report of the joint committee, on page 13, the statement that the "total assessed valuation of real estate in the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1915," was $390,098,849, and the personal tax for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1915, at 1½ per cent, was $517,962.35.

I find at the bottom of the same page this statement:

Total full value of all exempt property in the District of Columbia, $396,550,898.

So if Senators will take the value of the real estate and the value of exempt property they will find it is about equal in this District. I have never thought—and I have studied this question very carefully not only this year, but at other times—that the people of the District were paying less than they should. I believe, with the committee, that they are paying their fair share under the organic act.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. CURTIS. I do.

Mr. WORKS. I should like to call attention to the fact, in that immediate connection, that the amount paid by the taxpayer is not affected in the least by the half-and-half plan, nor will it be affected by the amendment which I have offered if it shall be adopted. The only trouble, I think, is the fear that the Government will not pay enough. It will not increase the amount which the taxpayers will pay, because that is fixed by law.

Mr. CURTIS. That is true. As I said a moment ago, the fear is that Congress will not appropriate the money that is needed. I want to ask the Senate, Are not the people of this District justified in the belief that Congress will not appropriate the money that is needed, while this very measure as it comes to us appropriates $4,000,000 less than was estimated; and if the House provision should go through, the District would pay eight million and some odd thousand dollars, while the General Government would pay only $3,000,000. I want to call attention to the testimony of former Senator Blackburn. I find, on page 1428 of the testimony taken before the joint committee, the following:

If the present rate of dividing expenses, 50 per cent upon the property holder and 50 per cent upon the Federal Government, is the best—I mean speaking from the standpoint of the private property holder here—that this joint committee can be persuaded to recommend, then I should be glad to see the half-and-half condition maintained.

Here is what he says in reference to the measure:

All sorts of forms had obtained here, the mayor form and the District government régime. The trouble I found then was that the people living within this District were absolutely unable to fix any value upon their real estate for the reason that there was no fixed rate of taxation; and of course the value of all real estate is largely dependent upon the rate of taxation to which it is subjected. Prior to that time Congress, in the exercise of its discretion—sometimes charged by some to be the exercise of its caprice or whim—would appropriate whatever per cent the individual Congress saw fit toward the expenses of the municipal government here, and those sums varied with different Congresses.

Now, if you abandon the half-and-half principle and go back to the old system, the people will be again complaining. Again he says:

I did not believe at that time that the individual taxpayer here in equity should bear one-half of the expenses incident to the maintenance of this District. I believed it was an approximation to equity; and I not only believed, but I was absolutely sure, that that was the best that could be obtained for the property holders of the District at that time.

Further on he says:

If the half-and-half division of the expenditures were fair in 1878 it certainly is not fair now. For 36 years there has been a shifting of the holdings of real estate in this city, and those changes have always been one way. I am not aware of the fact that the Government has ever parted with a foot of real estate in the last 36 years. We only need to look out here to see the conclusive evidence that the Government for 36 years past has been acquiring additional real estate here and to that extent disturbing the equilibrium on which that act was based.

I do not think, if the people of the District, the taxpayers, the property holders here, were paying their fair proportion of the expenditures in 1878, they certainly are paying more than their fair proportion of those expenditures now.

And yet the provision which the chairman of the joint committee indorses requires the people of this District to pay over 66 per cent, and requires the General Government to pay about 34 per cent.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President—

Mr. CURTIS. I yield.

Mr. CHILTON. I want to ask the Senator what is the rate of taxation in Kansas?

Mr. CURTIS. It varies. We have township, county, and State taxes.

Mr. CHILTON. In the Senator's home city, what is the rate? Mr. CURTIS. I am not certain as to the amount but will give the figures later.

Mr. CHILTON. Does the Senator think that a rate of $1.50 on a 66½ per cent valuation basis is a fair average taxation on real estate?

Mr. CURTIS. I should say so.

Mr. CHILTON. Now, suppose the valuation in this city should go on increasing until $12,000,000 could be raised under the present rate, and suppose it required $20,000,000 to run the city, would the Senator be in favor of the Government paying $8,000,000 or paying one-half of the $20,000,000?

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I will say to the Senator that if that were the case the District of Columbia would pay the bill and there would be nothing for the Government to pay.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I will answer the Senator's question. I believe the citizens of the District should pay a fair tax, and I believe the Government should pay its fair share. I believe that the showing to-day proves that the fair share is half and half, but I want to say, furthermore, that the Government could expend now in the District of Columbia $20,000,000, yes, $24,000,000, a year and properly expend it.

Mr. CHILTON. I think that is probably true; we have no disagreement as to that, but the Senator is talking about an instance instead of considering the principle involved. Is the Senator in favor now of the people of the District of Columbia paying a fair tax all the time upon their property?

Mr. CURTIS. I am.

Mr. CHILTON. Whatever they raise by taxation ought to go into the Treasury, ought it not?

Mr. CURTIS. It ought to go into the Treasury under the condition—and that is the question we are now facing—that the Government should appropriate an equal amount, because there is a funded debt here of some $6,000,000 that should be paid. When the funded debt is wiped out and when the conditions change, that is the time to change the matter of the Government's contribution rather than to change it now.

Mr. CHILTON. The Senator must know that the funded debt is not due, and that it is a splendid investment. It can not be paid until it is due, and in the meantime every requirement in connection with it is being met.

Now, recurring to the original question, the Senator says he is in favor of the people of the District paying a fair rate of taxation and that it should be fixed and certain. If that condition is met and that is all that is required, why should the Government pay any more, and if three times that much is required, why should not the Government pay it?

Mr. CURTIS. Why, Mr. President, the Government has not in the past, and did not in the last appropriation bill, appropriate what the District has needed, and it is not appropriating what the District needs in the present bill, and until all the money is appropriated that is needed, then it is useless to ask the question that is now being asked by the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President—

Mr. CURTIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from West Virginia endeavored to make comparison between the taxation in a small city and in the District of Columbia. The Senator knows that taking cities having about the same population as the District of Columbia, and some of them larger cities, the District of Columbia pays a higher rate of taxation than any of those cities. If that is the case, then the District of Columbia pays a fair tax to-day.

Mr. CHILTON. I think the Senator is mistaken.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator says I am mistaken. I will call his attention to the cities to which I have reference. They are Baltimore; Detroit; Buffalo; Milwaukee; Cincinnati; Newark, N. J.; New Orleans; Louisville; and Memphis, Tenn. I say to the Senator that the tax paid in those cities is no greater than the tax paid in the District of Columbia, taking the rate of taxation and assessed valuation into consideration.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me just a moment? I have been trying to find out what document the Senator is reading from. What is the compilation?

Mr. SMOOT. It is made up of figures collected as to assessed valuation in the different cities.

Mr. WORKS. Collected by whom?

Mr. SMOOT. Collected by Mr. Noyes, or by the Washington Star—I presume through Mr. Noyes's efforts—and they show exactly the valuations in the cities indicated and the rate of assessment.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, we had a great mass of matter concerning taxation before the joint committee. The compilation to which the Senator from Utah refers may have been made up partly from that, but I assure the Senate that it can not be relied upon.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator say that the rate of taxation in the city of Washington is lower than it is in the cities I have just named?

Mr. WORKS. I do not say that it is, because I have no recollection as to that, but the testimony before the committee, if the Senator will take the pains to examine it, will show the facts, and, instead of relying upon the ex parte statement made by somebody who has an interest in the question, I think it would be better to consult the figures furnished by the committee.

Mr. SMOOT. I have enough confidence in Mr. Noyes to believe that he would not make the statement over his own signature that he had taken these figures directly from the assessment rolls of the cities and had given the rate of taxation, unless he was satisfied that that was the fact.

Mr. WORKS. That may be true.

Mr. SMOOT. I simply say that because of my faith in the man.

Mr. WORKS. It may be true that Mr. Noyes is acting in perfect good faith, but there are so many different things that enter into this matter, so many different kinds of taxes—State taxes, county taxes, and various other taxes—that any general statement is bound to be misleading.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say that this has reference only to city taxes in comparison with the taxes paid in the District of Columbia.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, before we proceed I desire to say to the Senator from West Virginia that the rate of tax of each $100 valuation in the city of Topeka, Kans., is $1.904, except special improvements. This amount of a little over $1.90 includes the levy for State, county, city, and board of education purposes.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I will say to him and to the Senate that, beginning on page 207 of the hearings, there is a complete report which was obtained by the committee from persons who appeared before it, showing all the items of taxation, per capita and otherwise, the size of the cities, and other information of similar character.

They are put in there. Every city in the United States that is comparable to the city of Washington, and all of the data, are in there, and the conclusions of the committee were conservative conclusions drawn from those data.

Mr. SMOOT. Then there is no need of having any conclusion at all. All you have to do is to take the absolute figures, and those will show.

Mr. CHILTON. Yes. We are lower than the average, instead of above the average.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, if the Senator from Kansas will permit me—

Mr. CURTIS. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. KENYON. I should like to ask the Senator from West Virginia whether there is any tax in the District of Columbia on moneys and credits.

Mr. CHILTON. None whatever.

Mr. KENYON. A tax on those matters would yield a very large revenue, would it not?

Mr. CHILTON. Well, we do not know. We presume that it would.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, the Senator, I think, is mistaken. A Senator told me to-day that there is a tax here on bank deposits. I had not supposed, up to that time, that there was, and I still think the District is very liberal toward people who have large quantities of property in the shape of credits and money. There is some tax, undoubtedly.

Mr. CHILTON. Oh, they will tax your cow and your horse—

Mr. CLAPP. No; I mean money in bank.

Mr. CHILTON. But they do not tax the intangible property. Now, that is where it all started and that is what this was all about. We have not said anything about it. We are trying to get it down to fixed principles first before we go to arguing things.

Mr. CLAPP. I can not speak from experience, but a Senator told me to-day just the contrary—that bank deposits are taxed here.

Mr. SMOOT. That all depends upon whether they make a showing upon the return that they have money on hand, and that is just exactly the same as it is in every other State. There is a provision made for the return of moneys on hand. They do not get very much out of it, however.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President—

Mr. CURTIS. I yield to the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. STERLING. I just wanted to suggest to the Senator that as I understand the law of the District of Columbia relating to taxation I do not think moneys and credits are taxed. I do not think any returns are required to be made on moneys or credits. All tangible personal property is taxed, of course. Stocks in banks, and so forth, are taxed, but what we ordinarily mean by moneys and credits are not taxed. I think the Senator from West Virginia is right in saying that credits are not taxed.

Mr. CHILTON. That was my information. We asked the witnesses about it, and we examined the commissioners and the assessors and others who ought to know.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I shall detain the Senate only a minute or two longer. I want to call attention to part of former Senator Blackburn's testimony, at the bottom of page 1426:

The law of 1878 has stood the test of experience for more than one-third of a century. It has lasted longer than I thought it would endure at the time of its enactment. I think an unprejudiced, fair judgment would declare that it has not only lasted longer but has answered the purposes of its enactment better than was contemplated at that time. These people have had a satisfactory form of government now for all these years.

I read from page 1430 of his testimony:

If 50 per cent was fair in 1878, taking into account the shifting of holdings, the constant acquisition by the Government, and the constant diminution of the holdings by private citizens, leaving out of view the new factor that the Senator from Delaware suggests—if 50 per cent was fair toward the property holder and private taxpayer in 1878, I should say that 65 per cent on the part of the Government and 35 per cent on the part of the property holder would not be more than fair to him now.

So you see the Senator upon whose testimony the members of this joint committee rely says that, in his judgment, instead of the Government only paying 35 per cent or 34 per cent it should pay 65 per cent, and that the taxpayer should pay only 35 per cent, instead of paying 66 per cent, as he would be required to do under the House bill.

In conclusion I want to repeat that the Senate Committee on Appropriations studied this question carefully. It called before it people from the various sections of the District. Everyone that wanted to be heard had a chance to be heard, and men came there, and so did women, telling us the conditions and what was needed in their sections, and the Senate committee amended the bill in a manner they thought was the very best under all the circumstances. We increased the appropriations for the schools, for the fire department, for the police department, and all of that, and we believe that we have given the District a good measure. We believe that it is best to stand by the half-and-half plan until some better scheme is devised by Congress. We believe that any measure proposed should be carefully prepared by a committee, carefully considered by the Senate and by the House, and acted upon as a separate proposition, rather than upon an appropriation bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I had intended to discuss the so-called half-and-half principle when the committee amendment came before the Senate for consideration. But as there is a little leisure time this afternoon, perhaps I might as well say a few words now as later.

Last year, when this question was before the Senate, I find by reference to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD that I made a speech of some considerable length on the subject, which I have been tempted to make the basis of what I shall say to-day; but I find that it is too long for that purpose, and I will simply, as briefly as possible, give expression to the views that I hold now, which are in accord with those I held one year ago.

I am against the amendment submitted by the Senator from California [Mr. WORKS] for the reason that I do not think the time has come for the abrogation of the statute of 1878, known as the organic act of the District of Columbia. I quite agree with those who have preceded me that before we take that step the matter should receive much more careful and considerate examination than it has had up to the present time.

It has been my privilege for 30 years, Mr. President, to have a direct interest, and sometimes I have thought too great a personal interest, in the affairs of the District of Columbia.

About the only criticism that ever has been made upon my legislative career at home, aside from the criticism of some votes which I have cast, which perhaps were well founded, has been that I have given too much time to District of Columbia affairs. I became a member of the Committee on the District of Columbia when I entered the Senate over 25 years ago, and before that I was interested in the affairs of the District of Columbia when I was a Member of the other House. I remained on that committee until three years ago, covering a period of 19 years, about 12 years of which time I was chairman of the committee. I think I understand the ins and outs of District of Columbia affairs fairly well. It has been my purpose to lend my influence and vote to every proposition intended to develop the District along correct lines, to make it the "city beautiful" of this continent, and I have sometimes felicitated myself that with the aid of other Members of this body and of the other House a great deal has been accomplished in that direction.

When I stop to think that when I first came here we rode down Capitol Hill in a little dinky car drawn by two bedraggled horses, each passenger being his own conductor, and that when we came back, in wintertime particularly, a cold, shivering boy met us at the foot of the hill to hitch an added horse to the car to pull it up to the Capitol. I can see a picture of the great development that has come to Washington since that time. Our car lines are among the best in the world. We have the splendid Union Station, which took the place of two dilapidated structures that were not a credit to the city of Washington. We have these beautiful buildings all around us. We have the magnificent Congressional Library and other buildings that I will not stop to talk about.

But, Mr. President, notwithstanding all that has been accomplished, notwithstanding the fact that beautiful homes have been built, magnificent avenues have been opened, splendid public buildings have been erected, the city has extended itself to the northwest for miles and miles and miles, and that all parts of the city have been developed along correct lines, notwithstanding all that I have felt that there was a great deal more to be done.

I was particularly struck to-day in reading the criticism that the Senator from California, in his report as a member of the joint committee, made on the city hall. I want to read it, for the information of my colleagues, if I can turn to it. He pictures a condition that ought to be attended to by this Congress. It ought to be attended to in this bill, if we could get an appropriation for the purpose, so as to give this city a decent city hall. Why, when we go into our other cities, when we go into small cities, such as the one I live in, and see those beautiful city halls, when we call to mind what we see in European cities, where they take great pride in their city halls, when we remember those things, and then go down here on Indiana Avenue and look at that old, dilapidated structure, where our courts meet and other business is being transacted, we can not help wondering why it is that an appropriation of a million or two million dollars, or whatever sum might be needed, has not long ago been made to give this city a hall that would be a credit to Washington.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I have sometimes wondered that when we were building this new city hall down here across from the Willard Hotel we did not do the thing the Senator is talking about.

Mr. GALLINGER. Of course that is a purely municipal building.

Mr. STONE. I know that.

Mr. GALLINGER. And in that building the affairs of the government of the District of Columbia—this "fiction," that fancy of the brain, that the Senator from West Virginia talks about—are attended to. The affairs of the District are being conducted there, and every square foot of space is occupied, so that unless it had been very greatly enlarged we could not have utilized that building for the purposes for which the City Hall proper is used.

The Senator from California had this to say in his report, and I beg the attention of Senators while I read it:

The poor old City Hall—

Says the Senator from California. That expresses exactly what it is.

The poor old City Hall! It seems a pity to say anything about it. It is 91 years old. It gives every evidence of having gone through a long series of inefficient, irresponsible, half-and-half legislation. If not, it would have been removed many years ago and replaced by an adequate and modern building in a more suitable place. It has remained so long it might be worth saving as an antique, but not at its present location. It is situated on the edge of one of the beautiful parks of the city, where no business building should be allowed to remain. It is dingy with age. I have not seen the inside of it. A view of the outside is quite enough. The plastering on the outside has been off for I do not know how long in spaces of 10 feet square or more, and it looks otherwise dilapidated. It should, for the credit of the city, be destroyed and a new building of sufficient size, modern in style, and with modern improvements, erected on Pennsylvania Avenue, where all public buildings should be brought together. A suitable building, large enough to accommodate all of the District courts, should be constructed and the courts brought together.

It will be a long time before Washington can be made anywhere near a model city while such public buildings are allowed to stand. As it is now, it is a blot on the face of a beautiful park that should be removed.

Mr. President, that is a picture worthy to be framed and hung in the home of every Senator of the United States. I think we ought to have the hall itself photographed, and there should be placed at the top of the picture those words so eloquently and justly uttered by the Senator from California.

Now, what is true of that old City Hall is true of a great many other things in the District of Columbia that ought to be remedied. But I want to say to the Senate that if we should place an appropriation of a million dollars in this bill or $2,000,000, which perhaps would be a better figure for a new City Hall, we might felicitate ourselves on the fact that the Senate had taken a step in the right direction, and that there was some hope of getting a new building; but, Mr. President, when the conference report came back it would in all probability be found that that amendment had not been agreed to by another body, and that the Senate had been compelled to recede from its amendment.

I called attention a little while ago to the fact that there are a good many other things that we ought to do here. Just think of it, Mr. President, we have no home in the District of Columbia for the feeble-minded, and those poor people, boys and girls and men and women, are roaming around our city without any adequate protection to the community or to themselves and without the care that they are justly entitled to at the hands of this great Government.

I have on two occasions introduced bills for an institution for the feeble-minded. They passed the Senate, but never became laws. I have introduced bills for a hospital for inebriates, but they failed to become laws, and if we should put an appropriation in this bill for that purpose we would find when the conference report was submitted, that our amendment had not been agreed to by another body, and that the Senate conferees had receded from its amendment.

The same is true of a good many other things that I might talk about if I had time. We find great difficulty in getting adequate appropriations for many worthy purposes. We have fortunately, by dint of perseverance and constant hammering away at Congress, been able to erect a workhouse over in Virginia, and we are going to have another much-needed institution near it—a reformatory—which we are about erecting. Those two institutions will be a blessing to the people of the District of Columbia as long as time lasts. But it took us a long, long time to get them, and we had hard work to secure the appropriations for those institutions. We need to look after a good many unfortunate classes in our community who are being sadly neglected.

The Senator from Mississippi said he never heard on the floor of the Senate a suggestion until to-day concerning the miserable institution that we call a municipal hospital, located on the banks of the Anacostia River. Why, Mr. President, I commenced looking at that institution not only on the outside but the inside 15 years ago, and I have been doing my best, and some other Senators have been helping me, to get that disgrace removed from this great Capital.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President—

Mr. GALLINGER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WORKS. The Senator may remember that I said something about that also in the same report that I made. I went through that institution and it is enough to make one heartsick to see what sort of a place is maintained by the National Government to take care of those poor people.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; the Senator from California did discuss that abomination called a municipal hospital, and I thank him for it.

Mr. President, we had a great struggle to abolish grade crossings in the District and get the Union Station. It took a good while to get it, but we finally got an appropriation and we got the building. But it took us nearly two years to get the electric cars to that station so that people coming into the city of Washington could get proper transportation. That seems a startling assertion, and yet it is a fact. The railroad companies were willing to spend a million dollars to get to the station, but they could not get the permission of Congress to do it for nearly two years, and when we finally got the bill through it was carried by only a slender majority in another body, and it was passed only a short time before the inauguration of a President of the United States. The companies had the material on hand, they knew they would get to that station sometime, but, as I said, it took us nearly two years of patient endeavor and argument and entreaty to get those railroad tracks to the station. And why? Mr. President, it was held up by a distinguished gentleman who lived in a town of 350 inhabitants, in whose entire congressional district there were but 4 miles of horse railroad—not electric railroad, but horse railroad.

That distinguished gentleman had influence enough to hold that bill up for two long years on the ground that we were doing something for corporations in the District of Columbia. And yet those corporations, Mr. President, had to pay a million dollars to get their cars to that great station, which they were glad to do.

That is what we are up against in the city of Washington. It is not fiction, it is not a state of mind, it is not fancy, but it is a solemn fact.

Now, let us see how this thing works. I do not want to criticize anybody. I take it for granted that every man in public life is as honest and as conscientious as I am, but I can not for the life of me understand the attitude certain men take, and why they refuse to do more than they do for the development and the beautification of the National Capital and for the health and comfort, not only of the people of the District, but of the people of the entire United States who come here.

I do not know how it may be in other parts of the country, but I know that New England is willing, if necessary, that the Government of the United States should pay every dollar toward the upbuilding, the advancement, and the beautification of this great city. I never heard a criticism in my State, I never heard a criticism in New England against what the Government is doing for the District of Columbia; but we do know, Mr. President, that that issue is raised in certain quarters, and that the statement is made and repeated and reiterated that the District of Columbia is robbing the Government and that the Government is paying something for the District of Columbia that it ought not to pay. It is such statements that have brought about the controversy that faces us to-day—the effort to tear up by the roots a system of government that has worked well for nearly 30 years.

I am sorry it is so, but it is so. We have added to this bill approximately $3,000,000, as I remember it. How large a proportion do you suppose of this $3,000,000 will remain in this bill when the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] asks for the consideration of the conference report on the District of Columbia appropriation bill? I venture to prophesy that not one-half of that amount will remain in the bill when it finally becomes a law.

But, Mr. President, is the proposition that the Senator from California and the Senator from West Virginia are advocating going to help this matter any? Now, let us look at it. The District of Columbia raised nearly $8,000,000 by taxation this year. The organic act says in substance that the Government ought to equal that amount by an appropriation from the Federal Treasury, thus making an aggregate of over $15,000,000. The District Commissioners estimated something over $15,000,000 as the amount they could expend during the coming fiscal year, and then they left out scores and scores of things that ought to be taken care of in this District. But, Mr. President, as the bill came to the Senate it carried $11,000,000 of appropriations; the District revenues were swallowed up and approximately half the amount raised by the District was added from the Treasury of this great, rich, powerful Government of ours. Is the proposition advanced by the Senator from California and so earnestly advocated by the Senator from West Virginia going to improve that condition any?

They say that all the revenues of the District should be put into the Federal Treasury and whatever else is needed should be added by the Government. Well, have we any reason to suppose that under those circumstances the Government will be any more liberal in the future than it has been in the past and is this year? Have we any reason to suppose that if the $8,000,000 of District revenues go into the General Treasury and the District of Columbia is blotted out by calling it a city and saying that it is not an entity, but a mere fiction; have we any reason to suppose that in the next appropriation bill there will be any greater liberality shown by Congress than is shown in the bill that is before us to-day?

It is not to be wondered at that the citizens of the District of Columbia are somewhat alarmed about this matter, because, Mr. President, if they raised $8,000,000 this year, and if this city grows, as I hope it will grow and as it ought to grow, they will be raising $15,000,000 in 10 years from now, and if 10 years from now a Congress such as the economical Congress of to-day, which thinks that $11,000,000 is now enough, comes to the conclusion that $15,000,000 is enough for all the purposes of the District, they will take the $15,000,000 of District revenues, will proceed to expend it, and the Government will escape any contribution as a consequence.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. GALLINGER. I yield to the Senator with pleasure.

Mr. CHILTON. As I understand, the Senate bill now carries approximately $14,000,000?

Mr. GALLINGER. Something over that.

Mr. CHILTON. Eight million dollars of that is from the District revenues?

Mr. GALLINGER. About $8,000,000.

Mr. CHILTON. Under the half-and-half plan only one-half, to wit, $7,000,000, appropriated by the Senate bill will come out of the District revenues, and the other $7,000,000 will come from the Federal Treasury. Is not that right?

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; provided that amount remains in the bill.

Mr. CHILTON. What would the Senator do with the surplus which the District revenues will raise?

Mr. GALLINGER. I do not think there ought to be any surplus. We ought not to let a surplus accumulate. We ought to make expenditures that would exhaust that surplus.

Mr. CHILTON. But, with all respect to the Senator, he has not answered my question. Suppose the Senate bill should now be adopted. There will be a large surplus of approximately $2,000,000 already raised by the District of Columbia unexpended.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; but no one expects that the bill will carry the full amount when it emerges from conference.

Mr. CHILTON. The Senator will recollect what Bill Allen, of Ohio, said about a surplus, that it was worse than a powder mill in hades.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Democratic Party knows more about deficits than about surpluses, and always has.

Mr. CHILTON. That is the Senator's opinion; but we can indulge in surpluses now about as well as the Senator's party ever could. I wish to ask the Senator what will become of the money which has been raised in the District but not appropriated?

Mr. GALLINGER. I say that that is a striking example—

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, if the Senator from New Hampshire will permit me, it would go over for future years to the credit of the District of Columbia, for disposition when Congress may be more liberal than it is now. That surplus would be used in that way.

Mr. GALLINGER. A distinguished Senator took issue with that idea to-day when I asked him a question, but I will get to that in a moment. He claimed that the surplus belongs to the General Government.

Mr. CHILTON. I merely want to say to the Senator that the Senate itself is not sticking to the half-and-half plan. The Senator is arguing for something which he does not put into practice. If we would put it into practice we would appropriate double the amount raised by the District; we would match dollars with the District.

Mr. GALLINGER. Well, we have come pretty near doing it in this bill as it comes from the Senate committee.

Mr. CHILTON. We have not done it by almost $2,000,000 in this instance. So I have a plan, while the Senator has not.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President—

Mr. GALLINGER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. OLIVER. I will suggest to the Senator from West Virginia that, judging by our experience since the 4th of March, 1913, it is easier to handle surpluses than it is deficits.

Mr. CHILTON. All I have to say to that is—

Mr. GALLINGER. I hope that no political discussion will ensue.

Mr. CHILTON. I hope so, too, but at the right time we will meet that question, and we are not nervous as to surpluses or deficits nor what is going to happen.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the Senator from West Virginia is wrong in his figures. I was going to say that the fact that there is a surplus is a reproach to the Congress of the United States. Last year, as I recall, the District taxpayers collected between six million and seven million dollars. Congress refused to appropriate more than $5,000,000 out of the National Treasury, and hence there was a surplus. Now, there ought not to have been any surplus, and there would not have been any surplus if the bill as reported to the Senate by the committee had become a law.

In answer to the interrogatory of the Senator from West Virginia as to what would be done with the surplus, I have very clear views of what ought to be done with it. I believe the District of Columbia ought to be allowed to apply that to the funded debt of the District, but the Senator from California says that the money belongs to the Government of the United States. Of course I can not follow that reasoning. That was asserted two or three years ago, but Congress did not agree to that proposition.

Mr. CHILTON. It can not be applied to the funded debt until that debt is due. The owners of the bonds representing the funded debt can not be forced to give them up until they are due.

Mr. GALLINGER. But does the Senator not think that the holders would be willing to give them up? They are only getting 3.65 per cent interest upon them.

Mr. CHILTON. No; in these democratic times they will not give up an investment paying 3.65 per cent. They might under Republican rule, but not now.

Mr. GALLINGER. Now, politics are injected again, mixed with false reasoning.

Mr. CHILTON. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the surplus could not be used for that purpose, of course, it would be tied up. It would lie in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the District of Columbia. To say that the Government of the United States can reach out its hand and take possession of that money raised from the taxpayers of the District of Columbia is to me a rather startling proposition; and yet the Senator from California says that is what can be done, and certain gentlemen in another place asserted and argued for a long time when another bill was under consideration by a conference committee that that money belonged to the United States and not to the District of Columbia at all, but that was not asserted by the Senate conferees.

Mr. President, I wish I had time—but I have not, for it is almost the hour for adjournment—to go into what I think ought to be done in the way of improvements in the District of Columbia. Does any Senator know any city in any civilized community on earth that would allow Rock Creek longer to continue in the condition in which it is, running through a portion of the city and emptying its polluted waters into a polluted river? I think a million dollars or $2,000,000, or even more, could very well be used there. We did, after a tremendous struggle, get Congress to agree to appropriate money to take care of the horrible condition that has existed along the Potomac Flats and the Anacostia River, and I wish Senators would go down there and see the great work that is going on. Because we were liberal enough to make the necessary appropriation a place that was a menace to the health of the city of Washington is rapidly being reclaimed. We are doing a great work there, but we had a long, hard struggle before we got an appropriation for that purpose.

The Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] is greatly interested in beautifying the banks of the river from the War College to the Potomac Drive. It is a very laudable purpose that the Senator has in view, but I am afraid that I will not be in the Senate, even if I live out my present term, when the Senator gets that work completed. In common with the Senator from Nevada, who has a very much higher artistic taste than I ever claimed to have, I know what foreign Governments are doing for their city water fronts. In Germany, in France, in England, and in Holland great development has taken place along that line, and it is a disgrace to the city of Washington, as well as to the other cities of the United States, that our water fronts are in the wretched condition in which they are. We ought to make an appropriation for the purpose of accomplishing the results that the Senator from Nevada has in view. I am not quite sure that we ought to turn the work over to the Commission on Fine Arts, as the Senator from Nevada would have us do. I think we ought to see that somebody who has a little more practical knowledge of real work of that kind ought to be put in charge of that great development; but however that may be, the improvement ought to be made.

But, Mr. President, that is not all that we ought to do, by any manner of means. Why, we are educating our children in part in the District of Columbia in portable schoolhouses! Now, we can imagine that 50 years ago, on the borders of civilization, they might properly have used portable schoolhouses in which to house the children; but the idea of the District of Columbia, the seat of the Government, the Capital of this great Nation, asking children to go into those little portable schoolhouses to get their education—just think of it! Furthermore, a good many schoolhouses that are not portable are almost unfit for human habitation. They ought to be repaired, or we ought to have new schoolhouses.

We are about to open the magnificent new Central High School; but if Senators knew the struggle we had to get an appropriation to build that Central High School—which is going to be an ornament to the city of Washington, one of the grandest school buildings in the United States, and we went to the State of the Senator from Missouri to get the plans for that beautiful building—they would understand the difficulties of our task. We built it to accommodate 2,500 pupils. Why, Mr. President, we were told over and over and over again that they never would have one-half of that number of pupils to attend that school; and yet the number of those taking the entrance examination this year, as I understand, will be between seventeen and eighteen hundred, and it will not be five years before the capacity of that beautiful high-school building will be filled to overflowing.

Our hospitals are what they are. Some of them are splendid, but the Municipal Hospital is a disgrace to common decency.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, before the Senator passes from the schools—he probably knows this better than I do—but I have seen one school out here, for instance, in which there are several rooms where the children come half of the day and then they have to stay at home so that other children may come the other half of the day.

Mr. GALLINGER. There are hundreds and hundreds of such children.

Mr. JONES. Some of them were down in damp and dark basements; others were in cold, portable frame structures, on the outside.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; that is true, Mr. President, and it ought not to exist in this city for a single day.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. GALLINGER. I do.

Mr. WORKS. Another very serious trouble connected with the schools is that there are no grounds about the school buildings where the children can take exercises or be out of doors.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is true. Has the Senator examined the amendments made by the committee of the Senate all through the bill in that regard?

Mr. WORKS. I have not. I have been told—

Mr. GALLINGER. I wish he would. I want to call attention to that, because it shows that we are really trying to do the right thing; but we probably will get beaten before we get through with this, in part, at least.

Mr. WORKS. I hope the Senator will understand that I have not been criticizing the committee for what it has been doing.

Mr. GALLINGER. Oh, no. I know the Senator has not.

Mr. WORKS. I have not discussed this question in any such sense. I am very glad to know that that is being done, because it is one of the things that I investigated when I was making a sort of general survey of the city of Washington.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. We have provided for about a dozen of them.

Mr. WORKS. I am very glad of it.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will state that I know the Senator has not criticized the committee. The Senator is always kind, and, as I understood his remarks, he rather complimented the committee than otherwise. But I did want to call attention to the fact that there are at least 12 schools named in the bill in connection with which we have made an appropriation for added ground. Some of them have not a foot of space outside of the school buildings—not literally, but practically so—and the children are housed up in those hot rooms without any place to get exercise. We made appropriations for new school buildings—I do not know how many, but quite a number—in this bill. What will be the result? We will fight for them. The Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] is a good fighter in conference, and his associates on the committee will do the best they can, but I am afraid the children will not get very many playgrounds outside of their school buildings. I think they may get some; but the school buildings that are so sorely needed for the proper education of the children of the District will not be appropriated for to the extent that we think they ought to be and that the people of any community that has the civic pride that we ought to have would demand.

So I say that, while we will do all we can, we can not accomplish the impossible. If the Senate could do this work alone, there would be no trouble, in my opinion, in every civic necessity of the District of Columbia being attended to very liberally; but we can not do that.

Here is the additional ground for school buildings. There are 14 different school buildings in the case of which we have made appropriations for enough ground to allow the children to enjoy themselves outside of the heated rooms of those buildings. At present, as the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] very properly suggests, practically they have to go into the middle of the street.

We are trying to do the best we can; and if I believed that the amendment submitted by the Senator from California would tend to greater liberality on the part of Congress, and the accomplishment of better results than we were accomplishing under the law that has been on the statute books since 1878, I should not hesitate long to vote for it. But I do not see how it could possibly have that result, because, in the first place, you take every dollar that the people of the District of Columbia pay in taxes and apply it to the needs of the District, and then a parsimonious Congress, if it thinks it wise to add something to it, will do it; otherwise, it will not. So I think we are better off as we are. The half-and-half principle does say to the Congress of the United States that they are expected to put up as much money as the District raises by way of revenue. If they do not do it, we can not help it; but it is a stimulus, at least, for the Government to do it; and I feel sure that we will have better results under the existing system than we possibly can have under the proposed changed system as contemplated in the amendment offered by the Senator from California.

Mr. President, the hour is at hand for adjournment. I may have something more to say on the subject to-morrow.

REFUNDS OR DRAWBACKS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in response to a resolution of January 10, 1916, and of July 5, 1916, a statement showing the amount of money refunded under paragraph 9, section 4, of the present tariff act during the fiscal year 1914, showing the articles, amount, to whom paid, and the name of the real party in interest, etc., which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Printing.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 6242) authorizing the counties of Nassau, Fla., and Charlton, Ga., to construct a bridge across the St. Marys River between Florida and Georgia.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 2500) authorizing the adjustment of rights of settlers on a part of the Navajo Indian Reservation, in the State of Arizona, with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 3646) to amend the act of February 11, 1915 (38 Stat. L., 807), providing for the opening of the Fort Assiniboine Military Reservation, with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 4594) to validate certain declarations of intention to become citizens of the United States, with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 10749. An act amending section 3285 of the Revised Statutes;

H. R. 10089. An act making appropriation for the preservation, improvement, and perpetual care of Huron Cemetery, a burial place of the Wyandotte Indians, in the city of Kansas City, Kans.;

H. R. 14944. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to transfer on certain conditions the south half of lot 14 of the southeast quarter of section 21, township 107, range 48, Moody County, S. Dak., to the city of Flandreau, to be used as a public park or playgrounds;

H. R. 16380. An act granting the consent of Congress to the board of supervisors of Highland Township, Pennington County, Minn., to construct a bridge across Red Lake River;

H. R. 16534. An act to authorize the commissioners of Lycoming County, Pa., their successors in office, to construct a bridge across the West Branch of the Susquehanna River from the foot of Arch Street, in the city of Williamsport, Lycoming County, Pa., to the borough of Duboisstown, Lycoming County, Pa.;

H. R. 16554. An act to extend the time of the Hudson River Connecting Railroad Corporation for the commencement and completion of its bridge across the Hudson River, in the State of New York;

H. R. 16604. An act to authorize the commissioners of Lycoming County, Pa., and their successors in office, to construct a bridge across the West Branch of the Susquehanna River, from the borough of Montgomery, Lycoming County, Pa., to Muncy Creek Township, Lycoming County, Pa.;

H. R. 16640. An act to amend an act entitled "An act granting a franchise for the construction, maintenance, and operation of a street railway system in the district of South Hilo, county of Hawaii, Territory of Hawaii," approved August 1, 1912, as amended by an act approved July 25, 1914;

H. R. 16764. An act to authorize the commissioners of Northumberland and Union Counties, in Pennsylvania, their successors in office, to construct a bridge across the West Branch of the Susquehanna River from the borough of Watsonstown, Northumberland County, Pa., to White Deer Township, Union County, Pa.;

H. R. 16875. An act granting the consent of Congress to Crisp County, Ga., to construct a bridge across Flint River, Ga., between Crisp and Sumter Counties; and

H. R. 17172. An act further extending appropriations for the necessary operations of the Government and of the District of Columbia under certain contingencies.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. GALLINGER presented telegrams in the nature of petitions from G. M. Goethe, of Sacramento, Cal., and of Mrs. R. P. Halleck, of Provincetown, Mass., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit interstate commerce in the products of child labor, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. O'GORMAN presented telegrams in the nature of memorials from sundry citizens of the State of New York, remonstrating against the seizures of United States mail by the British Government, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented telegrams in the nature of memorials from sundry citizens of New York City, N. Y., remonstrating against the action of the British Government in preventing the committee of the Friends of Irish Freedom from landing in England, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

CLAIMS OF SHOSHONE INDIANS.

Mr. CLAPP, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 6526) authorizing the Shoshone Tribe of Indians residing on the Wind River Reservation, in Wyoming, to submit claims to the Court of Claims, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 742) thereon.

AMENDMENT TO DISTRICT APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. LEE of Maryland submitted an amendment providing for the transfer of the site for the Municipal Hospital from Fourteenth and Upshur Streets, NW., to Reservation No. 13, in the District of Columbia, intended to be proposed by him to the District of Columbia appropriation bill (H. R. 15774), which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

EXTENSION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, a bill has come over from the House, being H. R. 17172, further extending appropriations for the necessary operations of the Government and of the District of Columbia under certain contingencies. It is vitally important that the bill should be passed. I do not think it will take three minutes to act upon it, and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate House bill 17172.

An act (H. R. 17172) further extending appropriations for the necessary operations of the Government and of the District of Columbia under certain contingencies was read twice by its title.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the provisions of the act entitled "An act extending appropriations for the necessary operations of the Government and of the District of Columbia and for the payment of pensions under certain contingencies," approved June 30, 1916, are extended and continued in full force and effect for and during the month of August, 1916.

Mr. TOWNSEND. How long does the bill extend the appropriations, Mr. President?

The VICE PRESIDENT. For one month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

STATISTICS OF COTTON SEED.

Mr. CHILTON. A few days ago the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] submitted a conference report on the bill (H. R. 4767) authorizing the Director of the Census to collect and publish statistics of cotton seed and cottonseed products, and for other purposes, and it was ordered to lie on the table and be printed. I ask the Senate to consider the conference report at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The conference report will be read. The Secretary read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4767) entitled "An act authorizing the Director of the Census to collect and publish statistics of cotton seed and cottonseed products, and for other purposes," having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 6.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the title of said bill and agree to the same.

WM. E. CHILTON, Chairman,
MORRIS SHEPPARD,
ROBERT M. LA FOLLETTE,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
H. W. SUMNERS, Chairman,
J. B. ASWELL,
GEO. R. SMITH,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. CHILTON. I move the adoption of the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

NAVAJO INDIAN RESERVATION, ARIZ.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2500) authorizing the adjustment of rights of settlers on a part of the Navajo Indian Reservation, in the State of Arizona, which was, on page 1, in lines 9, 10, and 11, to strike out "extending the boundaries of the tract of country lying west of the Moqui and Navajo Indian Reservation in the Territory of Arizona" and insert "and withdrawing from sale and settlement a tract of country lying west of the Navajo and Moqui Reservations in Arizona."

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Commerce:

H. R. 16380. An act granting the consent of Congress to the board of supervisors of Highland Township, Pennington County, Minn., to construct a bridge across Red Lake River;

H. R. 16534. An act to authorize the commissioners of Lycoming County, Pa., and their successors in office, to construct a bridge across the West Branch of the Susquehanna River from the foot of Arch Street, in the city of Williamsport, Lycoming County, Pa., to the borough of Duboistown, Lycoming County, Pa.;

H. R. 16554. An act to extend the time of the Hudson River Connecting Railroad Corporation for the commencement and completion of its bridge across the Hudson River, in the State of New York;

H. R. 16604. An act to authorize the commissioners of Lycoming County, Pa., and their successors in office, to construct a bridge across the West Branch of the Susquehanna River, from the borough of Montgomery, Lycoming County, Pa., to Muncy Creek Township, Lycoming County, Pa.;

H. R. 16764. An act to authorize the commissioners of Northumberland and Union Counties, in Pennsylvania, and their successors in office, to construct a bridge across the West Branch of the Susquehanna River from the borough of Watsonstown, Northumberland County, Pa., to White Deer Township, Union County, Pa.; and

H. R. 16875. An act granting the consent of Congress to Crisp County, Ga., to construct a bridge across Flint River, Ga., between Crisp and Sumter Counties.

H. R. 10749. An act amending section 3285 of the Revised Statutes was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Finance.

H. R. 10989. An act making appropriation for the preservation, improvement, and perpetual care of Huron Cemetery, a burial place of the Wyandotte Indians, in the city of Kansas City, Kans., was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

H. R. 14944. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to transfer on certain conditions the south half of lot 14 of the southeast quarter of section 21, township 107, range 48, Moody County, S. Dak., to the city of Flandreau, to be used as a public park or playgrounds, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

H. R. 16640. An act to amend an act entitled "An act granting a franchise for the construction, maintenance, and operation of a street railway system in the district of South Hilo, county of Hawaii, Territory of Hawaii," approved August 1, 1912, as amended by an act approved July 25, 1914, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I move that the Senate adjourn until 10 o'clock to-morrow morning.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 27 minutes p. m., Friday, July 28, 1916) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, July 29, 1916, at 10 o'clock a. m.

SENATE.

SATURDAY, July 29, 1916.

The Senate met at 10 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we seek Thy divine favor that we may be thoroughly furnished for every good word and work. May the work of this day be acceptable in Thy sight and may our hearts respond to every appeal that is noble and high. Enable us to extend the influence of Thy truth in all the world. Save us from every error that will bring any degree of unrest or unhappiness to men. Grant that as we work in harmony with Thy will we may see the pleasure of the Lord prosper in our hands. For Christ's sake. Amen.

THE JOURNAL.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of the legislative day of Tuesday, July 25, 1916, when, on request of Mr. Smoor and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9525) to establish a national park in the Territory of Hawaii.

The message also announced that the House disagrees to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 16699) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes, requests a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. HAY, Mr. DENT, and Mr. McKENZIE managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House disagrees to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 16460) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. HAY, Mr. DENT, and Mr. KAHN managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also informed the Senate that Hon. CHARLES M. STEDMAN, a Representative from the State of North Carolina, had been appointed by the Speaker of the House as Speaker pro tempore for this day during the temporary absence of the Speaker and had been empowered to sign as Speaker pro tempore during this day enrolled bills and joint resolutions and to appoint conferees.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker pro tempore of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

H. R. 9525. An act to establish a national park in the Territory of Hawaii;

H. R. 17053. An act making additional appropriations for the Public Health Service for the fiscal year 1917; and

H. R. 17172. An act further extending appropriations for the necessary operations of the Government and of the District of Columbia under certain contingencies.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I have a number of telegrams here on the question of the rejection of Thomas H. Kelly and Joseph Smith, who were refused permission to land in England for the purpose of distributing the relief funds that were secured in New York by generous voluntary contributions for the relief of Irish sufferers. It is asked that something be done. I do not know just what may be done. I present these telegrams for such action as the President of the Senate may deem wise.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The telegrams will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I desire to state in connection with the telegrams received by the Senator from New Jersey that I received similar telegrams several days ago and took the matter up directly with the Secretary of State. The Secretary of State informed me that he thought it was a case of mistaken identity, and had cabled to our ambassador to take up the matter, and he thought it could be adjusted; and it was in the process of adjustment that same day.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Very well. I am glad to have the information.

Mr. WORKS presented a petition of sundry citizens of Lodi, Cal., praying for national prohibition, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a memorial of the Hercules Powder Co., of San Diego, Cal., remonstrating against a tax on gunpowder and other explosives, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. GALLINGER presented a petition of the National Association of Union Volunteer Officers, of Indianapolis, Ind., praying for the passage of the so-called Volunteer officers' retirement bill, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented petitions of Miss Mary Wilkinshaw, of Elizabeth, N. J.; Mrs. Helen Bruce, of Louisville, Ky.; May F. Hallett, of San Francisco, Cal.; C. P. Sabonisse, of Annisquam, Mass.; Ethel Wickes, of San Francisco, Cal., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit interstate commerce in the products of child labor, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented petitions of the United Textile Workers of America, and of the Wood, Wire, and Metal Lathers' International Union, of Cleveland, Ohio, praying for the enactment of legislation to further restrict immigration, which were ordered to lie on the table.

CLEMENCY TO IRISH PRISONERS.

Mr. STONE. May I ask the Chair a question? Yesterday or the day before I presented a report from the Committee on Foreign Relations on several resolutions referred to that committee relating to what is known as the case of Sir Roger Casement. The report is lying upon the table of the Vice President. Is this a proper time to ask to have it laid before the Senate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is of the opinion that when a report comes from a committee it goes to the calendar, and that it can only be taken up by unanimous consent or upon motion at the proper time. The Chair does not think a report from a committee can lie on the table.

Mr. STONE. It is on the table; at least there was no objection to that course when it was suggested. If it has not been sent to the calendar, I should like to withdraw the report.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair can only express the opinion that the Chair has heretofore expressed that a report from a committee goes to the calendar.

Mr. STONE. I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the report.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered. The resolutions go back to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. STONE subsequently said: By direction of the Committee on Foreign Relations I report back Senate resolution 236 and Senate resolution 237 and an amendment proposed by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] to Senate resolution 237.

I should like to say that I will ask presently to have the resolution laid before the Senate for consideration, but before doing that I think I should say that the order by the committee as reported in the main represents the judgment of the committee.

By that I mean to say that in the opinion of the committee and its membership it was regarded as a mistake and inadvisable that these resolutions should have been brought before the Senate, and that from practically every point of view, and especially from the point of view of Sir Roger Casement, the whole proceeding has been a mistake.

The opinion of the committee, as stated in this report, is that none of the resolutions in the form in which they were offered and referred would tend to promote the end the proponents of the resolutions had in mind to accomplish, but would produce a contrary effect.

I think I should say, however, that while I believe that is the general sentiment of the committee it was the opinion of some members of the committee, a minority, that inasmuch as this matter had been precipitated here a resolution in a modified form should have been reported as a substitute for all the resolutions referred. But I am presenting the order as made by the committee as a body. I am doing this only as the chairman and spokesman of the committee.

I present this report and ask unanimous consent that it may be laid before the Senate for present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection?

Mr. OWEN. I shall object if it is going to lead to endless debate and the consumption of the entire morning hour. We have had two morning hours taken from the Senate by a discussion of this matter. If it is laid before the Senate for action, I shall not interpose any objection. Otherwise I shall feel it my duty to do so.

Mr. STONE. I will say to the Senator, as far as I am concerned, I have not another word to say, and so far as I know there is no other Senator who intends to debate the resolution; but as to that I can not speak with certainty.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to ask the Senator to modify his request and ask unanimous consent to bring it up after the morning hour is over. I have objected to the consideration of a bill reported by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], as I have objected in the past to similar requests.

Mr. STONE. The morning hour will probably be occupied by the calendar until the unfinished business is laid before the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. Then I suggest to the Senator to modify his notice and say that at the close of the morning business he will call it up.

Mr. STONE. The Senator means routine business?

Mr. SMOOT. Routine morning business.

Mr. STONE. I have no objection to that. I will ask, then, that as soon as the routine morning business is concluded it be laid before the Senate.

Mr. OWEN. I suggest to the Senator that he ask unanimous consent to vote upon it at the conclusion of the morning business.

Mr. STONE. Well, I will ask unanimous consent that when it is laid before the Senate at that time, at the conclusion of the routine morning business, it may be voted upon without debate.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I am quite ready to vote upon this question; but it seems to me, inasmuch as the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations has presented his report—a report which is in utter contradiction to the resolutions the committee had under consideration—it is not only just and fair but parliamentary and fit that I should be given an opportunity to say a few words. I have no desire to be prolix or to drag the thing along indefinitely. I should like if the Senator would concur—

Mr. SMOOT. I call for the regular order. If we are going to have a speech, it might just as well be made when the subject is regularly before the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is whether there is to be an objection to the request of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. STONE. I said I would make the request at the conclusion of the routine morning business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Very well.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I want now to say, without—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Bills and joint resolutions are still in order.

LIENS, JUDGMENTS, AND DECREES.

Mr. WALSH. From the Committee on the Judiciary I report back favorably the bill (H. R. 11416) to repeal an act approved March 2, 1895, entitled "An act to amend section 3 of an act entitled 'An act to regulate the liens of judgments and decrees of the courts of the United States,' approved August 1, 1898," and I submit a report (No. 744) thereon. This bill affects the State of Louisiana, and refers to liens and judgments in the Federal courts. The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSARD] is very much interested in the passage of the bill, and as it has the unanimous report of the Judiciary Committee, I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

Mr. SMOOT. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is objection, and the bill will be placed on the calendar.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. SHEPPARD. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 16185) to give the consent of the Congress to the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River near and above the city of New Orleans, La., and for other purposes, and I submit a report (No. 743) thereon. I ask for the immediate consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. CHAMBERLAIN:

A bill (S. 6712) authorizing an adjustment of the boundaries of the Whitman National Forest, in the State of Oregon, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. PENROSE:

A bill (S. 6713) granting an increase of pension to Lewis Mensch; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. STERLING:

A bill (S. 6714) for the relief of street railway crossing policemen, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. CLAPP:

A bill (S. 6715) to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914," approved June 30, 1913; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. MYERS:

A bill (S. 6716) to provide for stock-watering privileges on certain unallotted lands on the Flathead Indian Reservation, Mont.; to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. LANE:

A bill (S. 6717) granting a pension to Ethel Borden (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CURTIS:

A bill (S. 6718) for the relief of Joel J. Booth; to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

By Mr. SHIELDS:

A bill (S. 6719) granting a pension to Henry Ferguson; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SMOOT:

A bill (S. 6720) to increase the limit of cost of public building at Park City, Utah; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. TAGGART:

A bill (S. 6721) authorizing the formation and organization of volunteer motor-car reserve companies (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 6722) granting an increase of pension to Alice R. Finney;

A bill (S. 6723) granting an increase of pension to Zachariah Taylor;

A bill (S. 6724) granting an increase of pension to John M. Barber; and

A bill (S. 6725) granting an increase of pension to Hiram K. Brooke; to the Committee on Pensions.

ADJUDICATION OF PRIVATE CLAIMS.

Mr. UNDERWOOD submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 6918) to relieve Congress from the adjudication of private claims against the Government, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

CONDITIONS IN IRON-ORE MINES.

Mr. CLAPP. I submit a resolution and ask that it lie over under the rule.

The resolution (S. 242) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service transmit to the Senate copies of the reports of Drs. Olson and Bolton, of the United States Public Health Service, made in November, 1914, concerning conditions in the iron-ore mines of Minnesota and Michigan.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will lie over and be printed.

WAR DEPARTMENT ORDERS.

Mr. JONES. I desire to call up the resolution I submitted during the last morning hour. It is on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The Secretary read Senate resolution 238, submitted by Mr. JONES on the 25th instant, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to transmit to the Senate copies of all orders issued by his department during the last three years directing the nonemployment of or discriminating between citizens of the United States in connection with the work, activities, and projects carried on by his department.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT STEUBENVILLE, OHIO.

Mr. POMERENE. I ask unanimous consent to take up Order of Business No. 628, being Senate bill 20. It is a local bill, and I probably will be away when the calendar is called again for consideration. It is a matter of very great importance, and I ask unanimous consent to take it up at this time.

Mr. SMOOT. I will ask the Senator if this is the post-office bill.

Mr. POMERENE. It is a post-office and public-building bill.

Mr. SMOOT. It is an emergency matter, and I have no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 20) providing an additional appropriation for the Federal building at Steubenville, Ohio, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to acquire, by purchase or otherwise, such additional lands or rights contiguous to the building site now owned by the United States in Steubenville, Ohio, as may be necessary for the erection and completion on the lands thus owned and acquired of a suitable building, with fireproof vaults therein, for the use and accommodation of the United States court and post office, at an additional cost not to exceed $150,000 (over and above the amount heretofore authorized to be expended), which sum is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. POMERENE. For the information of the Senate and of the House, I ask that the report accompanying the bill be printed in the RECORD. It is very short.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The report submitted by Mr. ASHURST on July 19, 1916, is as follows:

Mr. ASHURST, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, submitted the following report, to accompany S. 20:

The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred S. 20, "providing an additional appropriation for the Federal building at Steubenville, Ohio," reports the same to the Senate with the following amendment, and as amended recommends that the bill do pass:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following: "That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to acquire, by purchase or otherwise, such additional lands or rights contiguous to the building site now owned by the United States in Steubenville, Ohio, as may be necessary for the erection and completion on the lands thus owned and acquired of a suitable building, with fireproof vaults therein, for the use and accommodation of the United States court and post office, at an additional cost not to exceed $150,000 (over and above the amount heretofore authorized to be expended), which sum is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated."

The original authorization for this building was contained in the acts of May 30, 1908, and June 25, 1910, which provided $120,000 as the limit of cost for the site and building. Of this amount $35,000 has been expended for a site, leaving $85,000 available for the building. The post-office building, however, was not erected, because legislation was begun for the purpose of holding United States court at Steubenville. This legislation was passed March 4, 1915, and it became necessary, therefore, to provide a building to accommodate both the post office and Federal court.

The site purchased is not of sufficient size to accommodate a building of the ground area required, and it is estimated that the sum of $10,000 additional will be required to purchase sufficient additional land adjoining the site heretofore acquired.

It is estimated on data received from the various departments, including the amount of space necessary for the accommodation of the courts, as stated by the Department of Justice, that a three-story building of 9,000 square feet ground area will be needed and that the sum of $150,000 additional will be necessary for the completion of this project, making the total limit of cost for the site and building $270,000. The additional appropriation of $150,000 provided for in this bill has the approval of the Treasury Department.

—
TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, June 28, 1916.

Hon. ATLEE POMERENE,
United States Senator.

MY DEAR SENATOR: There is inclosed herewith a copy of a report of even date submitted to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds on S. 20, which provides for an increase in the limit of cost for site and building at Steubenville, Ohio, in which it is estimated that $150,000 additional will be necessary for the completion of this project.

Respectfully,

B. R. NEWTON, Acting Secretary.

—
TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, June 28, 1916.

CHAIRMAN COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC BUILDINGS AND GROUND,
United States Senate.

SIR: Referring to the report submitted to your committee on March 20, 1916, on S. 20, which provides for an increase in the limit of cost of site and building at Steubenville, Ohio, the following supplementary report is submitted herewith:

The report of March 20 estimated that a three-story building with a ground area of 9,000 square feet would be required to provide adequate quarters for the post office, Department of Justice, and Civil Service Commission, and that the cost of such a building would be $200,000. It was also estimated that in order to purchase additional land adjoining the site which has been acquired the sum of $10,000 would be necessary, and, as the amount heretofore authorized for site and building was $120,000 and $35,000 had been expended for a site, a total sum of $125,000 in addition to that heretofore authorized would be required for the construction of the building and the purchase of the necessary additional land.

From information which has been received in this department subsequent to the submission of the report of March 20, it is estimated that the sum of $150,000 instead of $125,000 will be necessary for the completion of this project, making the total limit of cost for site and building $270,000.

Respectfully,

B. R. NEWTON, Acting Secretary.

COMPENSATION TO INJURED EMPLOYEES.

Mr. TAGGART. Mr. President, on July 12, when House bill 15316 was being discussed, a query was made in regard to the workmen's compensation act, and during the discussion in the House a question was asked in regard to the number of actions and the cost and the amount that had been paid. One of the gentlemen in the House made the remark that it was utterly impossible for them to get from the Labor Bureau the amount that had been distributed to the various persons.

On the strength of that remark, I called the attention of Secretary Wilson of the Department of Labor to the matter, and received a response from him, with the facts and figures fully set out in a very short communication, which I do not care to take the time of the Senate to read, but I would like to have it printed in the Record, if there is no objection. If there is objection, I shall read it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Is that a letter from the Secretary of Labor with reference to the United States employees' compensation act?

Mr. TAGGART. Yes, sir.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I have since had a letter from the Secretary withdrawing his suggestion of changes.

Mr. TAGGART. This letter does not deal with changes in the bill. It simply gives the information asked for.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I could not hear what it was, but the Secretary had suggested that some changes should be made, and then withdrew them.

Mr. TAGGART. This letter relates to information which it was said had been withheld.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, July 22, 1916.

MY DEAR SENATOR: In response to your inquiry of the 20th instant, as to the truth of the statement made by a Member of the House of Representatives on Wednesday, July 12, 1916, during the discussion of the bill (H. R. 15316) to provide compensation for injured employees of the United States, to the effect that this department and the Bureau of Labor Statistics concealed information as to the amount of money allowed as compensation for injuries sustained by employees of the Government during the past few years, and the statement that if we did have information we would not furnish it, I beg to say that both the department and the Bureau of Labor Statistics have at all times been ready and willing to furnish to either House of Congress, to any individual Senator or Representative, or to any other authorized person, any information concerning the administration of the Federal workmen's compensation law.

The department and the bureau referred to have taken every proper opportunity to call attention to the glaring inadequacies and inconsistencies of the present Federal workmen's compensation law, and have been glad to further, in the way of furnishing statistics on the operation of the current law, or in any other manner possible, all efforts to broaden and liberalize the scope of such legislation.

No request for information as to the amount of money paid in compensation during the past few years has been made by any Member of either House of Congress, and although Congress has appropriated only $3,000 per annum since the Federal workmen's compensation law was enacted in 1908 for the administration of the law, including the payment of all fees for medical examinations in disputed cases, we would have been entirely willing to go through our records for the purpose of compiling and tabulating the data to which reference was made.

As soon as it was evident from the remarks of the Member of the House above referred to, as quoted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of July 12, that there was any desire for information as to the amount of compensation paid in the last few years, a force of clerks was at once put to work to compile and tabulate the total number of fatal and nonfatal compensated cases by departments and the total amount of compensation paid during the fiscal years 1914, 1915, and 1916. Complete data covering the operation of the present compensation law for the period beginning August 1, 1908, when it took effect, and ending with the close of the fiscal year 1913, have been already published in Bulletin 155 of the Bureau of Labor Statistics.

The attached table shows the information to which reference has just been made for the fiscal years 1914, 1915, and 1916, but as the latter fiscal year ended on June 30 last, no reports for compensation paid during the fiscal year 1916 have been received in a very considerable number of cases, due to the fact that a sufficient time has not elapsed for the reports to be received in Washington or the fact that a large number of injuries occurring in the fiscal year 1916 had not terminated at the close of that year, and it is not at this time possible, therefore, to furnish accurate figures of the total amount of compensation paid in the fiscal year 1916. In order, however, that some idea of the amount that is likely to be paid might be obtained, an average of the cases in each department for 1915 has been applied to the pending cases for the fiscal year 1916 in each department. That estimate is shown separately in the table from the reports of completed cases.

Sincerely, yours,

W. B. WILSON, Secretary.

HON. THOMAS TAGGART,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

Cost of compensation for fatal and nonfatal injuries during the fiscal years 1914, 1915, and 1916 (a portion of the latter year estimated).

Department.	1914		1915		1916
	Total amount of compensation paid.	Claims allowed.	Total amount of compensation paid.	Claims allowed.	Completed cases.		Incomplete cases. <sup>1</sup>
					Total amount of compensation paid.	Claims allowed.	Estimated amount of compensation.	Claims allowed.
Navy.....	$131,147.20	1,166	$181,687.44	1,530	$111,981.91	1,207	$83,679.73	463
War.....	114,445.52	761	110,074.45	819	41,312.43	555	52,378.60	401
Interior.....	64,754.08	373	63,808.64	383	9,413.73	113	10,727.20	92
Post Office.....	882.50	2	95.75	2	155.10	3	47.86	1
Treasury.....	9,305.01	78	12,967.77	76	7,276.38	60	4,948.27	20
Agriculture.....	13,622.70	50	17,766.25	73	4,162.19	36	8,274.68	34
Commerce.....	12,531.09	32	9,089.02	42	2,301.95	25	7,357.72	31
Government Printing Office.....	4,825.15	44	4,111.10	52	2,287.91	32	474.36	6
Miscellaneous.....					30.00	1
Total.....	351,513.25	2,506	399,603.42	3,007	178,941.63	2,032	167,888.42	1,093
Total for 1916, $346,830.05.

<sup>1</sup> These are cases in which reports of compensation paid have not yet been received, and the amounts shown have been computed by multiplying the number of such claims allowed by the average payment per case in each department for the fiscal year 1915.

COURTS OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that on Monday, at the conclusion of the routine business, if we shall have a morning hour—if not, at the convenience of the Senate on that day—I shall address the Senate on Senate joint resolution 142, introduced by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS], proposing to amend Article III, section 1, of the Constitution of the United States.

ARMY APPROPRIATIONS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 16400) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, agree to the conference asked for by the House, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to, and the Vice President appointed Mr. CHAMBERLAIN, Mr. FLETCHER, and Mr. WARREN conferees on the part of the Senate.

MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATIONS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 16099) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, agree to the conference asked for by the House, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to, and the Vice President appointed Mr. CHAMBERLAIN, Mr. FLETCHER, and Mr. DU PONT conferees on the part of the Senate.

CLEMENCY TO IRISH PRISONERS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Are there further resolutions? If not, the morning business is closed.

Mr. STONE, Mr. OWEN, and Mr. POINDEXTER addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the report I made this morning relating to Sir Roger Casement. Permit me to make this one observation: If the report of the committee should be expressive of the attitude of the Senate, it would not matter whether or not it was agreed to to-day or at any future time; but if that report does not express the sentiment of the Senate and if the Senate should desire to take some other action, I wish to call attention to the fact, which may not be generally known here, that the date of the execution of Sir Roger Casement is set for Thursday of next week, and, if any affirmative action is to be taken, it should be taken now. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the report.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I reserve an objection, if the consideration of the report leads to debate.

Mr. STONE. Well, no objection has yet been made.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, let us have the report read, so that we may understand what it is.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the report.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. STONE, from the Committee on Foreign Relations:

[To accompany S. Res. 236 and S. Res. 237 and the amendment proposed by Mr. STERLING July 25 to S. Res. 237.]

The Committee on Foreign Relations having considered the following resolutions referred to the said committee, namely, Senate resolution 236, requesting the President to ask the British Government to exercise clemency in treatment of Irish political prisoners; Senate resolution 237, requesting the President to advise the United States ambassador to Great Britain to use his influence, unofficially, to obtain commutation of the sentence of death of Sir Roger Casement, and amendment to Senate resolution 237, proposed by Mr. STERLING, adopted the following resolution, which was ordered to be reported:

"Your committee deem it inexpedient that the Senate should adopt any of these resolutions at this time, and are of opinion that they would not tend to accomplish the purpose sought by them. Your committee therefore report back the resolutions and recommend that none of them be adopted."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the report of the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I feel that I should say to the Senate while the resolution—

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I rise to a question of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Connecticut will state it.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. As I understand, the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] has asked unanimous consent for the present consideration of the report of the committee. I should like to have that consent given before the report is considered, if it is to be considered now.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to the request of the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I shall object at any time in this proceeding if the report leads to debate. I have the right to reserve the objection, as I understand the parliamentary practice of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. No; the Senator has not any such right. The objection must be made now or not at all.

Mr. OWEN. Then I object.

Mr. STONE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the report.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the report.

Mr. OWEN. I make the point of order that until the hour of 1 o'clock arrives the Senator has not the right to make that motion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is overruled, the morning business having been closed. All in favor of the motion of the Senator from Missouri will say aye [a pause]; those opposed no. [A pause.] The ayes have it, the motion is agreed to, and the report of the Committee on Foreign Relations is before the Senate for consideration.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, the position of the Committee on Foreign Relations has been stated by the chairman of the committee [Mr. STONE]. I believe the committee were practically unanimous with regard to the intent of the report they have sent in. The report deals with the resolutions that were referred to the committee. I feel it my duty, however, to state on behalf of the minority of the committee that while there was no material disagreement with regard to the questions submitted to the committee by the Senate, that there were some questions of difference with regard to the action the Senate should take in full and final disposition of the entire subject.

There was a minority of the committee—and I believe I am at liberty to state that the chairman of the committee was one of that minority, as well as were the Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN] and myself—that believed that this whole question having come before the Senate of the United States and having been publicly discussed as it has been, should not be dismissed without some affirmative action or at least without some expression of hope. The minority to which I have referred believed that this body as a body may express hope that the political prisoners of Great Britain may be treated with clemency.

The minority feel that, while there may have been a question as to whether or not it was advisable for this matter to have ever been brought before the Senate, yet it having been brought before the Senate, there should be some more definite expression than that contained in the report. The report states that certain resolutions which were introduced in this body and referred to that committee in the opinion of the committee would not serve the purposes for which they were intended. That is probably true; that has practically been agreed to by every member of the Foreign Relations Committee; but that report does not deal with anything else, and leaves this entire question, which has been thrown before this body, without any definite determination.

While the action of this body may be quasi official, I do not think that the action of the Senate, through the medium of a simple resolution, is the action of the Government of the United States. It is the expression of the hope of the Members of this body that these political prisoners will be treated with clemency; it is the expression of this group of men, upon whom has been thrust this question that justice will be tempered with mercy; and I do not believe that any such expression of hope by this body will be misunderstood or unkindly received. So, Mr. President, on behalf of the minority of the committee, under the circumstances which I have stated, I offer, as a substitute for the report submitted by the Senator from Missouri, the resolution which I send to the desk, and I ask for its adoption.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the resolution offered by the Senator from Nevada as a substitute for the report submitted by the Senator from Missouri on behalf of the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate expresses the hope that the British Government may exercise clemency in the treatment of Irish political prisoners; and that the President be requested to transmit this resolution to that Government.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, for myself I desire to say that neither the report of the committee nor the substitute submitted by the Senator from Nevada satisfies the thoughts and prompting which led me to introduce originally the resolution which I offered, and I am unqualifiedly opposed to both of them.

Mr. President, if the report submitted by the Committee on Foreign Relations, a great committee selected because of their learning and profound intelligence, is the expression of the sentiment of that committee, then, I say, God help our country. Alas, Sir Roger Casement, patriot, statesman, author, and poet, thy name must not even be lisped in the Senate of the United States lest the British lion may growl disapproval! Again I say, God help America.

I do not believe that any of the resolutions which have been presented as substitutes for my original resolution are direct enough. They are too indirect. It may be that none of the resolutions offered will avail anything, but they may. I feel that we must not leave this Chamber without positive action. Casement's blood shall not be on my hands, and it must not be on the hands of the Senate of the United States.

I am in receipt of a letter, sad and touching, from the sister of Sir Roger Casement. I am not at liberty to present that letter to the Senate, but I feel I must heed this woman's appeal. Further, I am just in receipt of a telegram from Atlantic City, where she is, pleading in agonizing words, "For God's sake do what you can to save my poor brother, who is in the very shadow of the gallows." In the face of this situation, will the Senate stand idle? Can Senators go to their homes without doing what little they can in a positive way for this unfortunate man? Shall it be written that the Senate of the United States of the Sixty-fourth Congress is deaf and dumb to the pleas of humanity? Have you forgotten the slogan of 60 years ago, "You will hear from old Ossawatimie Brown when you nail the lid of his coffin down." The South did hear from old Ossawatimie Brown when the lid of his coffin was nailed down. I was not in sympathy with Ossawatimie Brown's activities and proceedings, but a generous, humane course toward him would have saved the South from years of torment and disaster. I fear, Mr. President, we have grown drunk and sodden with our wealth and prosperity, and I feel that the propositions that now come to us are most miserable makeshifts. I lament the lack of spirit and backbone of the committee.

God knows my heart is in this case. According to the latest report, it is decreed that this unfortunate man is to be executed on the 3d day of August, now so close at hand, and I shudder at the very thought. My efforts have been directed toward stopping this cruel and brutal execution; but every step that I have taken has been met with parliamentary rebuff and technical objection, carrying my efforts over for days and even for weeks, until the fatal hour is near at hand, and I feel we must do something.

Oh, that the spirit of '76 might prevail to-day! Oh, Mr. President, think of what our Washington said, think of what our Washington did, think of his deep sympathy for Ireland, and then look upon us—dumb, stoic, and idle. On July 20, 1788, George Washington wrote to Sir Edward Newenham as follows:

MOUNT VERNON, July 20, 1788.

TO SIR EDWARD NEWENHAM,

DEAR SIR: * * * If Ireland were 500 miles farther distant from Britain the case with respect to the former would be speedily and materially changed for the better.

I have the honor to be, etc.,

GEORGE WASHINGTON.

Then, again, as showing his sympathy with Ireland, a sympathy which we seem to lack, I quote the following letter of George Washington:

MOUNT VERNON, January 20, 1784.

TO THE YANKEE CLUB,

Stewartstown, County Tyrone, Ireland.

GENTLEMEN: It is with unfeigned satisfaction that I accept your congratulation on the late happy and glorious revolution.

If in the course of our successful contest any good consequences have resulted to the oppressed Kingdom of Ireland, it will afford a new source of felicitation to all who respect the interests of humanity.

I have the honor to be, with due consideration,

GEORGE WASHINGTON.

Again he writes:

Patriots of Ireland!—Champions of liberty in all lands—be strong in hope! Your cause is identical with mine. You are calumniated in your day; I was misrepresented by the loyalists of my day. I triumphed. Had I failed, the scaffold would be my doom. But now my enemies pay me honor. Had I failed, I would have deserved the same honor. I stood true to my cause even when victory had fled. In that I merited success. You must act likewise.

WASHINGTON.

He had the courage of his thoughts; he had the courage to express his sympathy.

Again I presented to the Senate and asked to have printed in the RECORD an address by the Continental Congress to the Irish Parliament in Dublin. I quote from it as follows:

We sympathize with you in your distress, and are pleased to find that the design of subjugating us, has persuaded the administration to dispense to Ireland some vagrant rays of ministerial sunshine.

Throughout the address there are expressions of sympathy even stronger than the one I have read. The address was signed by the immortal John Hancock, signer of the Declaration of Independence, and was dated Philadelphia, July 28, 1775.

These men had the courage of their convictions. Then it was not a question how the British Parliament would feel. The Continental Congress were expressing their sentiments of humanity and of justice.

I am criticized by some. I want to read just a little scrap of a letter I received from a very dear friend of nearly 40 years of my life:

Permit me to congratulate you on the efforts you are making to save the life of Sir Roger Casement. "Superior diplomacy" may call your plea a blunder, but the heart of humanity is with you. It would indeed be a victory of honest sympathy over polished punctillos, indifferent to the throb that makes the whole world kin.

D. M. BOGAN,
Rector of St. Mary's Church.

I have received 50 or more letters of that and of kindred character. And so now I say, Mr. President, it may be that I can get nothing better. This may be all I can hope to attain, simply to express myself; and this substitute, or the resolution reported from the committee, may be all I can secure. This committee, after deliberation and redeliberation, this great committee, ponderous in intellect and intelligence, and knowledge of law, have brought forth a mouse—a miserable little mouse—bereft of ribs and backbone. A veritable jenny mouse is the report of this committee.

Well, Mr. President, if I must, I must. I feel that something must be done for Sir Roger Casement. But three days remain before this man may be on the gallows, and I feel that I would be short of my duty as a human being and as a man did I not express myself as I have. However good may be your promptings—and I believe they may be of the best—I oppose the adoption of the report, and I shall oppose the adoption of the substitute.

I ask to have printed, as part of my remarks, a newspaper clipping containing a letter from the Irish poet, William Butler Yeats, on this subject.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, that may be done.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[By International News Service.]

POET YEATS PLEADS FOR CASEMENT PARDON.

LONDON, July 27.

William Butler Yeats, the Irish poet and playwright, has written the following letter to Premier Asquith:

"DEAR SIR: I have never written to an English minister on any Irish question, but I am convinced that the execution of Sir Roger Casement will have so evil an effect that I break the habit.

"The evil that has been done can not be undone, but it need not be aggravated weeks afterwards with every circumstance of deliberation.

"I am convinced that his execution will have an evil effect on America. I had a letter a couple of weeks ago from a keen political observer in New York describing the execution of 15 Irish leaders as a greater shock to American opinion than the sinking of the Lusitania. "The pardon of Casement may give an opportunity for more moderate opinion in Ireland to recover something of its weight."

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, as I had the honor of submitting one of the resolutions to the Senate, I was naturally interested in the action of the Committee on Foreign Relations; and I was very much surprised to hear that out of the membership of that committee only the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], and the Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN] dissented from the majority report which recommended that no action be taken on the subject matter by this body. I can not account for it in any other way than by believing that they were not informed either of the purpose of the resolution or of the precedents, which, from the earliest days of the Republic, have been established in such matters by the Congress; or possibly, as has been intimated, they fear to recommend a favorable report on any of the resolutions because it might offend the Government of Great Britain.

What is the subject matter which engages our attention? It is simply the expression of sympathy, in a broad way—departing from the language of the resolution—with the aspirations of the people of another country for liberty, for autonomous government; and in this particular country, Ireland, that struggle has been going on for a very great number of years, and therefore it ought to be well known.

In 1782 a home-rule Parliament was established in Ireland, under circumstances not unlike those that exist to-day, and doubtless that example was in the minds of the men who recently engaged in a revolution. England was involved in a foreign war. If I recollect aright, she was engaged in trying to suppress the independence of the United States; and the Irish, taking advantage of her foreign war, as they did the other day, rose in rebellion, and finally established in Dublin a Parliament, which consisted of 300 members and which lasted for 18 years, during which time, under the leadership of such men as Henry Grattan, it enacted legislation which led to the extension of Irish commerce and the promotion of Irish industries and manufactures; and it was so eminent a success that this same British Government at the end of 18 years plotted to destroy it.

There was no revolution to put down. The country was prosperous and at peace; but as England in that day only held subject States for the benefit of enhancing its own wealth, making them tributary to the mother country, it had no sympathy with the reestablishment of Irish nationality as expressed in a local legislative body and undertook its destruction, having no excuse whatever outside of the fact that I have stated. Ireland was at peace. There was no domestic tumult; there were no threats against England. It was simply, in an orderly way, pursuing its own proper interests, as expressed by its legislative body in laws, just as our American States are doing every day.

In order, however, to destroy that Parliament, England resorted to the methods of Walpole, and, as told by Sir Jonah Barrington, in his History of the Rise and Fall of the Irish Nation, $5,500,000 was used as bribe money. The rotten boroughs were all bought. The members were corrupted, not only by money where necessary, but by that more polite and insidious method of conferring honors and baronetcies and titles. And so this Parliament was led to dissolve itself, and, as Lord Byron said, that celebrated "act of union," so called, was simply the union of the shark with its victim.

From that day the Irish people, resenting such treatment, have persisted in a demand for a local legislative body; and Mr. Gladstone, who began life as a Tory, inimical to Irish interests, and who was described as the rising hope of the stern and unbending party, gradually, by a process of evolution, convinced himself, as he did the country, that Ireland was entitled to a local legislative body.

Coming down hastily to the present day, the Government of England, under Mr. Asquith, promised home rule to Ireland, and just prior to the outbreak of the European war a statute was put upon the books by which Ireland was given a local legislative body. What happened? At that very time, when the nation was trembling in the balance between war and peace, the men of the north of Ireland, under Sir Edward Carson, incited a mutiny among the troops, and generals of the line laid down their batons, insubordinate; and hence the British Parliament hesitated, and finally decided not to grant at that time a local legislative body to Ireland. The mutiny of the troops and the insubordination of the generals—the treason, if we are to reprobate treason under such circumstances, of the men of Ulster—taught the men of the south, the greater number, that there was apparently no means within the constitution of acquiring their cherished and promised rights; and that must have led them to this recent revolution. It was apparent that there was no way of accomplishing anything except by violence. That is the advantage of our system of government, where we have representation and where the people vote. There is no excuse for treason, as there is no excuse for violence, because within the Constitution we can acquire whatever benefits we may desire.

I do not believe that the people of Ireland are loyal to England, whether in the north or in the south, and I find much palliation for their course. It has been said by a philosopher that liberty is impossible without order, order is impossible without government, and government in any worthy sense of the term is impossible without a settled conviction on the part of the people of its legitimacy and their obligation in conscience to obey it; and therefore the people of Ireland are, if you please, disloyal, because there is no settled conviction on their part that the government which is imposed upon them is legitimately their government.

So the dealings of England with Ireland have been a source of constant friction, but the realization of legislative independence would have, I believe, put an end to all trouble. The wisdom of conciliation and clemency is manifest, and in that connection I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the opinion of a man great in authority. Mr. Seward, Secretary of State, addressing Mr. Adams, the minister to England, December 9, 1867, said:

The judgment of mankind is that in revolutionary movements which are carried on by large masses and which appeal to popular sympathy capital executions of individuals who fall within the power of the Government are unwise and often unjust. Such severity, when practiced upon a citizen of a foreign State, excites a new sympathy by enlisting feelings of nationality and patriotism. * * * The soundness of this principle is quite easily understood after the revolutionary movement is ended.

Mr. President, we are in the midst of revolutionary days, if you please. We are considering something without perspective that is very close to us; and Mr. Seward's observation, when he says that the soundness of the principle is quite easily recognized after the revolutionary movement is ended, is quite true.

He goes on to say:

It is difficult to accept the truth in the midst of revolutionary terror or violence. When the President of the United States dismissed the prosecutions in the United States courts of the so-called Fenians who attempted an unlawful and forbidden invasion of Canada, and returned them to their homes at the expense of the Government and at the same time obtained, through the wise counsels of Sir Frederick Bruce and the Governor-General of Canada, a mitigation of the capital punishments adjudged against those who were convicted in the Canadian courts, the President adopted proceedings which have practically assured the continuance of peace upon the Canadian border.

Hence I am disposed to believe, Mr. President, that England, if indeed she did intimate to this Government that she would regard as an ungracious act any interposition in favor of Sir Roger Casement or other Irish prisoners of war, has acted unwisely in her own interest; and, on the other hand, it does not appear to me of any particular importance if that intimation were verified. I doubt if England made to our ambassador in London an intimation that such an act on the part of this Government would be objectionable. I doubt it because the President has already, relating to Irish prisoners, made a plea for clemency; and I doubt if the President, charged under the Constitution with the duty of directing our foreign affairs, would so transgress if there were a clear intimation from England.

It appears, according to the philosophy of Seward and the facts of history, that carrying out the extreme penalty of the law in political cases ultimately operates to the detriment of the government engaging in such a business. I do not know that we consult any foreign Government when we desire to make a protest, believing that our protest, however, is based upon sound judgment, patriotic considerations, and ample precedents. I do not know that this Government has fallen away from the virtues of the earlier days; but it does seem to me very strange that there has not been a more spontaneous demand for an expression of sympathy and a request for mitigation of sentence in these cases.

I do not refer alone, in order to emphasize this matter, to the case of Sir Roger Casement. He is but one of the Irish prisoners of war; and I do not believe, although his fate is imminent, in making at this time a discrimination in his favor. If we pass the resolution which has been presented by the minority of the Foreign Relations Committee, it will be entirely agreeable to me, because I believe it will affect not only Sir Roger Casement but all the other patriotic men who were willing to give up their lives for a cause which is dear to us as Americans.

I want to emphasize "as Americans," because this is not a plea we are making for Ireland alone. It might be Poland or it might be Hungary or it might be Greece. It might, as in other days, be Cuba. We are pleading for the cause of liberty, expressing sympathy with the aspirations of a brave people; and when men are willing to die for a cause it is a cause worthy of our consideration. Those men went against the power "whose morning drumbeat," in the language of Daniel Webster, "following the sun and keeping company with the hours, encircles the earth daily with one continuous and unbroken strain of the martial airs of England." They went against the power of that nation. It was almost futile, but they made their protest, and they died. The history of liberty has been from scaffold to scaffold and from stake to stake. The path to American liberty has been paved by the bones of Irishmen and Frenchmen, and all those who participated from time immemorial in every land in the struggle for liberty which finally overthrew kingcraft and gave republican institutions and free government, under whatever form is established, an opportunity to exist.

I recall now that Webster, when he used those eloquent words to describe the power of England, just quoted, had reference to—what? Under what circumstances were they uttered? They were uttered in order to show the patriotism, the valor, and the love of liberty of the men of America, who, notwithstanding the strength of that power, matched the Continental Army against it. That is identically what Ireland has done in our time as formerly—willing to lead an almost hopeless battle for rights which we all concede she is entitled to, because we can not claim any rights for ourselves which we are not willing to accord to others.

But I was surprised, I repeat, Mr. President, that there should not have been a more spontaneous demonstration in the cause of liberty in this body. There was once a man who was a great ornament to the Senate of the United States, who made a plea for Grecian independence. That seems a far cry—Grecian independence. There is no such intimacy between Greece and America as there is between Ireland and America. But there is a principle involved—and yet it was shown here the other day that the Irish participated to a very great extent in winning for us our independence when other colonists stayed at home, because, perhaps they found it convenient to lean to the Tory side of that conflict at that time. But Daniel Webster in 1824—and this should convince the Senate as to the propriety of our action, as contemplated, on the revolution in Greece—proposed a resolution providing for the appointment of a representative to the independent government set up by the revolutionists. It was a recognition stronger than a mere expression of sympathy.

Its adoption created a strong sentiment throughout the civilized world, which ultimately led to the liberation of a portion of Greece from the Turkish yoke. He spoke of the criticisms which were made about an expression of American opinion on the subject of Grecian independence, and stated that, in his judgment, such comment found no justification. He added—these are his words:

In my judgment the subject is interesting to the people and Government of this country, and we are called upon by considerations of great weight and moment to express our opinions upon it. These considerations, I think, spring from a sense of our own duty, our character, and our own interest.

Referring to the duty of America, he said:

Let it comprehend, not merely her present advantage but her permanent interest, her elevated character as one of the free States of the world, and her duty toward those great principles which have hitherto maintained the relative independence of nations, and which have, more especially, made her what she is.

The President, James Monroe, had stated in his message, and Mr. Webster had quoted him that—

A strong hope has been long entertained, founded on the heroic struggle of the Greeks, that they would succeed in their contest, and resume their equal station among the nations of the earth. It is believed that the whole civilized world takes a deep interest in their welfare.

I might well, Mr. Chairman—

Said Mr. Webster—avoid the responsibility of this measure—

Here is a matter which I am sure appeals to the Senate, because the Senate apparently is in a doubting frame of mind. Mr. Webster said:

I might well, Mr. Chairman, avoid the responsibility of this measure if it had, in my judgment, any tendency to change the policy of the country. With the general course of that policy I am quite satisfied. The Nation is prosperous, peaceful, and happy; and I should very reluctantly put its peace, prosperity, or happiness at risk. It appears to me, however, that this resolution is strictly conformable to our general policy, and not only consistent with our interests but even demanded by a large and liberal view of those interests.

In the next place, I take it for granted that the policy of this country, springing from the nature of our Government and the spirit of all our institutions, is, so far as it respects the interesting questions which agitate the present age, on the side of liberal and enlightened sentiments. The age is extraordinary, the spirit that actuates it is peculiar and marked, and our own relation to the times we live in and to the questions which interest them is equally marked and peculiar. We are placed by our good fortune and the wisdom and valor of our ancestors in a condition in which we can act no obscure part. Be it for honor or be it for dishonor, whatever we do is sure to attract the observation of the world. As one of the free States among the nations, as a great and rapidly rising Republic, it would be impossible for us, if we were so disposed, to prevent our principles, our sentiments, and our example from producing some effect upon the opinions and hopes of society throughout the civilized world. It rests, probably, with ourselves to determine whether the influence of these shall be salutary or pernicious.

Mr. President, that was the declaration of Webster at a time when this Republic did not have the power and importance which it enjoys to-day. Have we receded from our belief in the wisdom of such a policy, the supreme Republic of the world refusing, through its Senate, to express in respectful and even mild language a word of sympathy for a people that is guilty of no other offense than seeking for themselves by open revolution and warfare that measure of self-government which our States enjoy?

Following illustrious precedent and in harmony with our established policy, we again, in 1851, took up the cause of the Hungarian patriot, Louis Kossuth, and you will observe that England herself joined with the United States in saving the life of this revolutionist.

The Hungarian Diet demanded from the Austrian Emperor freedom of press, trial by jury, a national system of education, and a responsible ministry. Then a modern State was demanded under Kossuth, with a ministry responsible to Parliament and a people equal before the law. They declared a Republic and made Kossuth governor. Then Russia intervened and crushed the Republic. The Emperor Franz Joseph's vengeance was terrible. Thousands of Hungarians were hung, shot, or imprisoned. Kossuth fled to Turkey and was later liberated by the intervention of the United States and England and he visited the United States. On December 15, 1851, the House, in concurrence with the Senate, passed the following:

A joint resolution of welcome to Louis Kossuth.

Resolved, That Congress, in the name and behalf of the people of the United States, give to Louis Kossuth a cordial welcome to the Capital and the country; and that a copy of this resolution be transmitted to him by the President of the United States.

Mr. President, I know that the resolution before us is inspired by the worthiest motives. In no sense is it political. It is in no sense baiting the power of England. It is simply an expression of sympathy by the greatest Government on earth, republican in form, for those who have aspirations for liberty.

But I read in the Washington Herald, in its edition of July 27, that while we are debating not only is the sentence running against Sir Roger Casement but that 2,000 innocent Irishmen held in British jails are subject to the greatest abuse. The dispatch reads:

LONDON, July 26.

In the House of Commons to-day Timothy Healy, one of the Irish leaders, charged that of the 3,000 men and women arrested in connection with the Irish rebellion, 2,000 were innocent and were treated with a cruelty and ferocity that even Germany had not shown to Belgium.

Two thousand innocent persons, even innocent of a righteous revolution, are being punished in British jails. Hence the scope of the resolution should include not only Sir Rober Casement but all others who are in a similar plight.

Mr. President, I do not believe that the committee is without sympathy with the cause, but they fear that this proposed act is one of supererogation, perhaps, and that it involves some impropriety. I think I have shown you that there is no impropriety, and that England can not justly take offense, because, in the view of history, if clemency is shown these men, England will profit by it. Her immediate desire for vengeance and punishment may not be gratified, but by an act of clemency she will save perhaps the constant recurrence of revolutionary movements, and then by granting the measure of home rule promised she will conclude in a satisfactory way her relations with her unhappy neighbor.

It is unfortunate that there is at this moment a disposition on her part to seemingly justify the traditional taunt against England that she is perfidious, caused by the report that she is about to violate her own agreement with Ireland. But that only accentuates the necessity on her part to exercise moderation at this time.

I wish to call the attention of the Senate, in conclusion, to simply one fact. During the discussion in this body the President of the United States properly charged with the conduct of our foreign relations has already taken action; and so the resolution before this body, if Senators have not heard it, reads:

That the Senate expresses the hope that the British Government may exercise clemency in the treatment of Irish political prisoners.

It is merely an expression of hope.

Hope, for a season, bade the world farewell,
And Freedom shriek'd as Kosciusko fell!

The expression of a hope is certainly the least expression that could possibly be made. It is not a demand, it is not even a request, but in a spirit of compromise, in order to meet some opposition, this resolution was evolved, and the Senate ventures to express the hope.

I accept that amendment in lieu of my own, because I believe it will fairly put the Senate upon record, and I do not think that the Senate is unwilling to go on record on a subject of this kind notwithstanding the apparent adverse report of the committee.

But I said the President has acted. I hold in my hand a letter addressed to the Knights of St. Patrick, signed by the Secretary of the President, Mr. Tumulty, in which he says:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington.

MR. ROBERT P. TROY,
President of the Knights of St. Patrick, San Francisco:

Immediately upon the receipt of your telegram of May 19 the subject matter of your message was taken up with the State Department. Every effort has been made by the department to see that Americans are fully protected, and each case has been taken up vigorously. From the information received by the department, it appears that the courts-martial in the cases to which you referred have been suspended and that the trials have been conducted in the regular criminal courts.

Sincerely, yours,

J. P. TUMULTY,
Secretary to the President.

I am told that the Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN] at about that time went to the President of the United States in behalf of an American citizen named Lynch and he had but three hours before the appointed time of the execution in order to make his protest, and the President immediately in the dead of night sent a protest to England against the execution of this American citizen for a crime involved in the revolution. It was no ordinary crime. A crime committed in the process of a revolution should not be designated a crime at all. England yielded.

The same is true as to two other citizens, I believe, of New York, named Volera and Kilannan, and, in both those instances also, the intervention of the President saved the lives of American citizens who resided in Ireland temporarily at that time, and could not restrain their American spirit to help the people of Ireland in their struggle for independence.

In acknowledging the action of the President, the society, to which the letter was addressed, says:

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., July 11, 1916.

HON. WOODROW WILSON,
The White House, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: On behalf of the Knights of St. Patrick, I beg to acknowledge your esteemed letter of July 7, forwarded through Mr. Tumulty, advising us of your kind and prompt action upon receipt of our telegram of May 19 urging, in accordance with established diplomatic usage, friendly suggestion from you to the British Government in behalf of clemency for the prisoners who were concerned in the recent Irish uprising.

I know that our members will be highly pleased when they learn through the medium of your esteemed letter that you have ascertained through the State Department that courts-martial in the cases which we referred to have been suspended and that the accused have been put to trial in the regular criminal courts.

I have taken the liberty of assuring our members at all times that we could depend upon you to take such action as would be consistent with discretion and established diplomatic precedents.

I shall present your communication to our society at its regular monthly meeting, and I know that it will feel grateful for the kindly consideration which you have given to its telegraphic request.

Very sincerely, yours,

ROBERT P. TROY,
President Knights of St. Patrick.

Now, the members were grateful to the President. Shall they not also be grateful to the Senate?

The effect, Mr. President, of passing a resolution by the Senate will not only give solace to our numerous fellow citizens in this country who look with extreme solicitude upon the fate of the thousands of Irish political prisoners now in British jails, but it will cheer the prisoners themselves. It will awaken sentiments of gratitude in the breasts of the people of that country who in the earlier days fought our battles and sustained our ascendancy as against the power of their greater neighbor, who has not always been friendly to our aspirations. I think the action of the Senate will not only serve that purpose, but it will serve the greater purpose which we have in view of accomplishing results.

When Mr. Webster was taunted in his debate on Grecian independence by Members, who asked, "Well, what are you going to do? Are you going to enlist the armies of the United States in behalf of Greece?" he said, "Oh, no; there is a greater power than fleets and armies." In other words, then—and it is truer to-day than it was in 1824—the power of public opinion—to which he referred—was the dominating force of the world. In the chancelleries of Europe it is asked, "How do the United States feel on this subject? What is the public opinion of the great Republic across the water? What will be their attitude?" And it having been ascertained that the power and force of American public opinion is in favor of clemency, then clemency will be granted; but if there is apathy and indifference or inaction here in the Senate to-day, it will be reported that America is not interested nor concerned in the fate of the Irish revolutionists, nor in the fate of men seeking anywhere to set up a legislative independence, nor of men struggling and making the highest sacrifice in the cause of human freedom. Let not that be said.

What are the elements of public opinion, which, according to Mr. Webster, is a force greater than fleets and armies? It is in the free expression of a sentiment passing from man to man, the views of the press, the conversations in the streets, the resolutions of legislative bodies, from the humblest council to the highest legislative. So the Senate of the United States by merely expressing a hope, if it shall so decide, will add its contribution to the volume of public opinion; and, without striking a blow, or saying an unkind word, or in any way offending a friendly nation, the great purpose, which I am sure we all seek to compass, I sincerely believe will be accomplished.

Mr. WILLIAMS and Mr. OWEN addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, in spite of an apparent conflict of opinion in the Committee on Foreign Relations, there was really no conflict at all. The committee was in absolute agreement as to a desired end, which every member of the committee wished to be consummated. The members of the committee differed only about the best means to accomplish that end. Three members of the committee thought that it could be best accomplished by adopting the Phelan resolution as amended and reported to the Senate by the minority. The remainder of the committee thought that the passage of that or of any other resolution upon this subject, directed simply to one European power and ignoring like cases under other European powers, would not accomplish the purpose sought, to wit, a commutation and finally a pardon for Sir Roger Casement, for whom everybody had sympathy, not only in the committee but all over the United States, because of the fact that it is perfectly evident that he is half dreamer and idealist on the one side, and, subjectively speaking, patriot on the other. Whatever may be the relationship of what he did to statute law, no man who has studied the evidence and who has studied the man can doubt the fact that he thought he was serving a patriotic and a holy purpose.

The entire committee therefore felt that the man ought not to be executed any more than Lord George Gordon ought to have been executed away back yonder. By the way, there is a very great resemblance between the characters of the two men—reason not altogether sound in either case, idealists, dreamers, pure purposes, and all that. The only difference in the committee was as to whether or not any resolution of this sort would accomplish its purpose. All the members of the committee, except three, were of the opinion that it not only would not accomplish its purpose, but that it would not even tend to bring about the end sought; that, upon the contrary, it might be detrimental to Sir Roger Casement's chance of pardon—not probably but possibly in the last case. As one member of the committee said, and said rightly, "If I were Sir Roger Casement's attorney, I would wire the Senate of the United States, 'Please drop this matter.'"

Mr. President, the time may come, but it has not as yet come, when national sensitiveness about the interference of other peoples with a particular people's domestic concerns will cease to exist; the time will come, though it has not yet come, when a narrow nationalism, sometimes chauvinism, will give place to a broader internationalism; when a citizen of every country may become also a "citizen of the world"; but, as the things are now organized and men are now constituted, every people has a sensitiveness, which is acute, about the attempt of any other people, through any of its official bodies to interfere with its domestic affairs and quarrels.

It is idle to say that the Senate of the United States can pass an unofficial resolution. The Senate of the United States is an official body, a constituent part of the American Government, and everything which it does is necessarily official, and can not be unofficial.

There would be no objection in any country in the world, I suppose, to a petition signed as individuals by nonresidents and aliens asking clemency in a case. I myself would be perfectly willing to-day or to-morrow to sign a petition to the British Home Office for the pardon of Sir Roger Casement, just as we here might receive any day a petition for Armenians, Poles, Irish, English, Scotch, or Welsh for the pardon of some favorite citizen of theirs; but that is a totally different thing from having a branch of the Government of the United States pass a resolution of that sort. Nor is it at all on a footing with Daniel Webster's resolution recognizing the independence of Greece. We not only passed resolutions recognizing the independence of Greece, but we have passed resolutions in the case of a score or more of South American Republics who sought and had measurably attained independence. We were generally the first Government to pass such a resolution, although in the case of Texas we were not, several European powers having recognized her independence before we did; but that was simply because of an apprehended slavery issue growing out of the Texas situation.

Mr. President, Seward was right in the language quoted from him by the Senator from California. A nation which treats those living in a part of its territory struggling rightly or wrongfully for community independence as ordinary criminals after the struggle is over and put down is simply a mad nation; it is a crazy nation. Leaving out the immorality of it, the lack of magnanimity in such cases is a lack of sense. The history of the whole world proves it. Had the United States Government after the Civil War proceeded to execute Robert E. Lee and Joseph E. Johnston the stings of the war would have lasted until now and far beyond now.

It need not be thought that the Government of England is composed of fools. It has seldom been. There sits in Parliament now Sir Arthur Lynch, a British subject and an Irishman, who took a gun in his hand and fought for the Boers against England. Subject to the ordinary penalties of treason, he was sentenced to death after a fair and very considerate and courteous trial—such as Sir Roger Casement also received—under the laws of Great Britain, and was subsequently pardoned. Great Britain is an independent nation, and makes her own laws. The leaders of the Boer Republics were not only pardoned at once, but the English Government went further than the northern Government went after the Civil War, and, had you imitated her example, the scars of our war would have been healed over sooner than they were. The English Government not only did not undertake to execute, nor even to try, nor to do anything else with a single Boer that had fought her during the Boer war, nor with a single Irishman—and there were many of them who had joined the Boer army—but she went further and turned over the government of the country to the South African confederacy, one State of which is the Transvaal and another which is the Orange Free State, and made premier Gen. Botha, who was the most accomplished perhaps of all the Boer military leaders. What was the result? When this great war came on everybody thought that Great Britain would find mutiny and trouble in South Africa. She found virtually none. Not a British soldier was necessary to put down what little trouble occurred there. Botha and the Boers and the South Africans, the men of Cape Colony and Natal and the Transvaal and the Orange Free State, put it down themselves; and then they themselves went further and proceeded to conquer and take over, as far as they could, the German possessions in South Africa.

Do you suppose that wise men and educated men like the English statesmen of all parties in the present cabinet have not learned this lesson? They are no longer ruled over by a fool or half fool like George III, who afterwards went crazy. They no longer have a premier who is kept in power by corrupt parliamentary methods and royal command as Lord North was. No Government in the world is any more responsive to local public opinion than is the present English Government. Petitions are raining in now from England and Scotland and Wales, as well as from Ireland, to the British Government asking clemency in the case of Sir Roger Casement and other Irish political prisoners, if they can be called political prisoners—for that raises another question—but, at any rate, the petitions are pouring in for them.

What the committee feared was not alone the effect of this sort of a resolution by an official body of the United States Government upon the British Government itself; it feared still more the effect upon public opinion in England and Scotland; that it might check the great movement headed by a score of the greatest newspapers of England.

Why, Mr. President, the English ministry would be madmen if they executed Sir Roger Casement; they would be fit subjects for incarceration as lunatics; they would not be statesmen; they would show themselves so shortcoming as not to be possessed even of the ordinary shrewdness of a "peanut politician." I myself have no doubt of the fact that the first thing to follow in this case will be a commutation to imprisonment; that that imprisonment will last until the expiration of the war; and that then a pardon under the great seal will be issued to Sir Roger Casement.

I picked up the other day a communication from a correspondent in London to the Washington Post, and I presume from the very fact that he was a correspondent of the Washington Post that his sympathies were not on the side of the British Government; but however that may be, he wrote that the general opinion all over London, so far as he could learn it, in private and in official circles, was that Sir Roger Casement's sentence would be commuted to life imprisonment and that just as soon as the war was over he would be given a pardon.

That being the case, the majority of the committee thought it was not well to rush in. There are those who "rush in where angels fear to tread," and very frequently men defeat their own purposes by undertaking to do that which does not accomplish but does spoil them, and, in my opinion, that is the case here.

Oh, so far as the word "rebel" is concerned, I can assure the Senator from California that it has no terrors for me in any country at any time. I am like him about that. One of us wore the uniform of the Colonies and was a rebel; one of us wore the uniform of the Confederacy and was a rebel; and that reminds me that the South also fought for community independence, and among the bravest and most effective soldiers that we had to meet in battle array, and who helped as much as any to put us down, were the Irish. Nobody has ever blamed them for that; they happened to take a different view than ours; but I merely cite it to show that it depends upon whose shoulder the water is carried. I do not remember that at that time Ireland raised any great commotion in behalf of southern independence, nor do I remember that the British Parliament ever expressed any sympathy for it. Both of them acted properly and in a perfectly neutral manner, and regarded the American trouble as a matter for America to settle—and America did settle it. We went down under the fate of war; and after that, although the North put us through 10 years of saturnalia, arming recently emancipated ignorant slaves with the ballot, and disqualifying those who were competent to cast a vote all though the South, yet, upon the whole, with that exception, you acted with exceedingly great reasonableness, considering the way that human nature ordinarily runs, and we therefore worked out our own salvation as best we could; and to-day it has been wrought out, and the sections of this country were never before so close together since the Missouri compromise alarmed Thomas Jefferson "like a fire bell in the night" as they are to-day.

Now, Mr. President, the word "rebel" has no terrors for me, as I said. My sympathies are with people everywhere who are contending for community independence, and certainly when they are of a different race and of a different language from their rulers. My sympathies are with the Bohemians in Austria, with the Armenians in Turkey, with Alsace and Lorraine, in Germany; with Poland, in Russia; and all over this world my heart beats sympathetic to the cause of a people who are struggling to throw off an alien rule. Austria is much more alien to Bohemia, Germany is much more alien to Alsace and Lorraine, than England is to Ireland, because there are not, perhaps, a thousand Irishmen who speak the Irish language. They all speak English. So that in language, at any rate, they are one, and in the other cases cited not even that is the case.

Since Senators have rather unprecedentedly talked upon the floor of the Senate about what occurred in the committee, I may be allowed to go a little bit further in that direction. If this resolution is to pass, the scope of it ought to be extended. There are political prisoners held in jail under anticipation of death to-day by Austria, a score of them—Italians from the Trentino and from the Trieste country. Bohemians have been executed, others are in prison and may be. If we are going to ask Great Britain to show leniency to political prisoners, we ought to ask Austria to do it; we ought to ask Russia to do it. When a poor man who speaks French, and whose very heartstrings are tied to La Belle France and to her republican institutions, joins the French Army he is given by the Germans no trial for treason, I can assure the Senator from California. He is tried, if at all, by a drumhead court-martial; he is shot upon the spot. When a poor little English woman in Belgium—Miss Cavell, I believe her name was—committed the inexplicable and inexpressible crime of aiding Belgians to escape from Belgium through Holland, so that they could join the army of their own country, defending their country from an absolutely unprovoked invasion, she "was shot before sunrise." No demand for clemency was expressed by the Senate nor was it given time to express any. True, it, too, was not our affair. Mr. Roosevelt has attempted to make it our affair to have interfered against the invasion of Belgium—ruthless, unprovoked, cruel—no claim, even, that any provocation had been furnished. His position may do credit to his heart, but it does none to his head. We had no treaty obligations in the case, and it was not our affair.

Mr. President, how many tens of thousands of Armenians have been not only ruthlessly killed and shot and butchered but have been deported—men, women, and children driven like cattle out of their country—by the Turkish Empire? What protest or plea for clemency has been addressed by the Senate to the Sultan? If either had been, it would have done them more harm than good. If this resolution passes at all, it ought to be addressed to all the belligerent powers of Europe, expressing the hope upon the part of the United States that they would all show clemency to their several lots of political prisoners.

Senators tell me that it could not hurt the sensibilities of a country. Why, if I were an Englishman, as I am an American—to paraphrase Lord Chatham—I think it might hurt mine.

If a country which had had nothing to say about the execution of Miss Cavell, which had had nothing to say about the ruthless deportation and merciless murder of Armenians, which had had nothing to say to Austria about the execution of Bohemians who for centuries have aspired to liberty, which has had nothing to say about the summary execution, without even a court-martial, of any Belgian who has dared to fight for his native land without a uniform on, executed as a franc-tireur; if such a country should find its only occasion to protest against the barbarities and ruthlessness of the general European situation in the case of my country, and not in the case of any other, I would find it very difficult not to think that there was something discriminatory and somewhat unfriendly in it.

The proposition was made in the committee to extend, as just suggested, the scope of this resolution. The extension was not welcome to those who wanted the resolution passed. We thereupon adopted the resolution which is now before the Senate; to wit, that your committee, having looked through the matter and considered it, find that in their opinion it is "inexpedient at this time to pass any resolutions" upon this subject; and moreover that in our opinion "the resolutions, if enacted, or any of them, would not even tend to accomplish the purpose sought."

Now, even the Senator from New Jersey, as much as I like him, can not plant himself upon a plane of superior humanity, as far as I am concerned or as far as the members of this committee are concerned. We owe as much allegiance to humanity as he does, and we feel as much. We are as susceptible to an appeal for humanity as he is. The Senator says that he has been cut off by technical objections here and there. Nobody who reads the Record would suppose so. Technical objections did not keep him from occupying altogether some four hours of the Senate's time. He says that Sir Roger Casement's hour for execution is approaching on August 3. If so-called technicalities do not check him any more than they hitherto have, his debating of this question will go on until after Sir Roger Casement has been executed. Nobody has met him with any technical objection. He was met at the time when his resolution was introduced with the rule of the Senate that ordinarily resolutions pertaining to foreign affairs should go to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and there he was met in the committee by simply a difference of opinion.

If I were the British premier, I would just as soon commit any other idiosyncrasy to permit the execution of this dreamer and idealist upon the scaffold as an ordinary criminal. A Government which knew how to extend the right hand of fellowship to the Boers in South Africa and a pardon to Sir Arthur Lynch—and he was not the only one; I merely mention him because he was very prominent, and afterwards became a member of Parliament—and to do it because it was wise to do it, sagacious to do it, for the very reasons that Seward stated in what was quoted from him, is not a Government likely to commit this act of political insanity, unless it might possibly, though not even probably there, be driven to such a foolish course by having its sensitiveness touched by outside interference. It would be foolish and childish even then.

Mr. President, one other word and I am through. We are all acquainted with the long travail of Ireland. It has added to the pages of history one of the many stories of a people bravely struggling against alien government. In the olden time the blackest page upon the history of Great Britain—as its own statesmen, like Gladstone and Bryce, and its own historians, almost without exception, have confessed—was her treatment of the Irish people. Here of late years a different spirit has come over the people, beginning with Gladstone's adhesion to home rule, and it did seem as if Ireland was to escape alien government in its home affairs. There was only one difficulty in the way, and that was that the very Irish people who were seeking to escape alien government in their home affairs wanted to put over Ulster alien government in her home affairs. That aroused the movement in Ulster and among Ulstermen to which the Senator has referred. There is no trouble now about home rule in the fullest measure, as fully as it is enjoyed by any State of this Union—and even more fully—being conferred upon Celtic Ireland, where there is one race, one purpose, one aspiration, and, for the most part, one religion. I believe that the people of England and Scotland and Wales have learned with regard to Ireland what the American Revolution taught them with regard to their colonies—"a wiser and a better way"; and if they do not grant to Ireland that full measure of home rule or control of her local affairs to which she is entitled, then Ireland will be right in struggling at any cost for her independence, and everybody's sympathy will be with her.

Mr. President, I have concluded.

Mr. POMERENE obtained the floor.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, before the Senator from Ohio begins, if he will permit me, it is five minutes to 12. At 12 o'clock, unless this matter is disposed of, it will go to the calendar, as I understand. Does the Chair concur in that view?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will go to the calendar.

Mr. STONE. I think this matter ought to be disposed of now while we have it up. We have had it up several times, and we ought to get rid of it. We ought to dispose of it. It consumes time unnecessarily. I am going to request that the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] will temporarily lay aside the District bill, so that at 1 o'clock—

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Why not vote immediately? Lay it aside if we are going to vote, but let us not keep up the debate. Why not vote right now?

Mr. STONE. I am perfectly willing; but the Senator from Ohio has the floor to address the Senate, and I am trying to make an arrangement that at 1 o'clock this matter will be disposed of.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Which matter?

Mr. STONE. The Casement resolutions and report, the thing before the Senate at this moment. I ask that it may be disposed of by a vote, first upon the resolution reported by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] in the nature of a minority report, and so on to the conclusion—I suppose the next thing to be voted upon, if the resolution as reported by the Senator from Nevada be not agreed to, would be the committee report—and that it shall be concluded not later than 1 o'clock.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Mr. President, replying to what the Senator from Missouri says, the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] says he will not speak longer than five minutes.

Mr. POMERENE. I said 5 or 10 minutes.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I do not see the necessity for carrying it on until 1 o'clock.

Mr. STONE. I said not later than 1 o'clock.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Suppose we say not later than 12.30. I do not want to object to the request.

Mr. STONE. Well, I will say not later than 12.30.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I was just called upon to lay aside the District appropriation bill for another matter. If we keep on laying it aside, these appropriation bills will never get through. I would suggest saying not later than 12.30.

Mr. STONE. I will amend the request, and ask that 12.30 be substituted for 1 o'clock.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri asks unanimous consent that when the hour of 12 o'clock shall have arrived, and the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, the unfinished business shall be temporarily laid aside until the hour of 12.30 o'clock to-day, and that at the hour of 12 o'clock the matter now pending, touching the resolution with reference to Sir Roger Casement, shall be taken up by the Senate, and that the report of the committee and all amendments thereto shall be voted on not later than 12.30 o'clock.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I want to say, Mr. President, that in addition to this matter I have already been called upon this morning for 30 minutes' time, which I declined to give; but in this case, as the matter is before the Senate, I feel that possibly it will save time to let it go on and be concluded.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection?

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I first wish to know what the matter now pending is. There are several resolutions and a report concerning the Casement matter. Which is the one before the Senate at the present time?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is the amendment of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN].

Mr. STONE. Presented in the form of a minority report.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Presented in the form of a minority report.

Mr. McCUMBER. Has the report from the committee been presented for adoption?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It has.

Mr. McCUMBER. Under the rules can the report be amended?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The report is not amended. It is a minority report which the Senator from Nevada offered to substitute in place of the majority report.

Mr. McCUMBER. That is an amendment, is it not? I simply desire to know whether the Chair holds that the report of a committee can be amended by substituting a minority report.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is not an amendment in the strict sense of an amendment. It is a minority report which is offered as a substitute for the majority report; and the Senate can if it chooses take the minority report rather than the majority report. The hour of 12 o'clock having arrived the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 15774) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the Government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes.

Mr. STONE. Now, I ask the Senator from Maryland to lay aside the unfinished business.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I agree that it shall be laid aside until 12.30, and that it shall then be taken up.

Mr. STONE. My request follows, which had not been submitted, that at 12.30 a vote be taken on the report submitted by the committee and the amendment thereto presented by the Senator from Nevada, and that in the meantime speeches be limited to five minutes.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Make it 10.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President—

Mr. STONE. Several Senators asked me to submit it, but if it is objectionable I will withdraw the five minutes' proposition.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I understand when the hour of 12.30 arrives there will be no further debate and this proposition will be voted upon.

Mr. STONE. I am asking that a vote be had at that time. I should like to have the Chair state the proposition.

The VICE PRESIDENT. As the Chair understands it now, the Senator from Missouri asks unanimous consent to proceed to the consideration of the majority and minority reports of the Committee on Foreign Relations with reference to these resolutions, that after the hour of 12.30 there shall be no further debate, and that the vote shall be taken on the said majority and minority reports.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I also understood the request provided that speeches should be limited in time to five minutes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That was withdrawn by the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I will ask the Senator if he will not consent to that.

Mr. STONE. I did not because I was notified that it would be objected to.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, I wish to say that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] has been on his feet prepared to address the Senate for possibly 10 minutes. He stated when he rose that he would desire 5 or 10 minutes, and unless that request is modified so that the Senator from Ohio, if he desires, may have 10 minutes I shall object, because I think under the circumstances his request might have been granted, and I do not think it is courteous to him to insist upon a limitation in view of his statement before the discussion arose.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is not in the unanimous consent asked.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Then I have no objection to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to the request of the Senator from Missouri? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The Senator from Ohio will proceed.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, the report submitted by the majority of the committee represents my view. I would not occupy the time of the Senate to discuss this question except for the fact that the courage, the sentiments, the heart of every member of the committee who voted in favor of the majority report have been questioned here on the floor of the Senate. I am quite sure that the hearts of every member of that majority are as full of kindly sentiment toward Sir Roger Casement and toward the Irish people and toward the oppressed of all nations as are the breasts of those who present the minority report. But I trust that I have not reached that point in my life where I am willing to say that all reason shall be set aside and that we shall be controlled by sentiment entirely, and give expression to it, though to so do may tend toward the destruction of the life that we hope to save.

Mr. President, let us pause to consider this question as it is for just a minute. Lawyers or other persons representing with authority Sir Roger Casement are not asking for the passage of this resolution. The newspapers yesterday indicated that one of the high courts of Great Britain convened in session for the purpose of taking up and further hearing the case against Sir Roger Casement and his attorneys appeared in open court and said they did not care to be further heard. A message from a beloved sister was forwarded through diplomatic channels as a personal message from her to the British Government and was delivered to the British authorities by the American ambassador. He later made a report to our Department of State. In discussing this subject the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations said in substance that having delivered this message the Department of State had gone as far as it was deemed advisable to go. And then he added:

I think I may properly say that the department was advised by our representative in London that official representations to the British Government by this Government touching this case would not be received in a kindly spirit.

We are admonished in advance that the British Government regards this as a domestic proposition, and that they will not receive in a kindly spirit any representations made by us in a governmental capacity. That should be, it seems to me, a sufficient hint to those who claim to be interested in the welfare of Sir Roger Casement that we are more likely to do him harm than we are to do him good by the passage of resolutions like those presented to the Senate.

I hope that the British Government will see fit to commute the sentence of Sir Roger Casement. If it were in my power I would commute the sentence of Sir Roger Casement and I would extend that clemency to the political prisoners of every government engaged in this unhallowed war, because I feel that, in common with every citizen of the United States, we have become sickened by the shedding of oceans of blood, and we want to see it stopped.

But, Senators, let us see what this situation is for a minute. Great Britain has told us how she feels with reference to representations from this Government. Sir Roger is under sentence now. Figuratively speaking his head is in the lion's mouth. Notwithstanding this fact, we are called upon here to pass resolutions which the British Government has hinted would not be acceptable. While seeking to secure clemency, Senators on the floor insist all the while upon twisting the lion's tail. How much do we expect to gain by this? "Not everyone who cries unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter the kingdom of heaven," and it is not everyone who professes friendship for Sir Roger Casement who is doing him a real act of kindness.

My belief is that the British Government intends to commute the sentence, but whether it does or not it is my judgment that the passage of the resolution at this time would do him more harm than it would good. I am quite sure, expressing a sentiment which was given voice to on the floor of the Senate the other day by the distinguished Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], if I were the attorney in charge of Sir Roger Casement I would beg, I would plead to be delivered from the kindly offices of some of his friends.

Mr. President, reference has been made to the fact that representations were made by this Government on the part of certain American citizens who were involved in this revolution. They were made and our Government did succeed in having clemency extended by the British Government, but they were American citizens. We had the legal right, the international right, to interfere. But in the instance now under consideration it is a citizen of Great Britain who has been indicted and tried and convicted and sentenced by the British courts. We would not look with a kindly eye upon a foreign Government if some citizen of the United States were under indictment and conviction and sentence under our laws and by our courts if another Government would seek to interfere.

Mr. President, in view of the involved relations existing between this country and the countries of the Old World, the constant international disputes which are arising, I believe we can serve the purposes of America best and the fate of Sir Roger Casement best if we shall take a kindly hint from the message which was sent to us by our American ambassador and adopt the report which was submitted by the majority of the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I had the honor of introducing one of the resolutions which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations along with the other resolutions, on all of which there has been this adverse report of the committee. The fact that I did introduce one of the resolutions, and nothing else, impels me to say a word.

I have been struck, Mr. President, by the one-sidedness of the discussion and the one-sidedness of the sympathy manifested in the discussion. This appears in the resolutions introduced by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MARTINE] and by the Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN], and more particularly in the remarks made in support of these resolutions.

The resolution introduced by myself, Mr. President, recognized a great problem confronting the English and the Irish people, the problem of home rule, and manifested the interest of the Senate in the problem and expressed the hope that it might be solved. I did that because the condition relative to the Irish insurrection, the revolt at Dublin, in which so many were killed and so many were wounded, is not an unrelated proposition to that of home rule.

I thought some reference to that in the resolution would appeal to the statesmen of England who have been so interested and so earnest in their efforts to further the cause of home rule, and that therefore there would be some basis in reason for our representations and that clemency would be more likely to be extended to Sir Roger Casement and other political prisoners than if we had refrained from the mention of any cause or any problem in which the statesmen of both England and Ireland are interested.

Let me call attention briefly to the progress made by the home-rule cause up until the time of the breaking out of the European war. It was the Asquith bill of 1912. The Irish people to the number of 8,000 met in Dublin in a great convention, and this is the resolution there passed:

Resolved, That we welcome the government of Ireland bill as an honest and generous attempt to settle the long and disastrous quarrel between the British and Irish nations; and this national convention of the Irish people accept the bill in the spirit in which it is offered; and we hereby declare our solemn conviction that the passage of this bill into law will bind the people of Ireland to the people of Great Britain by a union infinitely closer than that which now exists, and by so doing add immeasurably to the strength of the Empire.

This same bill became a law and was duly signed by the King on September 17, 1914. Then the war and then the suspension of the operation of the law, and then, Mr. President, during the progress of the war this scene in the city of Dublin itself, this great revolt in which wounded soldiers, Irish soldiers, returned from the front were shot down without mercy; 120 of them were killed and nearly 400 of them were wounded; 180 civilians were killed and about 600 wounded.

Led how? We can hardly say the insurrectionists were led by intelligent patriots. We can not, for example, as is here sought to be done, compare Sir Roger Casement with Washington and with the patriots and statesmen who founded the Republic.

Mr. President, I think that all such comparisons are absurd. It would be more just to compare with the leaders of the American Revolution those who have fought for the cause of home rule and for the loyalty of Ireland, like Charles Stewart Parnell, Dillon, Michael Davitt, and Justin McCarthy, and, too, like the great statesman and devoted patriot, John E. Redmond, who now is laboring so earnestly both in the interest of home rule and of loyalty to Great Britain.

So, Mr. President, it was with this in view that I introduced my resolution, hoping that the appeal in such form might find response with the statesmen of England through which they would be led to clemency, the hint or the suggestion contained in the resolution being that the cause of home rule might be hindered by the execution of Sir Roger Casement and other Irish leaders.

I want to call attention just briefly to some expressions in regard to the conditions. Mr. George Batemen, in writing to the New York Evening Post, had this to say.

The writer, it is said by the editor of the Outlook, from which I read, is a home ruler, and until convinced by common sense was of the physical force movement, yet he says:

I am in favor of the death sentence on Casement, not so much because he conspired against England as because he dared to usurp the mischievous position of dictator to the Irish people, ignoring the elected representatives and spokesmen of the nation and in his mad efforts stabbed in the back Irishmen who are fighting in the trenches, dimming the glory of those who have already given their life for a cause that to them is and was as consecrated and holy as Irish independence is to men like this Irish-pro-German knight of King George. The task of establishing legislative independence in Ireland has been made harder; the work of the mis-called Unionists has been facilitated; and hundreds of young Irishmen and Irish officers and soldiers, with innocent women and children, injured and killed, is all he has achieved.

Mr. Bateman does not say that he is in favor of the death sentence being carried out. I trust he is not in favor of that. I think he means that under the law and the evidence in Sir Rogers case the sentence itself should follow. That it might be commuted is another consideration. I quote him to show how the revolt might have affected home-rule sentiment.

More pertinent to the question is an article by Sydney Brooks in the July number of the North American Review. He says:

In suppressing the revolt Irish regiments and Irish volunteers played an extremely active and eager part, and their efforts were warmly seconded and applauded by the Irish citizens of Dublin.

But further he says:

Had it occurred at a time of peace I do not suppose that the Government would have thought it worth while to inflict the death penalty on its authors and instigators. But it occurred in a time of war, when the whole Empire is fighting with its back to the wall and when an Irish rebellion might make so heavy a draft on the military energies of the nation as to prejudice very seriously the chances of success in the main theater. Therefore the authorities were right in crushing it with an unsparring hand. Can it be maintained that the execution of those who actually signed the proclamation of the Irish Republic and who actually commanded the rebels and were caught red-handed in their work of murder was not, in such an emergency and with such tremendous stakes at issue, an act of just retribution? Its justice seems to me to be beyond question. Over 300 deaths lay at the door of those who planned the outbreak, and the fact that some of them were poets and dreamers, and youths of noble natures and shining promise does not alter the essential character of what they did. But the wisdom and the expediency of the measures taken by the Government after the rising was quelled, are more open to question. The better course would have been to have shown a magnanimous clemency, to have spared life rather than to have taken it, and to have cut down the arrests and deportations to a minimum. That course was not adopted and the danger is great that Irish sentiment, which at first was dead against the rebellion, may come round to making martyrs of the rebels.

It is in this spirit, Mr. President, exactly that I introduced the resolution that I did, hoping for this "magnanimous clemency" toward Sir Roger Casement, and which, it is predicted by the Senator from Mississippi, will be extended without any resolution of the Senate, and for which, it seems, every member of the Foreign Relations Committee hopes.

But the Foreign Relations Committee has deemed it possible, or probable even, that a resolution like any of these may not be in the interest of clemency; rather against it; the committee has, of course, weighed and considered the matter carefully, and having full confidence in the judgment of the committee, I feel like bowing to that judgment and shall be inclined to vote for the report.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, while I made objection against having the morning hour consumed in this discussion this morning, because I anticipated losing the morning hour, I should like to say that I approve the minority substitute. I believe that Great Britain as a Government is sufficiently generous to hear the appeal for mercy for political prisoners. I think there is no reason why the Senate of the United States should be precluded from an expression of that sentiment. I do not think that it is any interference with the internal affairs of Great Britain. I believe, in the excitement of war, it is not improper for neutrals who are removed from like excitement to express an opinion in favor of mercy, which, in the long run, will be better for the British Government itself and for the British and for the Irish people.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SAULSBURY in the chair). The question before the Senate is the substitution of the minority report introduced by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] for the majority report.

Mr. PITTMAN. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, before the vote is taken I want to say I think it is rather an unusual proceeding in the Senate of the United States to substitute a minority report for a majority report; but I have nothing further to say about it.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, so that the question may be settled, I raise the point of order that under the rules of the Senate the only question now is upon the majority report. That is the only report. The other is an opinion by a minority; it is not a report. Under the rules the committee report can not be amended. It must be either adopted or rejected.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, in the first place, I think the motion to adopt the report is subject to amendment. But the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee in asking the unanimous consent, under which we are now acting, asked that the report be taken up and voted on in this order, and that was agreed to without objection. The Vice President, who was then in the chair, stated that that was the order in which the vote was to be taken.

Mr. McCUMBER. I ask for the reading of that unanimous-consent agreement. I think the Senator from Nevada will find that it does not read as he contends, but it was simply that both questions shall be disposed of. It does not deal with the order of the questions.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The unanimous-consent agreement was not put in writing, and is therefore not in the hands of the Secretary. The reporter will have to read it from his notes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, out of order I desire to present an amendment—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair must rule that, as the Senate is working under a unanimous-consent agreement at present, the amendment can not be received.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I should like to have the original resolution offered by the committee read.

Mr. McCUMBER. Let us have the unanimous-consent agreement first read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reporter will read the unanimous-consent agreement.

The reporter read as follows:

The VICE PRESIDENT. As the Chair understands it now, the Senator from Missouri asks unanimous consent to proceed to the consideration of the majority and minority reports of the Committee on Foreign Relations with reference to these resolutions; that after the hour of 12.30 there shall be no further debate; and that the vote shall be taken on the said majority and minority reports.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, as I take it, when a committee presents a report on a matter the question is on the adoption of the report of the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair must rule that he must enforce the unanimous-consent agreement at the hour of 12.30 o'clock, which has now arrived, and that the vote must be taken on the adoption of the minority resolution as presented in lieu of the majority report.

Mr. PITTMAN. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. LODGE. The statement of the unanimous-consent agreement is that the vote shall be taken on the majority and minority reports. There is no mention of the word "substitute" in the unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, what is the need of debating here about little, indifferent things? My suggestion was to the Chair—and I am sure if we should go back and have it read it would be so found—that at a certain time we should proceed to vote on this question—first, upon the minority report, and, if that be disagreed to, then upon the majority report. There was some talk afterwards, back and forth, and finally the Chair made the statement which has been read here.

Mr. President, the question before the Senate in its original form—for the moment putting aside what we are calling, somewhat by courtesy, "the minority report"—would have been upon the adoption of the majority report; in other words, Will the Senate agree to the report made by the Committee on Foreign Relations? That would have been the only thing before the Senate, except that the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], as a member of the Committee on Foreign Relations, presented simultaneously a resolution, which was submitted, as he has stated, to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and there acted upon adversely, and he reports it as a minority expression and asks to substitute it for the report of the committee.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Regular order!

Mr. STONE. I am discussing a question of order, and I am in regular order.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, it was the unanimous-consent agreement that we should vote at 12.30 o'clock.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair rules that the question before the Senate, on which no debate is now permissible, is on the adoption of the resolution presented by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], which has been referred to as a minority report, in lieu of the resolution presented by the majority. The yeas and nays have been asked for.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President—

Mr. POINDEXTER. A point of order, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I was not in the Chamber when the minority report was presented. I understand it is not printed. I should therefore like to have it read in order that I may understand it and vote intelligently on the question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the majority report.

The SECRETARY. The report reads as follows:

The Committee on Foreign Relations, having considered the following resolutions referred to the said committee, namely, Senate resolution 236, requesting the President to ask the British Government to exercise clemency in treatment of Irish political prisoners; Senate resolution 237, requesting the President to advise the United States ambassador to Great Britain to use his influence, unofficially, to obtain commutation of the sentence of death of Sir Roger Casement; and amendment to Senate resolution 237, proposed by Mr. STERLING, adopted the following resolution, which was ordered to be reported:

"Your committee deem it inexpedient that the Senate should adopt any of these resolutions at this time, and are of opinion that they would not tend to accomplish the purpose sought by them. Your committee therefore report back the resolutions and recommend that none of them be adopted."

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I ask that the minority report now be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested.

The SECRETARY. The Senator from Nevada offers as a substitute to the resolution of the committee the following:

Resolution 241.

Resolved, That the Senate expresses the hope that the British Government may exercise clemency in the treatment of Irish political prisoners, and that the President be requested to transmit this resolution to that Government.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President, whilst the communication which comes from the committee is called a report, the committee submit a resolution, which would be the main question, and the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] proposes a substitute for that resolution, his resolution being called the minority report. I take it for granted that the Chair will state the proposition in parliamentary form, so that Senators may vote intelligently upon it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the resolution offered—

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I understand that the proposition before the Senate is to strike out the resolution reported by the committee and to substitute for it the resolution offered by the Senator from Nevada—

Mr. BRANDEGEE. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President. Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. And those who favor that action will vote "yea," and those who are opposed to it will vote "nay."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair may say that that is the opinion of the present occupant of the chair. He was told that that was the question before the Senate by the Vice President, when he asked the present occupant of the chair to take the chair.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. Is it not true that the Committee on Foreign Relations does not report any resolution whatever to the Senate, but makes a recommendation that none of the resolutions which were referred to the committee should be passed by the Senate? My understanding, as a member of the committee, is that the Committee on Foreign Relations have reported no resolution favorably to the Senate, but adopted a resolution in the committee that none of the resolutions referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations should be passed by the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would think that that is undoubtedly the case, but the resolution of the Senator from Nevada was presented as a substitute for the resolution adopted by the committee. The yeas and nays have been called for.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, the unanimous-consent agreement was that a vote on this report should be taken at not later than 12.30 o'clock. It is now later than 12.30 o'clock, as a matter of fact, by both clocks in the Senate Chamber. I suggest that a vote can not now be had under that agreement at that hour.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington will understand the embarrassment of the Chair in taking Senators from their feet immediately when they rise, not knowing but that they may desire to rise to points of order, or what not.

Mr. GALLINGER. Question!

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Vote!

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays have been called for. Is the demand seconded?

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BECKHAM (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

I should also like to announce that the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN] and the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] are absent from the Chamber on official business.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND], which I transfer to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH] and vote "yea."

Mr. GALLINGER (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN], but that pair has been so arranged that I may vote on all questions to-day. I vote "nay."

Mr. OWEN (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CATRON] to my colleague [Mr. GORE] and vote "yea."

Mr. REED (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] to the Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN] and vote "yea."

The PRESIDING OFFICER (when the name of Mr. SAULSBURY was called). The present occupant of the chair is paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] and therefore refrains from voting.

Mr. THOMAS (when Mr. SHAFROTH's name was called). I desire to announce the necessary absence of my colleague [Mr. SHAFROTH], which is caused by a death in his family.

Mr. TOWNSEND (when the name of Mr. SMITH of Michigan was called). I desire to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. SMITH of Michigan]. He is paired with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]. This announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). Transferring my pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] to the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA], I vote "yea."

Mr. WALSH (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT] to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] and vote "yea."

Mr. LODGE (when the name of Mr. WEEKS was called). My colleague [Mr. WEEKS] is absent from the city. He is paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. JONES (after having voted in the affirmative). I desire to inquire whether the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not.

Mr. JONES. I have a pair with that Senator for this week, and, not knowing how he would vote if he were present, I withdraw my vote.

Mr. GRONNA. I inquire if the Senator from Maine [Mr. JOHNSON] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not.

Mr. GRONNA. I have a general pair with that Senator, and, as I can not secure a transfer, I will withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. CHILTON. I have a general pair with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL], which I transfer to the Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] and vote "yea."

Mr. WALSH. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. MYERS]. If present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. CURTIS. I am requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN] with the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS];

The Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS]; and

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. BRADY] with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN].

The result was announced—yeas 46, nays 19, as follows:

YEAS—46.

Ashurst	Johnson, S. Dak.	Owen	Smith, S. C.
Bankhead	Kenyon	Page	Stone
Broussard	Kern	Phelan	Taggart
Bryan	La Follette	Pittman	Thomas
Chamberlain	Iane	Poincxter	Thompson
Chilton	Lee, Md.	Ransdell	Tillman
Clapp	Lewis	Reed	Townsend
Clarke, Ark.	Martin, Va.	Robinson	Underwood
Culberson	Martine, N. J.	Sheppard	Walsh
Hardwick	Newlands	Simmons	Works
Hughes	Norris	Smith, Ga.
Husting	Overman	Smith, Md.

NAYS—19.

Borah	Fletcher	Nelson	Smoot
Brandegee	Gallinger	Oliver	Sterling
Clark, Wyo.	Harding	Penrose	Warren
Curtis	Lodge	Pomerene	Williams
Dillingham	McCumber	Sherman

NOT VOTING—30.

Beckham	Gore	Lippitt	Smith, Mich.
Brady	Gronna	McLean	Sutherland
Catron	Hitchcock	Myers	Swanson
Colt	Hollis	O'Gorman	Vardaman
Cummins	James	Saulsbury	Wadsworth
du Pont	Johnson, Me.	Shafroth	Weeks
Fall	Jones	Shields
Goff	Lea, Tenn.	Smith, Ariz.

So the resolution offered by Mr. PITTMAN as a substitute for the report of the Committee on Foreign Relations was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is, as the Chair understands, on the adoption of the resolution reported by the Committee on Foreign Relations as amended.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I was detained in a conference this morning and only entered the Chamber in time to vote on the resolution which the Senate has just adopted. I had hoped to have an opportunity to have stated my reasons for upholding the majority report of the Foreign Relations Committee and for the vote which I gave in support of that report when the roll was called.

I know, Mr. President, that every Senator in this body desires that the sentence of Sir Roger Casement shall be commuted. On that there can be no difference, for we all feel alike. There can be no doubt that all Senators also earnestly hope that clemency will be shown to political prisoners in Ireland and in other countries as well. I hope clemency will be shown to the Italian political prisoners, some of whom have been shot; I hope clemency will be shown to the Bohemian political prisoners, who are now held in confinement. I will not go on with the list, but I know that all Senators feel alike in regard to it.

The view of the committee was that it was inadvisable to pass resolutions of this character at this time, and the principal reason for their thinking it inadvisable was the belief that it would do harm to the very purpose we all had at heart; that in the particular case of Sir Roger Casement, which was before our minds and which has led to this general resolution, it would bring about the very result that we should all deplore and that we all hope will not occur. Personally I have expressed my earnest hope that the sentence of Sir Roger Casement might be commuted, in the quarter where alone it could do good, if my opinion is of any weight at all. But the action of a Government is a very different thing from that of an individual man. It might well be resented and shut the gates of mercy which I at least wish to keep open.

I merely wished to say this much, Mr. President, as I had no opportunity, being engaged in a conference, to explain my vote before the roll was called.

AGRICULTURAL DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT (S. DOC. NO. 522).

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I call for the regular order of business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The regular order is called for, which is the District of Columbia appropriation bill.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I present the report of the committee of conference on the Agricultural appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Conference reports, the Chair understands, are in order any time. The report will be received.

The report is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12717) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1, 2, 3, 5, 8, 9, 12, 14, 19, 20, 24, 26, 30, 31, 35, 37, 39, 41, 48, 51, 52, 53, 56, 57, 58, 60, 63, 64, 69, 70, 71, 72, 73, 74, 77, 84, 88, 89, 90, 91, 92, 94, 95, 96, 97, 98, 99, 100, 101, 102, 109, 110, 111, 121, 165, 166, 174, 179, 211, and 214.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 4, 10, 13, 17, 18, 21, 23, 25, 27, 28, 29, 32, 33, 34, 36, 38, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 55, 59, 61, 62, 66, 67, 68, 75, 76, 79, 80, 81, 82, 85, 86, 87, 103, 104, 105, 106, 107, 108, 113, 114, 115, 116, 117, 118, 119, 122, 123, 124, 125, 126, 127, 128, 129, 130, 131, 132, 133, 134, 135, 136, 137, 138, 139, 140, 141, 142, 143, 144, 145, 146, 147, 149, 150, 151, 152, 153, 159, 160, 161, 162, 163, 164, 168, 169, 170, 171, 175, 176, 177, 180, 182, 183, 184, 185, 186, 187, 189, 191, 192, 193, 194, 195, 196, 197, 198, 199, 200, 201, 203, 204, 205, 206, 207, 208, 209, 210, 212, 213, 217, 218, 219, 220, and 221, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 6, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of "$1,431,200" insert "$1,411,200"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 7, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of "$1,767,260" insert "$1,747,260"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 11, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all of the Senate amendment after the word "cheese"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 15, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of "$2,436,276" insert "$2,277,776"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 16, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of "$3,179,246" insert "$3,020,746"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 22, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out "The" in the first line of the Senate amendment and in lieu thereof insert "Provided, That the"; strike out the period at the end of the Senate amendment and insert the Senate amendment as thus amended after "$87,175," in line 2, page 19, of the bill; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 40, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of "$1,900,490" insert "$1,866,340"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 42, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of "$2,318,730" insert "$2,537,120"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 49, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of "$3,213,415" insert "$3,188,415"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 65, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all of the Senate amendment after the word "thereof," in line 7 of said amendment, and in lieu thereof insert "shall be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 78, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the amount proposed by the Senate amendment insert "$578,230" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 83, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of "$130,000" insert "$122,500"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 93, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of "$2,981,680" insert "$2,969,680"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 120, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the matter contained in the Senate amendment and in lieu thereof insert the following:

"Sec. 6a. That no tax shall be levied under this act on any contract of sale mentioned in section 3 hereof if the contract provide that, in case cotton of grade or grades other than the basis grade specified in the contract shall be tendered in performance of the contract, the parties to such contract may agree, at the time of the tender, as to the price of the grade or grades so tendered, and that if they shall not then agree as to such price, then, and in that event, the buyer of said contract shall have the right to demand the specific fulfillment of such contract by the actual delivery of cotton of the basis grade named therein and at the price specified for such basis grade in said contract, and if the contract also comply with all the terms and conditions of section 5 hereof not inconsistent with this section: Provided, That nothing in this section shall be so construed as to relieve from the tax levied by section 3 of this act any contract in which, or in the settlement of or in respect to which, any device or arrangement whatever is resorted to, or any agreement is made, for the determination or adjustment of the price of the grade or grades tendered other than the basis grade specified in the contract by any 'fixed difference' system, or by arbitration, or by any other method not provided for by this act.

"Contracts made in compliance with this section shall be known as 'Section 6a, Contracts.' The provisions of this section shall be deemed fully incorporated into any such contract if there be written or printed thereon, or on the memorandum evidencing the same, at or prior to the time the same is signed, the phrase "Subject to United States cotton futures act, section 6a."

"Section 10 of this act shall not be construed to apply to any contract of sale made in compliance with section 6a hereof." And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 148, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the Senate amendment insert "ninety"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 154, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After the word "may" in said amendment insert "sell, offer for sale, or consign for sale"; after the word "ship" in said amendment insert a comma; strike out the words "not sold," in line 9, page 97, of the bill; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 155, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the comma inserted by the Senate amendment; strike out the words "offered for sale," in line 9, page 97, of the bill; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 156, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the matter inserted by the Senate amendment; strike out the words "by grade," in line 9, page 97, of the bill; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 157, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the matter inserted by the Senate amendment; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 158, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After the word "Act," where it first occurs in the Senate amendment, strike out the words "when shipped from a place at which no such licensed inspector is located"; after the comma following the word "inspection," where it occurs the second time in said amendment, insert "which inspection shall be"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 167, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the matter proposed in the Senate amendment and in lieu thereof insert as a separate paragraph, at the end of section 7 of Part B, as a part thereof, the following:

"The Secretary of Agriculture shall require every inspector licensed under this act to keep complete and correct records of all grain graded and inspected by him, and to make reports to the Secretary of Agriculture, in such forms and at such times as he may require, showing the place of inspection, the date of inspection, the name of the elevator or warehouse, if any, to which the grain was delivered or from which it was shipped, the kind of grain, the quantity of each kind, the grade thereof, and such other information as the Secretary of Agriculture may deem necessary. The Secretary of Agriculture, on each first Tuesday in January and each first Tuesday in July of each year, shall make publication of a summary of such facts as are ascertained, showing in as great detail as possible all the facts, including a summary as to the amount and grade of grain delivered to the elevator or warehouse and the amount and grade of grain delivered from such elevator or warehouse, and the estimated amount received on sample or type by such elevator or warehouse, and the estimated amount delivered therefrom on sample or type."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 172, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After the comma in said amendment insert the word "or"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 173, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert "either with or without reinspection"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 178, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert after the word "fee" where it occurs the second time in line 4, page 100, of the bill, the following: "in case of an appeal"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 181, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert "signed by him or by such officer or officers, agent or agents, of the Department of Agriculture as he may designate"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 188, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Insert a comma after the word "commerce" in line 22, page 100, of the bill; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 190, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the word "standard" in said amendment insert "standards"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 202, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following: "Provided further, That no person licensed by the Secretary of Agriculture to inspect or grade grain or employed by him in carrying out any of the provisions of this act shall, during the term of such license or employment, be interested, financially or otherwise, directly or indirectly, in any grain elevator or warehouse, or in the merchandising of grain, nor shall he be in the employment of any person or corporation owning or operating any grain elevator or warehouse"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 215, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the "$55,000" insert "$60,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 216, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After the comma following the word "hereafter" in said amendment insert "nothing in this paragraph or in" and strike out the word "not" in line 5 of said amendment; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 222, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: At the end of said amendment insert the following: "Provided further, That so much of the appropriation of $2,500,000 made by the Agricultural appropriation act of March 4, 1915, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, for the arrest and eradication of foot-and-mouth disease, rinderpest, contagious pleuropneumonia, or other contagious or infectious disease of animals, as remains unexpended at the close of said fiscal year, is hereby reappropriated and made available for expenditure during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, for the objects mentioned in said appropriation act, including necessary investigations to determine whether said diseases have been completely eradicated in districts where they previously existed"; and the Senate agree to the same.

On the amendments of the Senate numbered 50, 54, 112, and 223 the committee of conference have been unable to agree.

E. D. SMITH,
HOKE SMITH,
MORRIS SHEPPARD,
A. J. GRONNA,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

A. F. LEVER,
GORDON LEE,
THOS. L. RUBEY,
G. N. HAUGEN,

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Senator from South Carolina, I assume, does not intend to ask for the consideration of the conference report at this time.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Yes; I should like to have immediate consideration given to it. It is important that it be passed promptly.

Mr. SMOOT. I want the conference report to be printed, so that Senators can know what changes have been made in the Senate amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The presentation of the report is in order, but its consideration is not, as the Chair understands.

Mr. SMOOT. That is correct. I ask for the printing of the report and hope that will be done.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I should like to make this statement: The new fiscal year began on the 1st of July last, and a month of that year has already elapsed. There has been no joint resolution adopted, as I understand, extending the appropriations for the Agricultural Department, and the House is ready to consider this conference report.

Mr. SMOOT. A bill was passed a day or so ago extending all appropriations for the Government which have not been provided for.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I ask for the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The regular order before the Senate is the District of Columbia appropriation bill.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Will the report of the conference committee upon the Agricultural appropriation bill be printed without any direction to that effect?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report of the conference committee will lie on the table and be printed, under the rule.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I call for the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The regular order is demanded. The District of Columbia appropriation bill is before the Senate.

Mr. McCUMBER, Mr. GALLINGER, and Mr. TILLMAN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. If I may be pardoned a moment, the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] was addressing the Senate last evening when the Senate adjourned, and had not finished his remarks. I hope he may be allowed to proceed at this time.

Mr. GALLINGER. If recognized, I will yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair was unaware of the fact that the Senator from New Hampshire had not concluded, and, as the Senator from North Dakota first rose, he recognized him.

Mr. GALLINGER. I yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I had hoped that within the time fixed for voting on the resolution just acted upon, being one of the members of the committee who supported the resolution which has been modified by a vote of the Senate, I would have had an opportunity to express my views concerning the reasons why I supported the committee in the action taken by it.

Mr. President, there may have been more than one purpose in the introduction of the various resolutions concerning clemency to Sir Roger Casement. I shall assume that the resolutions were introduced for the sole purpose of securing that clemency, and not for the political effect they might have upon the constituency of any Senator. The only question which concerns me is whether the adoption of any of these resolutions will tend to secure this clemency. If I believed the Phelan resolution would tend to secure a commutation of the sentence I should vote for it. Further, if I believed it would do no harm I should vote for it, just to express my wish for clemency. What will be the effect, if any?

Let us remember that the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations several days ago stated that the British Government had given our Government to understand that a resolution by the Senate concerning the internal affairs of that Government would not be kindly received. That was a hint of itself which I think ought to have had weight in this Senate—ought to be considered when we are seeking something from that Government.

In the face of this hint that the British Government would be more liable to exercise clemency if left to its own volition than it would if its action was the apparent recognition of foreign influence, the Senators who had pressed these resolutions for clemency introduced into their remarks very severe arraignments of the very Government from which they were asking for clemency, remarks tending to arouse the hostility of the people of this Nation, whose passions and prejudices are excited by the events of a great war, and making the granting of that clemency more difficult.

It was the view of the committee, a view in which I concurred, that the British Government could scarcely dissociate the remarks of those who had introduced the resolutions from the mild tenor of the resolutions themselves, and that, accepting those resolutions in the spirit in which they were offered, as indicated by the addresses which were made upon them, it would not tend to soften the hearts of those whose duty it was either to insist upon the rigid enforcement of the law or to grant clemency.

Mr. President, it is my most sincere wish that clemency be accorded in this particular case. I am of the opinion that if it is accorded, however, it will not be because of the resolution passed by the Senate, in the face of an indication from the British Government that it would not be kindly received, but will be accorded despite the resolution. We simply make it more difficult for the British officials to bring about a commutation of the sentence. So I still think that the resolution as passed, under the circumstances, is ill advised.

Mr. President, I know that every reader of American history would read the history of our Civil War with a great deal more pleasure if he did not find in it the record of the execution of Mrs. Surratt. I believe the future German reader of German history would read the record of the great achievements of the German Army in this the greatest of all the world's wars with greater pride if he could eliminate from it the record of the shooting to death of a little nurse girl because in her impulsive love and sympathy for her own people and country she assisted prisoners to escape. And, Mr. President, I believe that the reader of future English history will read it with far greater satisfaction if it shall record a great national generosity in the exercise of clemency toward all political prisoners; but the action of the Senate of the United States, Mr. President, in forcing a resolution which it has been politely requested not to urge, taken in connection with the early arguments which have been made in support of the resolutions, will not conduce, in my opinion, to the result sought by them. I hope my apprehension is not well founded. I hope the resentment which the severe criticism of their country will naturally have on a people in the throes of a struggle which they believe involves their very national life will not check or destroy what I believe to be the present purposes of British officials to commute the death sentence of Sir Roger Casement.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina will state it.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. A moment ago objection was made to the consideration of the conference report on the Agricultural appropriation bill presented by me. Rule XXVII explicitly provides that when a conference report is submitted and consideration asked for it, the question shall be determined without debate. I invoke that rule now, and ask for the immediate consideration of the conference report. It has been carefully considered and agreed upon by the conferees, and the House is very anxious to have the Senate take action, in order that it may also act upon the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. To what rule does the Senator refer?

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I will say to the Senator from South Carolina that the Senator from New Hampshire has not yet concluded the speech which he began yesterday evening.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. It will take only a moment to act upon the report. I think there will be no debate on it, and the rule to which I have referred gives it precedence over everything else.

Mr. SMOOT. I will assure the Senator that there will be debate on the conference report. I may also say that I have never seen in this body before a conference report on a great appropriation bill being submitted and immediate consideration asked before the report is printed, so that Senators might see what has been agreed to by the conferees.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I will say to the Senator, if he will allow me, that there is nothing to conceal at all in the conference report. The conference on the part of the committees of both Houses was as agreeable probably as any conference that has ever taken place. I think justice has been done to the claims of both the House and the Senate. The Senate has not suffered, nor has the House suffered, in my opinion. The rule to which I have referred expressly provides that when the question is raised it shall be decided without debate, and I appeal to the Chair for a decision.

Mr. SMOOT. If I have been correctly informed, the Senate has suffered in the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair did not understand that the Senator from South Carolina moved to proceed to the consideration of the conference report.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I did.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair did not so understand.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Then I make that motion now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has recognized the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], who is entitled to the floor, and the other matter has been passed some time since. If there is a motion made which the Chair can put to the Senate, he will gladly do so.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I was of the opinion that the Senator from New Hampshire would allow the vote to be taken, and on this point of order there can be no debate at all. It is simply a question of whether or not the conference report shall be considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. GALLINGER. I think if the rule provides that—I have not examined it—

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The rule provides it.

Mr. GALLINGER. In that event I think the question ought to be submitted to the Senate, if it is in accordance with the rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands from the rule that it should be submitted to the Senate and determined immediately, without debate.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I see that Rule XXVII does provide that; but I was of the impression that there is another rule that provides that if objection is made to the consideration of a conference report it has to be printed and go over for a day. I am not sure about it, however.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that that refers to reports on bills.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. That only refers to committee reports.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. What is this conference report on, may I ask the Chair?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is on the Agricultural appropriation bill.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. That is a bill, I suppose?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes; a conference report.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator from South Carolina to allow this conference report to be printed before it is acted upon. I do not know, nor do other Senators outside of the Senate conferees know, what the report shows. The Secretary will simply read that amendment number so and so was agreed to, and amendment number so and so was disagreed to; that the Senate receded from this, and the House receded from that. There is nothing else to show us what has been done; and there are some items in the bill that are of very great importance to the country.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I want to say to the Senator, as chairman of the committee, that he is entitled to know that no matter of very great importance put in by the Senate has been left out.

Mr. SMOOT. I will ask the Senator if the appropriation of $100,000, to which the Senate agreed, for the development of artesian wells by boring has been agreed to or disagreed to by the conference committee?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. It has been disagreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. Ah, yes. Now, the Senator says that is not of any great importance. It may not be to the Senator's State, but it is of great importance to all of the Western States. I will say to the Senator that the West has very little in this bill, and it seems to me it is wrong to allow it all to be cut out by the conferees.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair must rule that this question is to be submitted without debate. It is the privilege of the Senate to vote down the motion to proceed to the consideration of the conference report, if it so desires.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I have just come into the Chamber. Will the Chair kindly have the proposition stated?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] moves to proceed to the consideration of the conference report on the Agricultural appropriation bill.

Mr. REED. I ask to be permitted to address a suggestion to the Senator, not in the way of debate. I hope the Senator will not insist upon this motion. It will not result in getting the bill through any sooner, because some of us propose to address some considerations to the Senate, and it may take all the afternoon to do so. I suggest to the Senator that he let the report go over until to-morrow morning, and it may be satisfactory.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, it will settle the matter one way or the other; so I must insist on a vote, and try the temper of the Senate.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I understand that the Senator from New Hampshire has the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire had yielded to the Senator from South Carolina to make the motion to proceed to the consideration of the conference report on the Agricultural appropriation bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. I yielded for the reason that I understood the rule provides that a conference report is a privileged matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. And the Chair did not hear the motion of the Senator from South Carolina when made.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. The regular order is up, and I hope the Senate will let the consideration of the District of Columbia bill proceed.

Mr. OLIVER. A point of order, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair must rule that debate is out of order. The Senator from Pennsylvania will state his point of order.

Mr. OLIVER. I wish to ask whether, if this motion is adopted, it will displace the District of Columbia appropriation bill as the unfinished business?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. It will.

Mr. OLIVER. I am informed by the Senator from Connecticut that it will.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Temporarily, the Chair thinks, it would; but the District of Columbia appropriation bill would continue as the unfinished business after the disposition of this privileged matter, as the Chair understands.

Mr. OLIVER. I think that is not the parliamentary situation, Mr. President. It will absolutely displace it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair, then, will try to decide that question when it comes to it.

Mr. SMOOT. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum is suggested. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Borah	Johnson, S. Dak.	Owen	Smith, Md.
Brandeggee	Jones	Page	Smith, S. C.
Chamberlain	Kenyon	Penrose	Smoot
Chilton	Kern	Pittman	Sterling
Clapp	La Follette	Poindexter	Taggart
Clark, Wyo.	Lane	Pomerene	Thomas
Clarke, Ark.	Lewis	Ransdell	Thompson
Curtis	McCumber	Reed	Tillman
Dillingham	Martin, Va.	Saulsbury	Townsend
Fletcher	Martine, N. J.	Sheppard	Walsh
Gallinger	Nelson	Sherman	Warren
Gronna	Norris	Simmons	Williams
Hardwick	Oliver	Smith, Ariz.	Works
Husting	Overman	Smith, Ga.

Mr. THOMAS. I desire again to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. SHAFROTH]. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. ASHURST] is absent on account of important business. This announcement may stand for the day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-five Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. The question is, Shall the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report on the Agricultural appropriation bill?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, in view of the interest expressed on both sides of the Chamber, I withdraw my motion for the immediate consideration of the conference report and ask that it may be printed and lie on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That action will be taken.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia is properly anxious to have this bill disposed of as speedily as possible. As a member of that committee I sympathize with his wishes; and yet it is a very ungracious thing, and something that we do not like to do, to refuse to yield, especially to a Senator who has been here a great many years.

Inasmuch as the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] has made an appeal to me, I feel like yielding the floor for the present to allow the Senator from South Carolina to present whatever he may have. I shall occupy only about 10 minutes, or possibly a little less time than that; and if the Senator from South Carolina feels like postponing whatever he has to say for about 10 minutes, I shall be through.

Mr. TILLMAN. I do not know whether I can get the floor after that or not, because what I am going to say is out of order; but what I want to say right now is a matter of personal privilege.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is the Senator's right. I yield for that purpose, of course.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION—ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, Senators know that I do not stay in the Senate much on account of the condition of my health.

When the bell rings I come down from my committee room, where I work from six to eight hours a day attending to my correspondence and other things for my constituents, and answer to my name if it is for a roll call, and vote if it is a vote. I inquire of some Senator upon whom I think I can rely as to what the question to be voted on is, and am guided by what I am told. When the Army appropriation bill was being discussed, I voted "no" when I wanted to vote "aye."

I am not in favor of the prohibition of stop watches, as provided in the Army bill, nor am I in favor of that provision in the naval appropriation bill, but there was no yea-and-nay vote demanded on that bill; so I had no opportunity to show which side of the question I stood on. I believe in the payment of bonuses to encourage men and I believe in any scheme to increase efficiency.

In this instance I was told that to vote "no" meant to strike out the provision of stop watches, and I voted "no" under that impression when I should have voted "yea." I deem it due myself to make this explanation, and am sorry I was misled.

Mr. President, will the Senator from New Hampshire indulge me for a few minutes longer?

Mr. GALLINGER. With pleasure, I yield for that purpose.

MEMORIAL AMPHITHEATER, ARLINGTON, VA.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I suppose it will take me about six or eight minutes to say what I want to say. I desire to introduce a bill out of order and explain why I am introducing it, and when I make this statement Senators will all understand why I am so insistent. I was not in the Chamber this morning on account of being one of the conferees on the naval appropriation bill.

I will ask the Senator from New Hampshire to look at the clock and see if I take more than 10 minutes. I do not think I will take more than 6. I introduce a bill and ask that it be received and properly referred.

The bill (S. 6726) to make it the duty of the commission created to direct the construction of the Memorial Amphitheater at Arlington, Va., assisted by a board of officers of the Army and Navy, to make recommendations to Congress as to subjects for busts and tablets to be placed therein, was read twice by its title.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, last April, at the instance of Mrs. Gaillard, I conferred with the Secretary of War in regard to the bill authorizing her to place a tablet in the Memorial Amphitheater at Arlington to the memory of her husband, the late Col. David Du Bose Gaillard, of South Carolina, whose distinguished services in the digging of the Panama Canal are known to the whole country. I asked the Secretary to prepare two bills, one for Mrs. Gaillard especially, the other for the general management of the amphitheater in the future.

I was disinclined at first to have anything to do with any bill for the control of Arlington Cemetery, because the South has always considered it one of her holy places, fallen into unhallowed hands. To the North Arlington is the last resting place of heroes who gave their lives that the United States might live; to the South it is the graveyard of once cherished hopes, for which there can be no resurrection. Southerners have always bitterly resented the uses to which Arlington was put. Fighting heroically, we were driven southward step by step, and to the bitterness of approaching defeat was added the gall of humiliation when we were forced to stand by helplessly while the North took the home of our great military leader, Robert E. Lee, and made of it a cemetery for his and our enemies, as we considered them and as they were in fact. Our hearts were wrung with anguish at the action of our conquerors, and we hated them intensely. Through all the years Arlington has been to us the home of Lee—a shrine, as it were—and we have always thought that the turning of it into a cemetery for Federal soldiers was an unforgivable wrong.

So, as I say, I was disinclined to do anything in regard to the amphitheater. The old fires flared up again—those that burned so fiercely 50 years ago. Bitter memories came trooping to me. I saw the Confederate soldiers marching off to defend our homes against the invaders; I saw my Spartan mother giving my older brothers to the State; I saw my friends, neighbors, and kinsmen leaving their homes and loved ones to go to the battle fields of Virginia; I thought of the thousands and thousands of unmarked graves of Confederate soldiers; I saw the South, a land of sorrow, under the heels of her enemies; I saw Sherman marching to the sea again, and from the sea through South Carolina, his trail marked by burned farmhouses, towns, and cities, whose destruction served no military purpose; I heard the widows and orphans, their husbands and fathers slain in defense of home and fireside, wailing because they were desolate; I remembered when we received the news of Lee's surrender, and how it seemed that the end of the world had come, that the crack of doom had sounded. Then I thought of reconstruction, when horrors piled on horrors and northern bayonets dethroned civilization and enforced the rule of carpetbaggers, scalawags, and negroes. And as I thought of these things the hot blood surged up, and for the moment I hated Yankees as intensely as I had in 1865. The South is in the Union, I said, but not of it, and I shall have nothing to do with the management of the amphitheater. I will not go into partnership with the conquerors who robbed me and my people.

But the more I thought of it the less angry I grew, and I finally reached the conclusion that there was no reason why I should not and every reason why I should do everything in my power to make Arlington a Mecca for the South as well as for the North.

The war closed 50 years ago. The South fought a glorious fight for a righteous cause; for no man now—if he has regard for his reputation for intelligence—will dare say that we did not have a constitutional right to withdraw from the Union. The bravest, best army that ever trod this continent kept the faith to the bitter end, and while, worn to a remnant, it was forced to yield at Appomattox, impartial history must give it the credit for having done all that was humanly possible. The struggle and final defeat of the Army of Northern Virginia brings to mind Addison's couplet:

"Tis not in mortals to command success,

But we'll do more, Sempronius—we'll deserve it."

That army did deserve success, but it could not achieve it, and, in my mind's eye, I see the great Lee himself accepting in good faith the result of the appeal to the sword, and advising his soldiers—the might of whose arms had been felt on a hundred battle fields—from Bull Run to Appomattox—to go home and become good citizens of the United States. And the thought came to me that one of the best ways to show that I had accepted the advice of "the noblest Roman of them all" was to try to make the memorial amphitheater erected at his old home by a common country—North and South alike—representative of both sections. I have come to think, since the unveiling of the Confederate Monument at Arlington, that the North itself has at last realized that Gen. Lee's home, in a sacred and inalienable sense, belongs to the South, and I am willing to help make of it a place where both sections can go for inspiration.

Half a century since Appomattox! There is a man in this Chamber still who wore the Confederate gray—and two and perhaps three who wore the Union blue! Half a century since the Constitution was amended by the rifle and the bayonet; since might made right; since gunpowder prevailed over logic! I never believed it possible that I could do it, but slowly and by degrees I have come to think that it was best for all concerned that the South was defeated; and for me to say that is a marvel to myself. Slavery was a curse which had to be destroyed ere the South and the world could advance. It was a curse for which the South was no more responsible than the North. Both sections were responsible—and both paid four long, bloody years of penance for their joint sin. It had to go, and while it went in the worst possible way and its going gave birth to an apparently unsolvable problem, still I, who was born in and of the Old South, am glad it is gone never to return. I am glad, also, that the idea of nationality has supplanted that of confederation, despite the dangers involved. And so I can find it in my heart to want to make the amphitheater at Arlington truly national in its scope.

I ask that the bill I introduce, together with the correspondence between the Secretary of War and myself, be published in the RECORD, and referred to the Committee on the Library.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no objection, that course will be adopted.

The matter referred to is as follows:

A bill (S. 6726) to make it the duty of the commission created to direct the construction of the Memorial Amphitheater at Arlington, Va., assisted by a board of officers of the Army and Navy, to make recommendations to Congress as to subjects for busts and tablets to be placed therein.

Be it enacted, etc., That it shall be the duty of the commission created by the act approved May 30, 1908, and continued for the purpose of directing the construction of the Memorial Amphitheater at Arlington, Va., by the acts approved March 4, 1913, August 1, 1914, and March 3, 1915, assisted by a board of officers of the Army and officers of the Navy which the President shall appoint, to submit to the Congress of the United States annually, before the first Monday in December and through the President, recommendations as to what, if any, busts or tablets shall be placed in the Memorial Amphitheater at Arlington, Va., during the ensuing year, and when said commission shall recommend the placing of a bust or tablet it shall also make recommendation as to size and artistic design thereof.

Sec. 2. That no bust or tablet commemorating any person or occasion except the inscriptions provided for in the original design for the Memorial Amphitheater at Arlington, Va., shall be placed therein without the authority of the Congress of the United States specifically granted in each case, and applications for such authority shall hereafter be made through the commission mentioned in section 1 of this act.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, April 24, 1916.

MY DEAR SENATOR TILLMAN: In your letter dated April 19, 1916, you invited my attention to your previous request that I have prepared and transmitted to you two bills, one to permit Mrs. David Du B. Gaillard to install in the Arlington Memorial a tablet as a memorial to her husband, and the other bill of general character giving the Secretary of War power to determine what kind of monuments, both as to artistic design and size, to be installed, and also the causes or persons to be commemorated thereby. I regret that, due to the pressure of departmental business, your previous request was not promptly complied with.

The construction of the Arlington Memorial is under the direction of a commission consisting of the Secretary of War; the Secretary of the Navy; the Superintendent of the United States Capitol and Grounds; Ivory Kimball, representing the Grand Army of the Republic; the commander of Camp 171, United Confederate Veterans of the District of Columbia; and Charles W. Newton, representing the United States Spanish War Veterans. This committee is charged with the duty of constructing—

"A memorial amphitheater, including a chapel, at the national cemetery at Arlington, Va., and in accordance with the plans of Carrere & Hastings, architects, of New York City."

The design prepared by Carrere & Hastings calls for inscriptions to be placed in certain places—names of persons and battles—and the contract calls for the making of these inscriptions. Inferentially, the commission directing the construction is authorized and required to select the names of persons and battles to be inscribed; but since the selection involves much delicacy, particularly with reference to sectional feeling, it has been suggested that a committee of Army and Navy officers and others be appointed to suggest names to the commission. This suggestion has not so far been acted upon.

While the design for the memorial provides certain places for the placing of busts and tablets, it does not extend to the character of such busts and tablets or the persons or occasions to be commemorated thereby. The placing of busts and tablets, therefore, is not comprehended in the existing contract, and the selection of names of persons for whom busts or tablets are to be placed is not a part of the duty or authority of the present commission. In respect of this matter it has been suggested that the selection of a subject for a bust or tablet should be an honor accorded by an act of Congress in each instance in order that the honor so accorded may be in keeping with the dignity of the memorial. Speaking for myself only and not for the others as a commission, I suggest that since the space in this memorial to be occupied by busts and tablets is designed to serve not only as a shrine for tributes to those who have rendered illustrious military services in the past, but also for memorials to those who may hereafter become entitled to commemoration in the Nation's greatest memorial, great care should be exercised in utilizing the space, and no individual case should be considered without reference to the claims of others.

I inclose herewith, in response to your request, two bills—one giving authority for Mrs. Gaillard to place in the memorial amphitheater a tablet in memory of her husband and the other providing that the commission created to direct the construction of the memorial amphitheater shall, with the assistance of a board of Army and Navy officers to be appointed by the President, recommend annually to Congress the names of persons and causes to be commemorated by the installation of busts and tablets in the memorial and the design and size of bust or tablet in each instance. In submitting these bills I do not act with the authority of the commission having under its direction the construction of the memorial since the commission has not been consulted with respect thereto, nor do I recommend the enactment of either bill.

Very respectfully,

NEWTON D. BAKER,
Secretary of War.

Hon. B. R. TILLMAN,
United States Senate.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, July 7, 1916.

Hon. B. R. TILLMAN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR TILLMAN: I have your letter of June 27 in regard to the bill (S. 5752) to authorize Mrs. Gaillard to place in the Arlington Memorial Amphitheater a tablet to the memory of Col. Gaillard. Is there not some mistake in your information that this bill had been referred to the Arlington Memorial Amphitheater Commission? I am informed that the bill was not referred by the Senate committee to anyone, but that the committee has directed that the bill be reported favorably to the Senate, with amendments to make it conform to changes suggested in my letter of May 2. This action will, I suppose, meet your wishes in that direction.

With my letter to you under date of April 24, 1916, I sent to you, in accordance with your request, drafts of two bills. One of these is now pending as the bill (S. 5752) referred to above. The other was a bill to provide a general law for the placing of memorials to individuals in the amphitheater at Arlington. With my letter of May 2 I sent you revised drafts of each of these bills.

I believe that it is highly important that a general law of the kind referred to should be enacted for the protection of the amphitheater against the indiscriminate erection of memorials to those who may be selected for such distinction through momentary excess of popular emotion without well-founded reason. I would therefore be glad if you could introduce the general bill inclosed with my letter of May 2. Do you feel any hesitancy about this?

Sincerely, yours,

NEWTON D. BAKER.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 15774) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I am always glad of an opportunity to do a courtesy to the Senator from South Carolina, but I confess that I regret the Senator has used some expressions in his speech, if I understood him correctly; but the close of his speech is certainly worthy of the highest commendation. The war is over, the sections are united—at least, we claim that they are—and I do not like to listen to severe criticisms of the action of the Government during that unfortunate struggle. Let us try to forget it all.

When I concluded my desultory remarks last evening on the District of Columbia appropriation bill, Mr. President, I suggested that I would probably have something further to say on the subject to-day. When I said that I had in mind the purpose of pursuing the line of thought that had engaged my attention and pointing out a great many other public improvements that ought to be made in the city of Washington, and that would require a liberal appropriation from both the Treasury of the United States and the treasury of the District of Columbia. I have changed my mind about it, however, and will leave that for others, if they choose to take up the subject, feeling that perhaps on yesterday I pointed out enough needed improvements to warrant the passage of the bill as it has come from the Committee on Appropriations, and I trust that what I said may direct the attention of Senators to the need of future liberal appropriations for the development of the District of Columbia.

I was somewhat surprised yesterday to have eminent Members of this body—eminent in their profession as lawyers—say that this was not a municipal government. It was an entirely new thought to me, and it seemed to me that it was one that may well be inquired into a little further. For the purpose of trying to clear up this debated question I have gone to the statutes of the United States, and I think I have found sufficient evidence to sustain the contention I made that it is a municipal government and ought to be treated as such.

I turn in the first place to the United States Statutes at Large, volume 16.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. GALLINGER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WORKS. I do not know whether the Senator from New Hampshire included me in the statement that he made or not. If so, I have never claimed that the District of Columbia was not nominally, and by virtue of the statute, a municipal corporation. My claim is that it has no powers or functions to perform under the statute, but nominally it is a municipal corporation, and is so declared in terms by the act.

Mr. GALLINGER. Well, Mr. President, the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON] certainly did not treat the matter as seriously as does the Senator from California, because the Senator from West Virginia said it was but a figment of the imagination, a mere shadow—without substance and without reason—a "mental attitude," to use the Senator's exact words.

I think it is well to put in the RECORD—it will take but a few moments to do it—what the statutes of the United States say on this subject. As I said, I turn to the United States Statutes at Large, volume 16, page 419, under the title "An act to provide a Government for the District of Columbia," a statute that was passed on February 21, 1871. The language of the statute is:

"That all that part of the territory of the United States included within the limits of the District of Columbia be, and the same is hereby, created into a government by the name of the District of Columbia, by which name it is hereby constituted a body corporate for municipal purposes, and may contract and be contracted with, sue and be sued, plead and be impleaded, have a seal, and exercise all other powers of a municipal corporation not inconsistent with the Constitution and laws of the United States and the provisions of this act."

Now, turning to the act approved June 11, 1878, known as the organic act of the District of Columbia, declared as such by the Supreme Court of the United States, I find these words:

"The District of Columbia shall remain and continue a municipal corporation, as provided in section 2 of the Revised Statutes relating to such District, and the commissioners herein provided for shall be deemed and taken as officers of such corporation."

Section 2 of the Revised Statutes alluded to above, relating to the District of Columbia, is in substantially the same words as what I read from the act of 1871. Section 2 says:

"The District is created a government by the name of the District of Columbia, by which name it is constituted a body corporate for municipal purposes, and may contract and be contracted with, sue and be sued, plead and be impleaded, have a seal, and exercise all other powers of a municipal corporation not inconsistent with the Constitution and laws of the United States and the provisions of this title."

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President—

Mr. GALLINGER. I yield to the Senator from California.

Mr. WORKS. The Senator will notice the fact that in the amendment which I offered the District of Columbia is denominated a municipal corporation. One of the objects and purposes of the amendment is to dissolve it as such.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes.

Mr. WORKS. If that were not so, that portion of the amendment would be wholly unnecessary.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am addressing myself more particularly to what another Senator, the Senator from West Virginia said, because if the Senator from West Virginia was right in saying that the District government is a mere state of mind, a mere fiction, a mental attitude, the statutes that I have read ought to be repealed and something be put in their place.

Mr. President, I discussed at considerable length yesterday the question whether we ought at this time and under existing circumstances to change the form of government of this District. In doing so I argued that the amendment submitted by the Senator from California ought not to be agreed to, and that we ought, in a more deliberative way, taking plenty of time to accomplish the result, investigate the matter thoroughly by a bill that should be introduced in both Houses of Congress, considered by committees, and debated on the floor of the House and the Senate, and thus reach a conclusion which would be wiser and better than any conclusion we can reach offhand by placing an amendment changing the form of government on an appropriation bill. I still hold to that view.

I want to say in a very few words that I hold no brief for the District of Columbia. I served on the committee for a long time. I made sacrifices of time and labor, sometimes of comfort, in trying to do my part toward developing the District. I had a dream which I still entertain that there is an opportunity to make Washington the most beautiful and attractive city on the face of the earth. I believe it is to-day in many respects as attractive and beautiful as any city on this continent or any city in any foreign land that it has been my privilege to visit. But there is a great deal yet to be done, and we ought to have open minds and liberal hearts in dealing with this great question. We ought not as the ex-Senator from Maine, Mr. Hale, used to say "stick in the bark" in dealing with this question, but we ought to practice a real liberality and wise generosity, and not haggle about the question as to whether we are appropriating a few dollars too much when perhaps we are appropriating a great many dollars too less.

I say I hold no brief for the District of Columbia. It does not make any difference to me what the legislation is; it will not affect me either beneficially or harmfully so far as I know. I have no interests here that can possibly influence me in the utterance of a single word or the casting of a single vote, and I give credit to every other member of this body for the same impartiality of feeling and the same honesty of purpose which I entertain for myself. So in any argument that I have made or may make regarding this bill I am simply representing an honest conviction, which may be wrong, because certain other Senators feel, notably the Senator from California, that he has a better method of the administration of the affairs of this District than is found in the statutes that I have quoted and under which we are operating to-day.

In holding that view, Mr. President, I trust that the amendment submitted by the Senator from California may not be agreed to. I appeal to Senators to follow the recommendations of the committee which gave days and weeks and months to a careful and conscientious consideration of all the questions involved in this controversy. The committee wanted to do the right thing, the members of that committee want to do the right thing now, and I feel sure that the conclusions that they reached after the most careful and conscientious investigation of the subject ought to be accepted by the Senate and become a part of the law.

I make this plea Mr. President, in the full belief that the committee under all the circumstances has acted wisely, and that the rejection of the recommendations of the committee will result in confusion worse confounded and utterly fail to solve the problem. Let us not act hurriedly but take time to review the matter in the light of what has developed during this discussion, which has been a most interesting and illuminating discussion. For one I am extremely glad that the question has been presented and that it has been discussed with calmness and kindness, and with a view to reach the very best possible results.

I said yesterday, if I remember correctly, that I appreciate to the fullest possible extent the work that the joint committee did. When I prepared the resolution which created that joint committee I felt that it would be a good thing for us to have a joint committee made up of members of the two Houses of Congress who were willing to do that work, inquire into the matter, and present their conclusions to the Congress of the United States. I did not feel that I could give the time or the attention to that work and I besought other Senators to take it up, and was gratified to find that three Senators of high intelligence, of splendid acquirements, were willing to give weeks and months to the consideration of the matter. I took occasion to read the report and was gratified to find that they had endeavored to go to the bottom of the questions involved.

I read the individual report made by the Senator from California, with which I largely agreed, with the single exception of his purpose to tear up by the roots, because that is what it means, the existing government and substitute a different form of government in its stead.

It will be of great benefit to us in the future to read the testimony and the findings of that joint committee, but I do not find, Mr. President, that the committee itself are fully satisfied that they have found a better system, for the present at least, than the one that was created in 1878, which wise men, like the late Senator Allison, of Iowa, and he was one of the wisest men who ever sat in this Chamber, took so much interest in, and gave his time, thought, and ability to the creation of a statute that has worked so admirably during 38 long years.

Mr. President, this agitation for a change in the government of the District of Columbia is of recent origin. It is one of those things that burst upon the world apparently without any adequate reason. There were a few men who became dissatisfied because they were led to believe from a report made by Henry George and the testimony given by Mr. Herbert Brown, if I recall his name properly, that there were great abuses in the District of Columbia, that the system of taxation was all wrong, Mr. George arguing of course for his single tax idea and Mr. Brown arguing from data which have been utterly disproved by the testimony of men who knew very much more about the matter than did he. The agitation was started only a few years ago; it was taken up by a few men in Congress; and as a result we have been faced with the proposition that for some reason or other, inscrutable to me, we ought to proceed along different lines and get rid of the so-called half-and-half plan.

I said yesterday, and I want to repeat to-day, that if the Congress of the United States had been as liberal as it ought to have been, and had year in and year out appropriated from the Federal Treasury as much money as the citizens of the District of Columbia raised in taxation, and had applied that to the development of this city, there would have been no reason for faultfinding, and we would have had a much more beautiful city than we have to-day. But the Congress of the United States, for some reason or other, did not do it. There was a time when the District funds were not sufficient to meet its obligations under the act of 1878, and again I quote Senator Allison, because I served on the committee with him. He solved that problem by saying, "Why should the Government, which is rich and abundantly able to do this, not loan the District of Columbia funds sufficient to meet their obligations at 2 per cent interest, to be repaid?" and for a good many years the District of Columbia appropriation bills contained a clause under which advances of a certain amount, in some cases of very considerable amount, were made out of the revenues of the General Government; and be it said to the credit of the District that the taxpayers met that obligation, and to-day the District does not owe the Government a cent, but, on the contrary, has a surplus which, according to my notion, belongs to the District, but according to the opinion of some other people belongs to the Government and ought to be placed in the Treasury of the General Government.

My idea is, as I have already said, that this matter ought to go over for the present year at least. Of course I can not accept the proposition of the House of Representatives. It is unfair in every respect to the District of Columbia. We must have some other solution than that offered by the House. The Senate committee, after reviewing this whole subject, after taking into consideration the report of the joint committee, concluded, in its wisdom or unwisdom, that it is a proper thing to continue the existing system at least for another year, and they have so reported.

Now, Mr. President, there is a strong reason why that should be done. It will save a good deal of friction. It will save, according to my notion, a good deal of legislative action which will become necessary if we change the form of the District government.

I have called attention to the fact that there are more than a hundred statutes on the books which to-day provide that they shall be administered on the half-and-half principle, that appropriations shall be made on the half-and-half principle. Recently we voted to erect a bridge, the Francis Scott Key Bridge, across the Potomac River to take the place of the old Aqueduct Bridge. We provided that the District of Columbia should pay one-half of the expenses and the Government one-half the expenses, and we are going along in that way at the present time. The Senator from California says that his proposed change will wipe away all those statutes—in other words, repeal them.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President—

Mr. GALLINGER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WORKS. The Senator is entirely mistaken in that statement. I said no such thing. The Senator must have misunderstood me.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will be glad to have the Senator state what he did say.

Mr. WORKS. I did not say it would wipe out the statutes. I said the statutes continue in force. The only change that could possibly result from the amendment would be that the money should be paid out of the National Treasury instead of the pretense that half of it is paid out of the National Treasury and half out of the District treasury that does not exist. It does not affect those statutes in the least.

Mr. GALLINGER. How those statutes can remain in force when they provide in terms that one-half of the money shall be paid out of the Treasury of the United States and one-half out of the District of Columbia if the law shall be changed and the half-and-half principle is repudiated, I confess that is legal reasoning that I can not follow, and I think it will need revision on the part of as distinguished a jurist as the Senator from California.

Of course, I am talking as a layman. I am simply looking at what I think is the common-sense view of the situation. I believe, in view of my contention, that we ought not to be hasty in this matter, that we ought to restrain our impetuosity, to use a phrase that has a very significant meaning sometimes when it is applied, and take time to look this matter squarely in the face a little further and ask ourselves seriously whether we have yet reached the point where we can do what is proposed without doing violence in other directions.

The law as it is on the statute book has worked well. It has resulted in splendid achievements, and it would have worked still better and resulted in greater achievements if the Federal Government had met in good faith the terms of the act of 1878 and appropriated money sufficient to equal the amount that the taxpayers of the District have contributed.

Last evening I looked out of my window and saw some other things that have been accomplished under this law, and I again indulge the dream that has been a fancy with me for a long time as to what this District may be, as to what this city may be, if we divest ourselves of provincialism and take a broad and comprehensive and liberal view of the duties and responsibilities we owe to the District of Columbia.

Mr. President, I said yesterday, and I repeat to-day, so far as I know there is not a citizen of New England who has not a personal pride in the District of Columbia and in the city of Washington. They feel as we ought all to feel that we are stockholders in this enterprise, and they feel as we ought all to feel that we can not be too liberal in our appropriations for the purpose of carrying on and developing a great city like Washington.

The law that is on the statute books was placed there, Mr. President, because of certain irregularities that had prevailed in the government of the city. The law has answered its purpose. It has resulted in wondrous improvements and marvelous development, and I confess that I can not for the life of me see why we should to-day, responding to a clamor that has little substance as I view it, repudiate that law and adopt offhand a new system that is untried and that may or may not work well.

Now, I want to say just a word and only a word on the amendment submitted by the Senator from California. The present law proposes that the District of Columbia shall raise by taxation a certain amount and that the Federal Government shall appropriate an equal amount for District purposes. Had that been done in good faith we would have had no agitation about this matter.

Mr. President, the estimates for this year are $15,000,000 and a little over. In the judgment of those who have charge of the municipal affairs of this District they say they can use to advantage that amount—indeed, in my judgment they could use from $20,000,000 to $25,000,000 to advantage.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. If the Senator will pardon me, it was in evidence by the commissioners before our committee that there were many things they thought ought to be estimated for that they left out and they did not estimate all that they thought would be required.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator is right. I called attention to some of them on yesterday. But they estimated $15,000,000 and a little over—the exact figures are $15,473,676.34—as necessary to carry on the work that they had mapped out and which they thought was imperative at the present time, leaving out items covering millions and millions of dollars that any liberal-minded man would say ought to be appropriated for at the present time.

Now, we are confronted with a bill which in place of carrying $15,473,676.34 carries $11,931,817.34. Of course, the Senate is trying to remedy the matter, but, as I said yesterday, he would be a rash man indeed who believes that the additions that the Senate committee have made to this bill will be agreed to as a whole in conference, which carries substantially the amount estimated by the commissioners, being $324,000 below the estimates, and that was left because individual Senators will doubtless offer amendments which will require that amount,

Now, what does the Senator from California propose? The Senator from California proposes that the $7,735,377.50 which have been collected in taxes from citizens of the District of Columbia the present year shall be turned over in a lump sum to the Treasury of the United States, and that then the Congress shall appropriate whatever additional sum they think is necessary. To my mind, it is a system which will be infinitely worse than the present, and it ought not to be seriously considered, because we must constantly keep in mind that we are dealing with men, a considerable proportion of whom I am safe in saying have not taken the trouble that you have, Mr. President [Mr. SAULSBURY in the chair], or that the Senator from California has or that the Senator from Maryland has, to acquaint themselves with the actual needs of the District. The House of Representatives, acting upon its rights in the matter, concluded this year to cut down the estimates almost $4,000,000.

If we take the approximately $8,000,000 that the District have taxed themselves with, and I am glad to note that the joint committee found that the taxation in the District of Columbia was sufficiently high, because it certainly is, and then allow Congress, composed of two bodies to add such amount as they choose, it goes without saying, Mr. President, that there may be a parsimonious Congress which will make a very small addition to the revenues derived from taxation in the District of Columbia. As I suggested yesterday, while the citizens of the District are raising to-day $8,000,000, 10 years from now, if the development of this great city goes on, as I hope it will, and as it ought to go on, the chances are that they will be raising $15,000,000, and is it conceivable that a Congress composed of men, some of whom feel that the Government ought not to make any appropriation for the support of the government of the District of Columbia, should conclude that the District ought to take care of itself? It is not an idle dream, it is not a fancy; it may happen if we change the form of government as suggested by the Senator from California.

Now, Mr. President, I simply want to repeat that I trust the Senate will strongly stand by its committee and reject the amendment submitted by the Senator from California and that it will agree to the amendment that is proposed in the bill as it comes from the committee. In that way it will instruct its conferees to stand firmly, for the present at least, for the existing order of things and not try an experiment that may be a failure; indeed, that may be disastrous to the best interests of this great city, of which we are all so proud.

I want to see Washington the city beautiful of the world. I wish I might flatter myself that I will live long enough to see that, but, whether I live long enough to see it or not, I believe that some of these pages at least will live to see this city surpass in beauty, in grandeur, in all that goes to make up a great municipality, and in this way become the leading city of all the cities of all the nations of the earth.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I confess that I rose not so much for the purpose, in fact, to discuss the question which the Senator from New Hampshire has just now been discussing in such a very interesting and well-informed way, as to take advantage of the opportunity to occupy a very few minutes—because of the probable difficulty of getting any other opportunity in the state of the business of the Senate—to talk about a matter that is really not germane to this bill, but one which is of very great importance, and to which I will refer in a few minutes.

In passing, however, Mr. President, as I have listened to the debate upon the amendment offered by the Senator from California and the discussion as to whether or not Congress in this appropriation bill should abolish the District of Columbia, it has seemed to me to be a strange proposition to present to the Senate or to receive any consideration in the Senate, in view of the fact that the District of Columbia is established by the Constitution of the United States and can not be abolished by any act of Congress. Of course, everyone is familiar with the provision of the Constitution of the United States relating to the District of Columbia, but it may not be improper to read it in order to refresh our memories in this particular debate as to the exact status of the District of Columbia in the fundamental law of the land. Among the powers vested by the Constitution of the United States upon the Congress is the following:

To exercise exclusive legislation in all cases whatsoever over such district, not exceeding 10 miles square, as may by cession of the particular States and the acceptance of Congress become the seat of the Government of the United States, and to exercise like authority over all places purchased by the consent of the legislature of the State in which the same shall be, etc., for the erection of forts, magazines, arsenals, dockyards, and other needful buildings.

It would not seem that a difference of opinion could arise, even among lawyers, under the very specific and unequivocal language of that provision; but nevertheless the question has in times past been carried into the courts, and the Supreme Court of the United States, although it would seem to be a work of judicial supererogation, in case after case—a number of which I have already cited in connection with legislation in which I am interested, relative to the establishment of the franchise in the District of Columbia and the election of a Delegate to Congress—decided that this constitutional provision means exactly what it says, and nothing else; that there is no other power in existence which can legislate for the District of Columbia in any respect, and that the exclusive power rests in the Congress of the United States. Of course, under that decision the District of Columbia could not be abolished and the fundamental structure of its government could not be changed except by an amendment of the Constitution of the United States. The amendment of the Senator from California, at the top of page 2, provides:

That the municipality of the District of Columbia shall, upon such conveyance of its property, be, and it is hereby, dissolved and abolished, and its powers, duties, and obligations transferred to and vested in the United States.

Why, Mr. President, while that amendment would abolish the corporation of the District of Columbia, which has been created by a statute, it would not in any way whatever increase the powers of the United States. That corporation and the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, who are referred to later on in the amendment, are the mere agents of the Congress of the United States for exercising its exclusive legislative jurisdiction. So the act of transferring, as the amendment provides, to the United States the powers, duties, and obligations now vested in the municipality of the District of Columbia is wholly unnecessary to accomplish that object, because that situation already exists. The amendment proceeds on the same page to provide:

That until otherwise provided by act of Congress the officers of the District of Columbia shall be and continue as the officers of the National Government, and shall perform for the Government the same duties now performed for the District of Columbia, and be subject to all laws and rules and regulations now in force as to their appointment, terms of office, and removal until otherwise provided by law.

Substantially that does not change the situation in any material respect whatever. So I fail to become interested in the importance of the question which is being debated. Those officers are already subject to all of the laws, rules, and regulations which may be passed by Congress. The amendment provides that there shall be no difference in their duties; that they shall continue to perform the same duties as now performed; and that they shall be subject to the regulations now in force in the District of Columbia until otherwise provided by law. That is already the case. At any time Congress provides otherwise by law those regulations would be changed whether this amendment is adopted or not.

So as to the provision on page 4 of the amendment:

That until otherwise provided by act of Congress taxes shall be levied, assessed, and collected as now provided by law.

It is not necessary to adopt this amendment in order to establish that state of affairs. Taxes will continue to be levied, assessed, and collected as now provided by law until another law specifying some different method is enacted. Such other law can be passed at any time by the Congress regardless of the action upon this amendment, and will have to be passed by the Congress if such change is made, whether this amendment is adopted or not.

Mr. President, the creation of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia and the incorporation of the District of Columbia are simply the exercise of that additional power which was specified in the Constitution of the United States immediately following the section which I have just read, vesting in Congress the power—

To make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers, and all other powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States, or in any department or officer thereof.

The District of Columbia is firmly founded in the Constitution of the United States; the present agencies of its government are the immediate and direct agents and representatives of Congress. It can not be abolished without changing the Constitution, and any legislation to put these powers into the hands of Congress is wholly unnecessary.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. STERLING. While I am not at all in sympathy with this amendment, I want to ask the Senator from Washington if he is of the opinion that the amendment itself contravenes the Constitution of the United States?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Not at all.

Mr. STERLING. The Senator thinks that the amendment does not contravene the Constitution?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Not so far as I have examined it. I do not contend, and nothing that I said would indicate, that the amendment in any way contravenes the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. STERLING. I rather inferred from one of the Senator's expressions that he had so contended.

Mr. POINDEXTER. What I was arguing was that the amendment seeks to accomplish something already accomplished by the Constitution of the United States. I think the amendment is wholly superfluous. I have not argued the more specific question of the advisability of the present method of carrying out the powers of Congress—whether we should have laws as to taxes and as to the powers of the commissioners enacted from year to year, at each session of Congress, rather than having it in the supposed more or less permanent form of the agents already created by statute. That is another question. So far as that is concerned, there is nothing provided in the amendment of the Senator from California in the way of such administration to take the place of the present administration. It simply provides that these agents shall go on until some other provision is made, so that it leaves us just where we were in the beginning.

I expect to vote against the amendment, but it was not for the purpose really of discussing it that I rose. There is a measure on the calendar of the Senate, which has been favorably reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia, which establishes a very carefully worked out and modern electoral system in the District of Columbia, and which provides for the election of a Delegate from the District to Congress. It has been my opinion and it was so when I introduced the bill, that it would be not only in the interests of the District of Columbia, but would be in the interests of all of the States as affected by the work of their Representatives and Senators in Congress, that Congress should have the benefit of some representative of the District, who would have no other immediate obligations than those relating to the District, whose whole time could be devoted to the study of questions in which the District was particularly concerned, not vesting him with any great power but establishing such a Delegate for the benefit which Congress would get from his information and from the light which he would be in a situation to get on the various questions that from time to time, during so large a share of the time of Congress, have to be acted on, that relate exclusively to the District of Columbia.

It would be advantageous also for another purpose. The present disfranchised condition of 300,000 people in this District is not in harmony with the times or with the spirit upon which our Government is founded; it is not in harmony with the principle of a participation by the people in government.

It would be, Mr. President, a benefit to the entire country, to Congress, and to the people of the District of Columbia, if there were some means, some channel through which and by which their views upon the vital questions which necessarily concern them as residents of the District of Columbia could be ascertained, and could be expressed in a formal, solemn, and legal way; not that this Congress, which has exclusive legislative control over the District, would be bound by those expressions, but that it might be enlightened by them; that it might be so advised and aided.

So, Mr. President, I expect at the proper time to urge that bill upon the consideration of the Congress; but I agree with what has been said by the chairman of the District Committee, who is in charge of this bill [Mr. SMITH of Maryland], and by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] that it is better that measures of that kind, involving substantial changes in the status of the people of the District of Columbia, should be separately considered, and considered at more leisure and with greater attention than it is possible to obtain in the more or less formal and perfunctory method in which of necessity appropriation bills are considered. So, upon the suggestion of the chairman of the committee and of its senior minority member, I shall not offer that bill as an amendment to this one; but I expect at a later date to bring it up and to ask for a vote upon it, it having been favorably reported by the District Committee.

Mr. President, I want to say a very few words at this time in expression of disappointment that the Senator in charge of the immigration bill, House bill 10384, has not found an opportunity or taken opportunity to present it to this body for an expression of the Senate's opinion upon it. That, Mr. President, is a bill of far more importance than the amendment to the District bill which the Senate has been engaged in considering now for two days. The immigration bill is a measure upon which the Congress is fully advised, upon which from time to time it has expressed its opinion, both Houses having acted upon it favorably, and on one occasion at least the Senate having passed it notwithstanding the veto of the President.

Mr. President, for some time we have been discussing here various kinds of national defense. We have passed a vast mass of legislation for national preparedness of various kinds. The attention of the Senate and of the country, through Senators whose words command attention, one of them being the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, has been called to moving acts of the great powers of the world looking toward compacts among themselves controlling international trade and industry and the effect which those compacts will necessarily have upon the people of the United States.

There are three kinds of national defense, each one of which is essential to a complete whole. One of them is military defense, physical defense, the ability to back up whatever position we may take through our proper representatives, with the necessary physical force in order to command the attention and the respect of the world. We have been making progress in that direction.

There is an industrial protection which also falls within the category of defense measures, each one of which is necessary to support and render effective the other. A just and proper protection against the conditions that will ensue after this world-wide war, which has upset the balance of the nations, changed the currents and the impulses of their people and of their trade, must be provided, in order that we may not be overrun by the products of different standards of living and industry under the conditions that will ensue when the preoccupation which is now engaging the great civilized powers of the world is ended, as it necessarily sooner or later, and probably sooner than later, must be ended.

But, Mr. President, although we may appropriate hundreds of millions of dollars for a Navy and for an Army, though the Senate amendments to the naval bill may become law, and a proper administration may construct the battleships, cruisers, and other implements of defense which those amendments provide, though we may increase our Army, improve the standing of our National Guard, provide for proper reserves, teach our young men the art of self-care, of self-defense, of self-discipline, of self-development, which will be necessary if this country is ever called upon to meet the crisis which will probably sooner or later be its fate, as it has been the fate of every civilization in the world—and though we may amend the tariff law and, with the utmost wisdom, establish schedules and classifications, and even a scientific system of administration, which this country has never yet done, those laws would not be sufficient to defend the Nation or its people or to preserve their economic, industrial, and social standards. If we shut out the products of cheaper labor, and yet allow the cheaper labor itself to enter our doors, of what benefit will it be to that great element of our population in whose name the great principle of protection has prevailed in this country? Though we are able with fleets and armies to meet and conquer any hostile military demonstration that may be made against us, if our doors are open to the influx of the millions from the lands from which those fleets and armies are sent, who quietly and insidiously come into the currents of our life, bringing with them their cheaper and perhaps lower, at least, different methods of work and of living, and industrial and family and social conditions, our armies and our protective system will be futile and of no avail. They will be undermined; the great structure which we will have erected will be eaten away at its foundation. While we are in the act of admiring its finished form and its beautiful outline, we will witness it crumble into ruins.

Mr. President, it is for the purpose, in part at least, of meeting that insidious danger—more of a danger now than it has ever been at any time since we have been a Nation—that the immigration bill, which has had so much of the favor of Congress, having passed both Houses on two occasions, which has been so carefully wrought out and with so much patience and so much labor, should be taken up and enacted by Congress. So I call attention to the time that the Senate is occupying with matters of lesser importance, some of them of no importance at all, but of perfect inutility, while begrudging the shining hour which we might improve by adopting this essential measure for the welfare of all our people.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. Has the Senator worked out in his own mind how we can get a hearing upon the immigration bill?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I have expected myself, Mr. President, to make an effort in that direction by moving on some occasion, if the strategic parliamentary situation seemed to justify it at all, the consideration of the immigration bill, and asking for a roll call upon it. Whether such an opportunity will be presented I do not know. I am very much afraid that I will not be able to be present at all times when those opportunities might occur, but if such an opportunity does occur, although I should hesitate very much to do it, and would do it in a very humble and contrite spirit, I nevertheless would make such a motion and insist, so far as I was able, upon a vote upon it.

Mr. BORAH. As the Senator has said, the immigration bill has been debated and debated and passed upon, and it would seem that it might very properly pass the Senate without practically any discussion at all. I suppose every Senator here has fully made up his mind with reference to the merits of the bill, and has in all probability expressed himself upon it; and so I hope the Senator will find an occasion to give the Senate an opportunity to vote on it.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I am glad the Senator has suggested it, and I am very much encouraged by his expression. The first morning hour that we have after an adjournment of the Senate I give notice that I shall move, at the conclusion of the routine morning business, that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 10384, to regulate the immigration of aliens to, and the residence of aliens in, the United States.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will do that. I have offered that bill, as the Senator perhaps knows, as an amendment to what is known as the child labor bill.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I know the Senator has done so.

Mr. BORAH. I did so with some hesitation, because I do not want to do anything to impede or embarrass the passage of the child-labor bill, and I should be very glad if some other means of getting the immigration bill before the Senate were found to be practicable. If so, I should not undertake to present the immigration bill as an amendment to the child-labor bill.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I was much gratified at the notice that the Senator from Idaho gave, that he would take that action. I would be gratified at any indication of interest in regard to the immigration bill looking toward its enactment, although I realize the hesitancy of the Senator from Idaho, a hesitancy which I feel myself as a minority Member, to intervene and assume the responsibility of pushing forward a bill which has been favorably reported by the majority of the Committee on Immigration; but, nevertheless, Mr. President, as the days go by, as the time of the Senate becomes more and more occupied by the more immediate questions of money appropriations, and as final adjournment looms larger and larger to the immediate sight, it seems to me that the Senator from Idaho is justified in what he has done; and while I would much prefer to see a vote upon the bill alone, not encumbered by even the child-labor bill, because, while I am strongly in favor of the child-labor bill and very much interested in its enactment, there are many Senators here who are very violently opposed to it, and their opposition to that bill would, of course, impede the enactment of the immigration bill if attached to it. So I thought I would supplement the action of the Senator from Idaho by moving to consider the immigration bill separately, upon its own merits, not encumbering any other bill and not being in its turn encumbered by any other bill.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I am glad the Senator has given the notice that he has, but I hope he will not, without considerable thought, commit himself to the proposition of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] to attach the immigration bill to the child-labor bill. I feel an intense interest in both of those bills and hope they may pass; but it seems to me it would be very injurious to the final success of the child-labor bill to have the immigration bill attached to that bill as an amendment. There is no connection between the two subjects whatever. Moreover, the immigration bill has once been vetoed by the President, and the probability is that it would again be vetoed, notwithstanding the child-labor bill might be attached to it.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me, what I approved of was rather the activity of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] in calling attention to this immigration bill and in agitating it rather than the question of whether I would approve of attaching it to the child-labor bill. I agree with the Senator from Iowa in what he said in regard to that. I do not know that I would vote to attach the immigration bill to the child-labor bill, but I am very glad indeed to see the Senator from Idaho bringing the question forward.

Mr. REED. Mr. President—

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, since we are wandering from the main question, and the suggestion has been made by the Senator from Iowa and is in a general way brought forward in this colloquy as to the effect of attaching the immigration bill to the child-labor bill, I thought perhaps the Senator would pardon me if I contributed my mite to the discussion.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I will conclude in probably five minutes.

Mr. REED. I shall be very brief.

It is well known that a large majority of the Democratic Members are earnestly in favor of the child-labor bill. It is well known, and has been publicly announced by the Democratic leader, the Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN], that it has been determined on this side to make the child-labor bill the next unfinished business. If Senators upon the Republican side will contribute their assistance the child-labor bill will be passed within a few days' time. Now, it is also well known that the President will sign that bill, and therefore if the course I have just suggested is taken the child-labor bill will become a law at this session of Congress.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I am very glad to hear that. Now, if the Senator will pardon me, I will continue what I have to say.

Mr. REED. But will the Senator just let me add one or two sentences, so that my statement will not be cut up?

It is well known that the President vetoed the immigration bill. It is well known that there will be bitter opposition to its passage here in the Senate, but it is also known that there is probably a majority of the votes for it. But if you attach it to the child-labor bill it will mean a delay, and a great delay, in the passage of the child-labor bill; and if the two bills go to the President together he must sign the two measures or veto the two measures.

In view of the fact that he vetoed the immigration bill before, giving very strong reasons for it, it follows that he will almost certainly be compelled to veto both of these measures if they are tied together. Therefore I say that no sincere friend of the child-labor bill ought to want to jeopardize it by attaching the immigration bill.

I say to you, further than that, that it is well understood that the Democrats have determined on their side to ask the Republicans to agree to a day certain to vote on the immigration bill in December, and are ready to make that agreement.

Mr. KERN. The first day.

Mr. REED. The first day of the session, if you want it; and if you do not do that, if agreement is refused by the Republicans, the Democrats in their conference have pledged themselves to make it the unfinished business. Now, under those circumstances no sincere friend of the child-labor bill ought to want to jeopardize it by tying to it the immigration or any other bill.

Mr. BORAH rose.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me just a moment, I will yield. Of course the Senator from Missouri has stated the very program which the friends of the immigration bill apprehended would be undertaken; that is, to postpone action upon it until after the elections. What a great many friends of the immigration bill want particularly is a vote on the immigration bill before the election. My opinion is, without casting any reflections on anybody at all, that the defeat of the immigration bill on past occasions has been due to the fact that the vote, notwithstanding the veto of the President, took place just after the election instead of just before it, and that is very likely to happen again. Now, I will ask unanimous consent of the Senate that at the conclusion of the routine morning business on the next day on which we have a morning hour we proceed to the consideration of the immigration bill, H. R. 10384.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, it is my purpose, if no other Senator does so, to move the consideration of the child-labor bill immediately after the conclusion of the District appropriation bill. I therefore object to the proposed unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I will make a motion later, Mr. President, to take up the immigration bill at the earliest opportunity, the first morning in which we have a morning hour, if I can be recognized for that purpose.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield just for a moment?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I will yield for a question.

Mr. HARDWICK. Well, not exactly a question; but I do not want to make a speech.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Very well.

Mr. HARDWICK. I simply wanted to controvert the proposition advanced by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] that there has been any binding Democratic caucus action to the effect that the immigration bill is not to be considered during the present session. Of course I do that with all personal deference to the Senator; but my information is that there was no binding action taken in that respect and that there was a bare handful of people present and no vote even taken on the question. So I say that for one Democratic Senator I do not feel bound not to vote to take up the immigration bill.

Mr. REED rose.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I decline to yield further at this time.

Mr. REED. I want to clear up that matter. Will not the Senator let me clear it up?

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator will have an opportunity to do so in just a moment.

Mr. REED. Well, all right. The Senator has been very courteous, but I simply wanted to—

Mr. POINDEXTER. It goes on indefinitely. One thing leads to another.

Mr. REED. No; it will not.

Mr. POINDEXTER. If I were going to occupy the floor for any length of time, I would yield to the Senator.

Mr. REED. I will agree to get through in a minute.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I will yield the floor in a moment.

Mr. REED. Very well.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, to call attention to a particular situation which calls urgently for the consideration of the immigration bill, I refer to the illegal and very active immigration of Chinese laborers into the United States, particularly over the border line between British Columbia and the State of Washington. This immigration bill codifies the immigration laws. It changes their administration to some extent.

I have ventured to offer and have printed an amendment to the bill applying to the Immigration Service the same principle that has been found so salutary in the administration of the War Department, intended to do away as far as possible with bureaucrats and bureaucracy, providing that the chiefs of bureaus in the Immigration Service and all officials, except the Commissioner General of Immigration—who is appointed as a matter of political patronage—shall be detailed from the field service, and that at the end of four years they shall return to the field service.

Now, it is thought by men of experience and contact with the problem with which our people are confronted in this unfair competition of Chinese and other foreign labor that that amendment would put the Immigration Service upon a more efficient basis, that it would put it in charge of men with practical knowledge of these problems, and that it would do away with some of the conditions which seem to a "man up a tree" very mysterious.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I do.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have been unavoidably absent from the Chamber for a little while. I should like to ask the Senator from Washington what provision of the District of Columbia appropriation bill he is discussing?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I am discussing the amendment of the Senator from California [Mr. WORKS]. I have also made some brief reference to a bill which I introduced for a Delegate from the District of Columbia.

Mr. GALLINGER. All right.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, the State of Washington is the chief point of entry of Chinamen into the United States. I am making this statement now with particular reference to what I last referred to—the inefficiency of the administration of the immigration law, and the opportunity, if this immigration bill is put upon its passage, to amend it and incorporate in it some salutary measures for the purpose of enforcing the law after we have passed it.

The labyrinth of protected waters lying along the boundary between that State and British Columbia, and the great extent and more or less unsettled condition of the forested and mountainous region through which runs the entire northern boundary of the State, separating it from the Province of British Columbia, make exceptionally favorable conditions for the illicit entry of Chinese and other aliens into this country.

Accentuating this opportunity for the violation of the immigration laws is a contract which has been entered into between the immigration service of the United States and the Canadian Pacific Railway, under which the Canadian Pacific Railway furnishes offices for United States immigration inspectors at its Pacific coast terminals, and the United States immigration service conducts there at the Canadian port of entry the examination of immigrants supposedly seeking to enter this country. A large force of United States employees is maintained in connection with the execution of that contract at Vancouver and other British Columbia cities, while the service in the United States itself is crippled without equipment of motor cars or motor boats, and other obvious essentials, in the efficient exclusion of prohibited immigration of Chinese and others. The Dominion of Canada, on the other hand, protecting its interests, has enacted a law requiring that all Chinese immigrants to that country shall come direct to a Canadian port of entry and not through the United States. This statute, together with the contract of the United States officials with the Canadian Pacific Railway, referred to above, strengthened by the placing of headquarters of the United States service for that boundary in Montreal, transfers to a foreign soil practically the entire administration of our immigration laws on the Canadian border while the service in the United States finds itself largely confined to a weak and halting attempt to punish offenders long after the damage has been committed, namely, by the weak effort to arrest illicit immigrants after they are in the country and have become absorbed into the population, instead of keeping them out in the first place. It diverts Chinese immigration into the United States to Canadian railways and over Canadian territory, while absolutely relieving Canada of Chinese immigration through the United States, while our border itself is, to all intents and purposes, left wholly unprotected. The American immigration office in the Canadian Pacific Railroad building at Vancouver, which is so vitally connected with Chinese immigration into the State of Washington, has no direct relations with the immigration service in the State of Washington, but is under the direction and control of the United States office in Montreal.

The great war in Europe, in which Canada is involved, has made the United States especially attractive to certain classes of residents of British Columbia and other Provinces in the Dominion of Canada as a refuge and asylum from the exactions of the war. The depression of industry in Canada by the absorption of the energies of the country in war has resulted in a condition of unemployment and afforded an additional reason why aliens of various kinds domiciled in Canada should especially desire to enter the United States, regardless of the restrictions of our immigration laws. Far more important than this, however, is the great desire upon the part of those interested in Chinese immigration to import Chinamen into the United States. A considerable money value attaches to every illicit entry of a Chinese laborer, and a flourishing illicit industry in the smuggling of these orientals into this country has developed and grown to gigantic proportions. Powerful interests are connected with it and extraordinary influences manifest themselves in the protection against criminal prosecutions of those arrested for this crime.

Instead of organizing its forces and strengthening its lines of defense against this tide of cheap labor competition and for the enforcement of the important laws, which have been placed upon the statute books for the protection of our standards of labor and civilization, the Immigration Service, in the face of increasing violations, has grown weaker and weaker. Men have been laid off or furloughed without pay in large numbers, and the whole organization of the Immigration Service in relation to alien immigration through the State of Washington, and particularly illicit Chinese immigration, is organized upon an illogical and inefficient system and theory. The chief immigration office, or what ought to be the chief immigration office, of the service in that State is located in the great city of Seattle, but instead of the authority of the United States being represented there by an official with power to direct the service and to enforce the laws the entire work is supervised by an official located, not in the United States but in the city of Montreal, 3,000 miles away, or through bureau officials in the city of Washington, who have not the slightest practical knowledge of the conditions involved.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, will the Senator from Washington allow me to ask him a question right there?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Yes; I yield to the chairman of the Immigration Committee.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The Senator doubtless has carefully read the present pending bill. Does he not think that that difficulty would be relieved by the present bill?

Mr. POINDEXTER. That is the reason why I am urging that the bill be taken up and passed.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Yes; I thought that was it, and we found—

Mr. POINDEXTER. If the Senator will pardon me, of course it will not be relieved until the bill is passed.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. But the point I wanted to make was that that abuse is going on because, under the present law, we have to deport them to the foreign countries from which they came. The Canadian law almost prohibits sending them back once they have been smuggled in. The pending bill provides that they may be sent back to the country of their origin, regardless of where they come immediately to this country.

Mr. POINDEXTER. It is another illustration of the superior sagacity displayed by others in the international arrangements which have been made with the Canadian officials. They have gotten a much better situation for themselves than we have for ourselves. The same thing appeared in the treaty that was made for the regulation of the salmon fisheries, a most important industry along the boundary line threading the Sound waters between the State of Washington and British Columbia, in which some ichthyologists undertook to go up against the good business acumen of the statesmen of Canada and got the worst of it; and apparently the same thing is true in regard to the immigration arrangements to which the Senator from South Carolina has referred.

Although I have had no conversation or communication of any kind whatever with the United States immigration commissioner at Seattle, I am thoroughly satisfied from information which I have obtained that he is an honest and efficient official, sincerely endeavoring to enforce the laws under the handicaps of Montreal supervision and constant interference from Washington, inadequate force, and absence of essential equipment.

As an instance of this sort of interference, very shortly after this commissioner was appointed at Seattle the special agent of the bureau at Washington appeared in his office and sought to impose upon the commissioner some person selected by the agent as the chief deputy of the office. Under a rule issued from the bureau relative to the investigation of the smuggling of Chinese into the country, all inspectors engaged in that work are required to report not to the chief official of the service—the commissioner at Seattle—but to the bureau's agent, whose principal office is in the city of Buffalo.

Another person whom this agent sought to have appointed to special duties in connection with the investigation of Chinese smuggling was a full-blooded, American-born Chinese interpreter, named Frank H. Tape.

These are some of the things I referred to a moment ago as looking quite peculiar. This American Chinaman, with whom the department's agent referred to was on terms of intimate friendship and personal association, whom the agent of the Immigration Bureau was desirous of intrusting with the investigation of Chinese smuggling in the State of Washington, received from the Government a salary of $110 a month. Upon this apparent salary Tape maintained a sumptuous home in a fashionable district of the city with a white woman, whom he afterwards married. He maintained an expensive automobile and employed a chauffeur, with several other servants in his home. Upon an investigation, undertaken without the authority of the special agent of the bureau, it was discovered that during the preceding year Tape had deposited in a bank in Seattle between nine and ten thousand dollars, of which more than $7,000 was in gold, silver, and currency. Upon examination Tape refused to explain how it was that he enjoyed this income upon a salary of $1,320 a year. He was arrested and put to trial, during which powerful influences were brought into play to secure his acquittal, which ensued. A Chinese witness who testified against him was murdered, and in retaliation of the first a second murder was committed.

I do not care at this time to relate the persistent reports and rumors which were in general public circulation relative to the connection of these occurrences and certain features of the contract, described above, between the bureau and the Canadian Pacific Railroad with important officials of the United States Immigration Service. I desire only to call the attention of the Senate, of the service, and of the public, who are concerned in these matters, to events and transactions which have been fully exposed and which are within the personal knowledge of a number of responsible people. I do not care either to go into details of information which I have in my possession, but to state only a few of its essential features. I am offering an amendment of a very plain and inoffensive character to the bill, which has passed the House and is now pending in the Senate, dealing with this service. I ask leave to print that amendment at this point as a portion of my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment referred to is as follows:

Amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. POINDEXTER to the bill (H. R. 10384) to regulate the immigration of aliens to, and the residence of aliens in, the United States, viz: Add at the close of section 24, page 55, line 16, as part of said section the following:

"The Assistant Commissioner General of Immigration, chiefs of division and assistant chiefs of division and all supervising officers of every description in the Bureau of Immigration shall be appointed by the Secretary of Labor from field officers of the Immigration Service for a period of four years' duty, at the expiration of which they shall return to the field service unless reappointed as hereafter indicated. Such officers may be reappointed for an additional period of four years' bureau duty, but no such officer shall serve more than eight years bureau duty until he shall have actually served four years in the field following said period of bureau service. Upon the taking effect of this act all supervising officers of the Bureau of Immigration who have served more than eight years in such position, except the Commissioner General of Immigration, shall be assigned to field stations."

Mr. POINDEXTER. This amendment, it is thought by some who have given especial attention to the question, will gradually remove some of the more flagrant abuses referred to. I would much prefer if these abuses had been corrected by the department itself upon their attention being called to them. It is true that there are energetic, diligent, and honest officials in the service, and through these the exposures which have recently been made of wholesale violations of the law, together with attempts to prosecute the criminals engaged therein, have been initiated. But, notwithstanding the fact that months ago urgent representations were made to the department of the complete demoralization of the immigration service in the State of Washington, complaints so varied, so well established by the testimony of prominent and responsible witnesses that they demanded attention and action, no apparent effort has been made to correct these flagrant abuses in so far as the actual prevention of the violation of the law is concerned. The people are entitled to an efficient and rigorous enforcement of the provisions of our exclusion acts, but the field force has continually been cut down where it should have been increased, while expensive establishments have been maintained where they were not essential, and instead of improving the service it has become completely demoralized.

I ask leave here to print as a part of my remarks a letter dated March 31, 1916, from E. P. Marsh, chairman of the Washington State Federation of Labor, dealing with the conditions of the administration of the immigration laws on the Washington-British Columbia border.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

WASHINGTON STATE FEDERATION OF LABOR,
EXECUTIVE AND LEGISLATIVE COMMITTEE,
Everett, Wash., March 31, 1916.

Hon. MILES POINDEXTER,
Senate Chamber, Washington.

DEAR SENATOR: Referring to our conversation of last summer, and to my letter of January 7, last, relative to the immigration question and general conduct of the United States Immigration Service in this State, in which I requested that the working men and women of the Pacific Northwest be given some protection from the flood of unemployed pouring, unrestrained, over the border from western Canada, Chinese, and Europeans of every class, I wish to again bring the matter to your attention, my letter of January 7 being without reply, doubtless due to the many matters calling for attention this session.

Briefly, the immigration force in this State has been reduced, stations closed and men taken away, until it does not begin to be able to enforce the law. While this is the case, a large force of inspectors is maintained in British Columbia—Victoria, Vancouver, etc.—whose main business seems to help the Canadian Pacific take traffic from American roads. From five to seven men at a time were laid off without pay in this State, while at the very same time, a $10 or $12 a day file expert from the Immigration Bureau, Washington, named Heberle, was in the Seattle office arranging files, and is still there. While these men were laid off last year, the salary of this file expert would have paid the salary of several men laid off.

Chinese smuggling on a gigantic scale has been discovered within the past year. The Everett immigration officer unearthing one underground route in oil-tank cars, reported to have brought in 400 Chinese within a year; he discovered a second route in loaded-lumber cars, and others in automobiles and launches. In the face of this, there is not a cent available for auto patrol of the road. One gang, just discovered, confess to have landed Chinamen by wholesale at the foot of Pike Street, in the heart of Seattle—say they brought in about 2,800 Chinamen in two or three years, with a million dollars worth of opium. Seattle officers found the latter. Notwithstanding this, the active field officers have been steadily reduced on the plea of lack of funds, while at the same time, they spend the salary of two or three inspectors on a fancy file clerk in the office. There is apparently no hope of doing anything through the Bureau of Immigration until a change is made, hence I renew my request of January 7, 1916, and ask that you introduce a bill as follows:

"The Assistant and Acting Commissioner General of Immigration, chiefs of division and assistant chiefs of division, and all supervising officers of every description in the Bureau of Immigration shall be appointed by the Secretary of Labor from field officers of the Immigration Service for a period of four years duty, at the expiration of which they shall return to the field. Such officers may be reappointed for an additional period of four years bureau duty, but no such officer shall serve more than eight years bureau duty until he shall actually have served four years in the field."

"Upon the taking effect of this act, all supervising officers in the Bureau of Immigration, except the Commissioner General of Immigration, shall be assigned to field stations."

I am convinced that no change can be looked for in the present enforcement of immigration, contract labor, and Chinese exclusion laws until we have men at the head with some practical experience themselves in putting these laws into effect. What can the present force of department clerks be expected to know of conditions on the Pacific coast? Their mistakes and lack of knowledge are made at the bitter cost of the working men and women of the Pacific Northwest.

Wages in the State of Washington have been reduced below the level of existence within the past two years, due to the flood of aliens entering, unrestricted, from Canada. They have come over by tens of thousands. It is time a change took place, and I trust that you will introduce the amendment above set out.

Kindly favor me with half a dozen copies of the Burnett bill, as it passed the House.

With best wishes, I am, very truly, yours,

E. P. MARSH,

Chairman Washington State Federation of Labor.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The matter which I have put into the RECORD will serve to advise the public of these conditions, that they have been reported months ago, and that the department officials who were responsible have had full knowledge of them for a year or more.

As throwing some further light upon the relations existing between the agent of the bureau and those who were profiting by Chinese smuggling, was a telegram sent by the interpreter, Tape, referred to above, to which he signed the name of Fred Chew, addressed to the agent of the bureau at his office in Buffalo. This telegram was addressed to him shortly after the investigation of the unusual expenditures of the interpreter. The agent of the bureau replied to this telegram suggesting to Tape that he await a letter which the agent was then forwarding. In connection with the trial referred to, efforts were made to obtain this letter, but wholly without avail. This same agent is still representing the department at Buffalo in Chinese smuggling cases. The acquittal of Tape destroyed the hope of obtaining this letter, at least, for the time being, and also of further exposition of these relations. Tape was protected, and while I desire to make it perfectly plain that I have had no communication of any kind from or with them, directly or indirectly, I assert that efficient and capable inspectors, who had developed the evidence against Tape, were suspended from the service. This policy of punishing faithful officials was checked somewhat by the investigation which was conducted at Seattle by the Federal Commission on Industrial Relations, with Mr. Frank P. Walsh, as chairman, and certain changes were made in the bureau at Seattle which for the time being relieved the local immigration service in the State of Washington of the obstacles which had been interposed against its efforts to enforce the law. But this relief was only temporary. The crippling of the service was later continued with the results which have already been described.

Mr. President it is this sort of a betrayal of the people by those entrusted with the enforcement and administration of their laws that breeds discontent and creates a greater menace at home than military armaments abroad. One clear order from those responsible for this condition of affairs, giving complete authority to the representative of the Government in the immigration service in the State of Washington to enforce the immigration act upon its borders, with a reasonable number of men and reasonable equipment to make it practically possible for him to execute his authority, would remove the evils complained of and give to the people of our State and the country at large the protection which these statutes were intended to afford.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to his colleague?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield.

Mr. JONES. I merely wish to make a suggestion to my colleague. He submitted a request that the immigration bill be taken up by the Senate the next day we have a morning hour, or at the conclusion of the morning hour, and that was objected to by some one on the majority side of the Chamber—

Mr. POINDEXTER. It was objected to by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN].

Mr. JONES. Under the plea that he was going to call up the child-labor bill. I wish to suggest to my colleague that he submit a request that the immigration bill be made the unfinished business immediately upon the conclusion of the consideration of the child-labor bill.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I adopt that suggestion of my colleague. It occurs to me that it is a very excellent one, and I make that request for unanimous consent as he has stated it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection?

Mr. REED. You can not arrange a legislative program for the Democratic majority in that way. I object. I have been objecting and I am going to continue to object to that sort of a proposition.

Mr. JONES. I suggest that we ought to be able to arrange it in the Senate if it can not be arranged in the Democratic caucus.

Mr. REED. Mr. President—

Mr. POINDEXTER. I decline to yield any further, Mr. President, and will conclude in a few moments.

Mr. REED. Very well.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I want to say when I conclude the Senator from Missouri will have an opportunity to answer all these things.

Mr. REED. I understand. I am very much obliged to the Senator for permitting me to answer in my own time.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator is entirely welcome.

Mr. President, it is not so much a question whether this legislative program will be arranged in this way, as the Senator from Missouri says, as to whether or not it will be arranged at all. That is what we are particularly interested in. I do not care by what method the arrangement is made to have a vote upon the immigration bill so that we shall have a vote upon it. That is what we are aiming at; that is the result to be obtained.

The Senator from Missouri objects to arranging it in that way, and has just stated to the Senate—and I know it is nothing personal with the Senator from Missouri, because he stated it was done by those in authority upon the Democratic side of the Chamber—that not only had they not arranged to have a vote upon it, but they had arranged not to have a vote upon it until the winter session of Congress.

What I have said, Mr. President, in regard to the deplorable conditions of the service is not a light matter by any means—the necessity of our laboring men in competing on all hands with what is probably the cheapest labor in the world, with a standard of living utterly different from theirs, through the inefficiency both of the law itself and its administration along the northwest border of the United States. It is because it is serious and vital to labor in this country which makes it vital for everyone in the country.

I am not the special advocate of labor, but it is the foundation upon which our social and civic structure rests, and it is the material out of which we must draw the supply for the other classes of our citizens.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President—

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield.

Mr. GALLINGER. Passing through the Chamber a few minutes ago, I noticed that the Senator from Washington and the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] were having a little colloquy with reference to the immigration bill. I think I understood the Senator from Georgia to say that the majority had not determined not to take up the bill. The Senator from Washington now says he learns from the Senator from Missouri that the majority have determined not to take it up. Am I correct in that?

Mr. POINDEXTER. That was my understanding of what the Senator from Missouri said. He is present and will have an opportunity in a moment to state his position.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have never been permitted to enter the inner portals of the Democratic caucus, and I was about to ask the Senator from Washington whether he had learned exactly what action is necessary on the part of the majority to determine that a bill shall not be taken up. Is it decided by a majority vote, does the Senator know?

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator does not mean to intimate that I have been attending the Democratic caucus? I have been charged with a good deal of party irregularity, but I have not got quite so far as that.

Mr. LEWIS. Permit me to say to both Senators, there is time for reformation.

Mr. GALLINGER. I understood the Senator, who always speaks wisely. I did not mean to intimate that the Senator had been in the Democratic caucus.

Mr. POINDEXTER. No; that was only facetious.

Mr. GALLINGER. But I was a little curious to know how our Democratic friends settled the question, whether by a majority vote, a two-thirds vote, as they do in the national convention, or by a unanimous agreement.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That is a very pertinent inquiry of the Senator from New Hampshire in view of the feeling that has been manifested at different times on the Democratic side in regard to caucus rule and the desire which we all have for an opportunity on our side of the Chamber to participate, as far as our own votes go, in the disposition of a legislative program. I will say that the Senator was not present at the time of the remark to which the Senator from Georgia replied.

Mr. HARDWICK. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I will yield.

Mr. HARDWICK. I do not want the Senator to misapprehend what I said, or certainly what I intended to say. What I intended to say and what I do intend to say is this: So far as my information goes there has been no authoritative or binding action by the Democratic caucus on the subject of whether or not the immigration bill shall be considered during the present session. It may be quite true that some resolution of an advisory character might have been offered from the few who were present at a late hour at night, but no attempt was made to bind the Democratic Party to any action in reference to this matter in the way provided by the rules of the caucus itself, according to my information.

Mr. KERN. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I have concluded. I will yield the floor.

Mr. KERN. For the benefit of the Senator from Georgia, who was not present when the caucus adjourned, and who was there only a short part of the time, I desire to say that at the time of the adjournment all the Members who had been there before were there, save himself and two others, and—

Mr. HARDWICK. To correct the Senator's statement and make it accurate, there were never more than a bare majority there at all.

Mr. KERN. There were 33.

Mr. HARDWICK. Thirty, I think.

Mr. REED obtained the floor.

Mr. LEWIS. Clearing up a matter, does the Senator from Washington indulge in the belief that the immigration bill to which he alludes could carry with it a clause respecting Chinese and Japanese immigration that would override the treaties prevailing between those two countries and our own until the treaties themselves are superseded by similar laws of similar dignity, such as treaties?

Mr. POINDEXTER. My opinion is that a treaty is necessarily modified or repealed, in so far as it is in conflict with the law of the United States. But that question is not really involved. It is not necessary to discuss it. I assume we would undertake to proceed in a diplomatic way to adjust those questions, as the Senator from Illinois intimates we should do. I agree with him upon that; but, as a legal proposition, this is a sovereign country, and if we choose to proceed—whether we ought to or not—to repeal a treaty by a law of the United States we have the power to do it.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, my excuse for taking the floor just a moment ago is that the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] declined to allow me to utter a few words in completion of a colloquy in which I had been a party, so that the subject then under discussion was left without being finished. I confess to a little surprise that the Senator, whom I esteem very highly, denied me that privilege while repeatedly extending the courtesy of interruption to others.

Mr. POINDEXTER. If the Senator will allow me, I apologize. I certainly intended no discrimination. I have the most friendly feeling toward the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED. I know the Senator has.

Mr. POINDEXTER. My only desire was to conclude and give the floor to him.

Mr. REED. Now, Mr. President, in order that the entire question may be stated together, let me repeat very briefly what I said and then add the few words that are necessary to a complete statement of the proposition.

It is proposed or suggested by those who are, or claim to be, earnestly in favor of the child-labor bill to add the immigration bill to the child-labor bill as an amendment. The immigration bill, as all know, is absolutely foreign in every respect to the child-labor bill.

I ventured to call attention, and I now repeat what I said, that every informed man in the Senate is aware that the child-labor bill will, if it comes up by itself, have the support of a very large majority of the Democratic Senators. It is also claimed that it will have a very large support upon the Republican side of the Chamber. The bill has already passed the House of Representatives by an overwhelming vote.

It is also well known that if the bill is put upon its passage in the Senate, unless it is filibustered against by Republicans, it will be passed speedily, and at this session. While there is opposition among certain Members on this side, all of them so far as I have heard, and I think I have heard from all, have said that they would content themselves merely with expressing their views in opposition to the bill without an attempt to obstruct it. Likewise it is generally known that no obstructive tactics will be employed by the Republicans. So the situation is, if the bill is let alone it will be passed at this session, and within a few days' time. The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] has stated in the open Senate that it is his purpose to move to make the bill the unfinished business after the conclusion of the pending District of Columbia appropriation bill.

Moreover, the Democrats had a conference, and I use the term in contradistinction to "Democratic caucus." At the conference there was present when the meeting was called to order 33 Senators. Afterwards 3 Members withdrew without excuse. Subsequently one or two others were excused, but by unanimous consent were permitted to leave their votes. That conference passed a resolution providing that this child-labor bill should be made the unfinished business immediately upon the conclusion of the District of Columbia appropriation bill. All this is well understood. Indeed our conference action was publicly announced both in the press and in the Senate.

Now, it is true that the conference vote or resolution was not under the rules of the caucus a binding resolution. It is only persuasive, and it is the only kind of a resolution that has ever been adopted in a Democratic conference or caucus in the five years I have been a Member of the Senate, with the exception of probably four or five occasions. It is the ordinary method of expression, not intended to absolutely bind as a party mandate but always regarded as highly persuasive and in a sense committing the party and its members.

Mr. HARDWICK. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. HARDWICK. Under the rules of that conference, as well as under the rules of common honor in politics, that sort of a resolution can not be very persuasive to a Senator who is pledged to his constituency.

Mr. REED. The Senator understands that even in our caucuses there are certain exceptions which, if they exist, exempt a member. Among them are these provisions, that a man's conscience or his pledges or his opinion that the measure is violative of the Constitution intervening he is not bound.

I am not claiming that any action of this Democratic meeting binds my good friend from Georgia or binds any other man save and except that as gentlemen get together and agree to confer, generally speaking, when there is a pronounced and decided vote most of them do abide by the will of the majority.

But I do not care to discuss caucus matters. I am presenting this situation to friends of the child-labor bill. I say to you that if you keep hands off and do not undertake to load this bill down by attaching to it another measure it is as certain as anything can be that has not transpired in this legislative body that the child-labor bill will be passed within the next six days of time. It is as certain as anything can be that has not transpired at the White House that the President will gladly affix his signature, because the country knows that he came over here to the Senate and urged that this bill be put upon its passage at this session of Congress.

So I am appealing now to the real friends of the child-labor bill to let that measure become a law and not to jeopardize it.

Now, what is proposed to be done? It is proposed by the friends of the child-labor bill, or by the ostensible friends of the child-labor bill, to add as a rider or amendment the immigration bill. When that is done, these gentlemen will have added to the child-labor bill another and different bill that will not bring a single vote for the child-labor bill. The men who assume that responsibility do so with their eyes open. They know the effect of their act. The country will also know; nobody will be deceived. The gentlemen who advance the scheme know that no additional vote to the child-labor bill is necessary; that it has an overwhelming majority in this body. What, then, will be the effect? They will add to the child-labor bill and make a part of the child-labor bill a measure that has already been vetoed by the President, and his veto has been sustained by the House of Representatives. What action might have been taken here I do not know, because the bill was killed before it reached us by the action of the House in sustaining the veto of the President.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, will the Senator permit one question?

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. Has the Senator any doubt but that there is an overwhelming majority in the Senate for the immigration bill also?

Mr. REED. I have not a doubt of that. I am coming to that. It is an additional argument why you should not jeopardize this bill by putting it up against the veto, because if you are a friend of the immigration bill and also of the child-labor bill, it is not necessary to jeopardize either by tying them together, for each is certain to pass if presented singly.

Observe, it is proposed to add to a bill that is certain to pass, that is certain to be signed by the President, that is almost certain to become a law within 10 days if you keep hands off, a bill that is almost certain to be vetoed, so that both measures will be vetoed at once, for by adding one to the other you make them one bill, and to veto one the President must veto both.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, will the Senator from Missouri allow me to ask him a question right there?

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. HARDWICK. Has the Senator any authority for making that statement or is it merely his own idea?

Mr. REED. I think I know what the President's views are on the immigration bill; but I do not profess to speak for him.

I have never claimed to be the voice of the White House or to speak with authority for the President. I know, however, that he once did veto the bill; I believe he will veto it again; and the Senator from Georgia believes he will veto it again. The Senator from Georgia is against the child-labor bill, and he is fighting it tooth and nail, beak and claw; and, smart, keen lawyer, as he is, he hopes to defeat it by adding the immigration bill to it and having it vetoed by the President. While I am talking he has said here under his breath to me that I am right about what I have said.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield to me, I will say I will do anything in the world that is honorable to defeat that bill.

Mr. REED. Exactly; and that is the Senator's purpose in supporting the proposition to add the immigration bill to it.

Mr. HARDWICK. Undoubtedly the Senator is right about that, and if I vote at all to add the immigration bill to it, it will be for that reason.

Mr. REED. Exactly. Now, you have it. The Senator has made the bold avowal in open court that that is the purpose, and the Senator from Georgia is about as smart, as keen, and as intelligent as they make them here or in any other place—a skilled lawyer at the bar, a skilled debater in the forum, a man whose keen and active mind sees every advantage; and he tells us and he tells you, my friends on the other side of the Chamber, who favor the child-labor bill, that if his object, namely, the defeat of the child-labor bill, will be furthered and aided by adding the immigration bill to it he will vote to make the addition, and of course it will aid in such defeat, because it will, in all human probability, put the measures up against a veto.

Another thing. It now transpires when these two measures tied together and having, as I assume they will be, been vetoed, comes back to Congress, one-third of the vote in either House will sustain the veto. Accordingly this will happen: Every enemy of the child-labor bill will vote to sustain the veto, because by sustaining the veto that bill will be killed. In like manner every man opposed to the immigration bill will vote to sustain the veto in order to kill that bill. So the united votes of the enemies of both bills will go to sustain the veto. The aggregate of these two votes will be certain to exceed one-third of either House of Congress. So both of the measures will be killed. Accordingly the enemies of the child-labor bill will have won their fight, and the keen, incisive, determined, almost invincible little warrior from Georgia will laugh in the faces of the friends of the child-labor bill, and he will have a right to laugh. That is the situation. Now, I yield to my friend from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, as I understand the Senator from Missouri, who I understand is a friend of the child-labor bill, his view is that by attaching the immigration bill to the child-labor bill it will, in all probability, defeat the child-labor bill, because of the veto of the President and the sustaining of the veto by a third of each House?

Mr. REED. Yes, sir. Now, one other thought, and I shall be through. What is the situation with reference to the immigration bill? I am now addressing myself to the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER]. He wants a vote before election. Why? The men who will assemble here next December will be the men who are assembled here now. No matter who is elected in November, this same Congress will sit here, the same membership will sit here that is here now. The real friend of the immigration bill knows that the thing which is necessary to secure the success of the bill is a vote on a day certain. It is wholly unimportant whether that vote shall be taken on the 1st day of December or on the 1st day of August. He knows that the opposition to the immigration bill is active and is determined that it can delay a vote at this session, if it sees fit to do so, and that it can absolutely keep off a vote until this Congress shall have adjourned.

With that situation staring him in the face, and with the statement made to him, that the Democratic conference agreed that the Democratic majority would submit to the Republican side of the Chamber a proposition for a unanimous-consent agreement to vote on the immigration bill at any day they saw fit to name in the month of December, and that if that were not acceded to, the Democrats would make the immigration bill the unfinished business and would keep it the unfinished business until a vote was had upon the merits of the bill, how can any man complain that that is not reasonably speedy action, and more certain action than the other course would be, because it gives you a vote; it will give it to you on a day certain in December, if you gentlemen on the other side of the Chamber will agree upon that day certain; and you know that in all human probability the moment you get the bill to a vote it will pass. Moreover you all know there is no danger of an influx of European immigration before December. You know perfectly well that immigration from Europe has practically ceased and that it will not be resumed until the war is over and perhaps not then for years.

That being the case, I appeal to the Senators who are in favor of child-labor legislation, who want to pass that beneficent legislation, not to do the hazardous and dangerous thing of tying to that bill a measure which is likely to provoke a veto and which will concentrate the enemies of both bills in a vote to sustain that veto.

Moreover—and I say this by way of conclusion—I tell no stories out of school and I break no confidences when I say that it is well understood that, whatever strength there is back of the motion to add the immigration bill to the child-labor bill upon our side of the Chamber, comes, without a single exception, from men who are opposed to the child-labor bill for one reason or another. I challenge none of their motives; I challenge no man's motive or good faith who is opposed to the child-labor bill, but it will be a burning and crying shame if the child-labor bill is defeated or hazarded by adding to it another measure of a different kind, particularly when it is wholly unnecessary to add it in order to pass either it or the child-labor bill, when both measures could be passed singly. It will not redound to the credit of those gentlemen who are friends of child-labor legislation if they thus hazard the measure which, if not amended, is certain to become a law, by adding another measure that is almost certain to be vetoed, thus bringing about the veto of both and probably the failure of both to become a law.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, before the Senator from Missouri takes his seat I should like to ask him a question. I do not know whether he has grounds upon which to base his opinion, but I should like to ask him, does he believe that the President's opposition to the immigration legislation is so profound and determined that, if the two bills were to happen to be put together, he would jeopardize the splendid benefit to the country at large contemplated by the child-labor bill and would kill it in order that he might also destroy the immigration bill?

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I repeat that I have no authority to speak for the President; but if I can indulge so violent a presumption for the moment as to assume myself seated in the position the President now occupies, this is what I would say: I would say to Congress, "You claim to be in favor of both of these bills; you have the power to pass them singly. I send back this bill that you have sent to me embodying two propositions, one of which I think is bad and the other of which I think is good, and I request you to pass the child-labor measure, as you have the authority and the power to do. It is a good measure. Let me act on it alone, and I will sign it; when that has been done, send me the other measure by itself and I will pass on it on its merits. But you can not compel me to sign a bad measure by attaching it to one I believe to be meritorious."

I am glad the Senator from South Carolina has pronounced a eulogy upon the child-labor bill, even by putting the words in a supposititious case in the mouth of the President, because it is the first time I have heard him have anything to say of the child-labor bill of a commendatory nature.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I may take what seems to be a disease prevalent in high and low places and reverse myself later on. [Laughter.]

Mr. REED. Mr. President, yes; men do frequently change their minds. I have been waiting for that evidence of wisdom on the part of my friend, waiting with hope in my heart, and I trust that I shall not be disappointed.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I regret that the rules of the Senate are such that it apparently becomes impossible to discuss matters of interest in their proper order. For that reason I am compelled, if I say what I have the purpose of saying at all, to avail myself of the privilege which is accorded under the rules when considering appropriation bills to discuss other subjects. I have tried to have the rules amended, but my efforts have been in vain.

Mr. President, on July 14, 1916, on an occasion when, as chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency, I had submitted a report suggesting several amendments to the Federal reserve act, the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] took occasion to deliver an address which could only have been intended for campaign purposes, as it had no relation to the pending amendments of the Federal reserve act and sought no amendment thereto. The expiration of the morning hour then prevented my reply, and I have had no opportunity since to make an answer.

He challenged the accuracy of a statement alleged to have been made by President Wilson at Detroit, to the effect that those who opposed the Federal reserve act "now admit that it saved the country from a ruinous panic when the stress of war came on." Certainly many of those who opposed the Federal reserve act were generous enough to make this just acknowledgment, and all of those who opposed the Federal reserve act ought to make the acknowledgment, as I shall endeavor to show.

The Senator praises the Vreeland-Aldrich Act of 1908—that was made effective by the Federal reserve act and the amendment of August 4, 1914—and does what even the Republican national convention did not feel willing to do—denounces the Federal reserve act, saying:

What has the Democratic administration given the country to take the place of the workable and successful Aldrich-Vreeland emergency act of 1908?

Why, the Federal Reserve System, which provides for 12 Federal reserve banks in different sections of the country and gives employment to 593 new officeholders.

It would seem that the Senator would like to abolish the Federal Reserve Bank of Kansas City in order to be rid of the new officeholders, officers of that bank charged with the duty of protecting the credit and commerce of that section. The Senator favored one central bank, as did his party. He and his party favored that one bank under the absolute control of the banks of the country, instead of the Federal reserve banks under the control of the people of the United States.

The Aldrich central bank plan, it will be remembered, provided, in section 9, for 42 directors, controlled by the banks, and four Federal officers, thus placing the system absolutely in the control of the banks and merely using the officers of the Government to give respectability to this arrangement without giving the Government any power. (S. Doc. 243, 62 Cong., 2d sess.) Those who favor control of the credit system of the United States by the banks favored the Aldrich plan, as did the Senator from Kansas. Those who favor controlling the credit system of the United States by the people of the United States favored the Federal reserve act plan, as did the Democratic Party.

It is a difference in point of view. The Senator from Kansas would have the absolute control of credits in this country in the hands of the banks of the country, as the defeated central bank plan proposed, and the Democracy and the overwhelming majority of the people of the United States would have the credit and banking system under the control of the people of the United States, and not in the hands of the allied groups who created the panics of 1873, of 1884, of 1893, and of 1907—not to mention many smaller financial disturbances, by all of which these auxiliaries of the Republican Party privately profited and absorbed thousands of millions of property, while they carefully preserved the loyalty of the Republican leaders by contributing royally in funds to conduct their Republican campaigns, and by contributing the controlled votes of various corporate employees and the support of that portion of the plutocratic press, which was under the domination of these groups.

The Senator from Kansas praises the workable and successful Aldrich-Vreeland Act of 1908, and says:

A panic in August, 1914, was prevented by the Republican emergency act of May 30, 1908.

The act of May 30, 1908, by its own terms, expired June 30, 1914, a month before the European war arose, in the following words:

Sec. 20. That this act shall expire by limitation on the 30th day of June, 1914.

The Vreeland-Aldrich Act was not workable and was not successful. It was an absolute failure; not a dollar of currency was ever issued under it from 1908 to 1914 or until it was made workable by the amendments of the Democratic Party of the most radical character, making it a substantially new act, as I shall immediately point out.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. UNDERWOOD in the chair). Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. OWEN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. CURTIS. Does the Senator deny that the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. McAdoo, announced to the country in 1913, in his annual report for that year, that there was $500,000,000 of emergency currency ready to issue, and that he further states in said report that by reason of that announcement a panic was prevented? Does the Senator deny that?

Mr. OWEN. I recall the quotation of the Senator, and I am proposing now to answer that if he will permit me to do so.

Mr. CURTIS. I shall be very glad to have the Senator answer it.

Mr. OWEN. I shall do so.

The Secretary of the Treasury can not be justly interpreted as attributing to the act of May 30, 1908, the safeguarding of the country from panic in 1914 when he made the statement that he had $500,000,000 of emergency currency available in 1913, because the Democrats were in absolute control and in a position to make effective the Vreeland-Aldrich Act by amendment, as they had already determined to do, and did do, in the then pending Federal reserve act and by the act of August 4, 1914. While these notes had been printed, they had not been issued, and the notes referred to under that bill were not issued until after the Democratic Party had amended the bill and practically changed its entire character. It was no longer properly describable as the act of May 30, 1908, because it was modified in the most substantial respects on the 23d of December, 1913, and on the 4th of August, 1914, as I shall particularly point out.

To attribute to the Secretary an acknowledgment that the protection of the country from panic was due to the Vreeland-Aldrich Act of May 30, 1908, passed by the Republicans, has no justification of fact and ought not to be made by the Senator from Kansas.

In the beginning of the Democratic administration of 1913 the Democrats immediately framed the Federal reserve act, reported it in the Senate November 22, 1913, and enacted it as soon as the filibuster of the Republican Party made it possible—December 23, 1913—and it was well understood what its principles were, especially by the Secretary of the Treasury, when he made his reports in 1913 and 1914.

The Vreeland-Aldrich Act, passed by the Republicans on May 30, 1908, was not a conveniently workable or successful bill. It pretended to be nothing more than a temporary expediency against a possible emergency for currency, and in sections 1, 3, 5, 7, and 9 hindrances and obstructions were placed in the way that made the bill almost impossible of execution.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. OWEN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. CURTIS. I should like to read just the closing paragraph on the first page of the report of the Secretary of December 7, 1914, in which he says, referring to the prevention of the panic to which the Senator from Oklahoma refers:

This has been accomplished notwithstanding the fact that the Federal reserve system authorized by the act of December 23, 1913, was at that time only in process of formation, and was therefore unable to render any service in the situation.

That is what the Secretary of the Treasury says in the report of 1914.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, the language used by the Senator from Kansas is entirely immaterial. The fact was that the Federal reserve act of December 23, 1913, changed the law of May 30, 1908, and made it workable, which it was not theretofore. The act of 1908 required the banks to pay as high as 10 per cent for money, and no bank not in the throes of bankruptcy would dare to go before the country as borrowing money at 10 per cent.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma further yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. OWEN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. CURTIS. Does not the Senator realize that the first issues under that act were authorized at 6 per cent?

Mr. OWEN. Oh, yes; first 6, and then after 30 days 7, 8, 9, 10. The banks that would consent to borrow money on such terms—the banks that would, in the transaction of their orderly business, appeal to the Government for money upon such terms—would announce to the country that they were in the throes of an impending panic.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President—

Mr. OWEN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. CURTIS. The Senator realizes, does he not, that the act was not passed for ordinary circumstances, but was enacted to be used in case of emergency?

Mr. OWEN. The trouble about the act was that it was passed for the purpose of giving relief after a panic had started, while the Democrats proposed to prevent panics from starting in this country.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator permit a suggestion from me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. OWEN. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED. Not only is it true that the Aldrich-Vreeland Act was practically unworkable, but it was so inferior to the new act that the two or three banks that did have out a little Aldrich-Vreeland money, even after we had reduced the interest rate so that they could take it out, immediately retired their money when the Federal reserve act was passed.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, does not the Senator from Missouri know that the emergency currency issued under the Aldrich-Vreeland Act was not retired until after the Vreeland-Aldrich Act, as amended, had expired?

Mr. REED. Oh, no; it was retired almost at once.

Mr. CURTIS. The Secretary of the Treasury does not say so.

Mr. REED. Well, I do not want to get into the discussion of a question of fact with the Senator.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I shall ask to be permitted to make a coherent argument, and after I have concluded I shall be very glad to be interrupted by any Senators who desire to ask me questions. In the meantime, however, I must insist that I be permitted to make an argument which is itself coherent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will protect the Senator.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President—

Mr. OWEN. I yield to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. CURTIS. I simply ask the Senator, if he does not want to be interrupted by me, please not to misinterpret my position.

Mr. OWEN. I will yield to the Senator as soon as I have completed my argument, and I will yield to him at any time he thinks I am misinterpreting what he said. I quoted his language, and I think I did not make any mistake in making the quotation from the Senator, either as to his words or as to his meaning.

As I have said, the Vreeland-Aldrich Act, passed by the Republicans on May 30, 1908, was not a conveniently workable or successful bill. It pretended to be nothing more than a temporary expediency against a possible emergency for currency, and in sections 1, 3, 5, 7, and 9 hindrances and obstructions were placed in the way that made the bill almost impossible of execution.

For example, in order to get emergency notes it was absolutely necessary as a preliminary step for not less than 10 banks to organize an association.

Second. Each of the 10 banks was required to have a surplus of not less than 20 per cent.

Third. These banks were required to have not less than five millions of capital and surplus. No small banks need apply for relief.

Fourth. Not more than one association was permitted in any city.

Fifth. They had to occupy a contiguous territory.

Sixth. No bank which did not have circulating notes secured by deposit of Government bonds of 40 per cent of its capital stock was permitted to participate, and this excluded many of the greatest banks in the country, such as the National City Bank of New York, whose present assets exceed $500,000,000.

Seventh. The circulating notes were limited to 75 per cent of the cash value of securities and commercial paper deposited against such issue.

Eighth. The issue had to be passed upon individually by the Comptroller of the Currency and the Secretary of the Treasury, as well as by the officials of the National Currency Association.

Ninth. In case of bonds based upon the taxing power, only 90 per cent of currency was permissible.

Tenth. No national banking association was permitted in any event to receive circulating notes on commercial paper in excess of 30 per cent of its unimpaired capital and surplus.

Eleventh. With all these obstructions in the way, section 3 further provided that no national banking association which had not outstanding national-bank notes of 40 per cent of its capital stock and a surplus of 20 per cent could apply for circulating notes secured by the deposit of bonds other than bonds of the United States.

In addition to these various obstructing provisions section 5 provided that in no contingency should any of these banks issue notes in excess of their unimpaired capital and surplus.

A further obstruction was interposed, that in no event should the amount of total issue exceed five hundred millions, although the panic of 1907 demonstrated that we required in this country an amount of currency of approximately one thousand millions.

In addition to these various obstructions section 7 provided that even the amount of emergency currency which was provided for would have to be apportioned equitably between the various sections of the country, whatever this meant. But if this condition remained, in no event might the people of New York City expect to receive more of the five hundred millions than in proportion to their numbers, and yet New York City was the place of all others where the financial need was most urgent, as the reserves of 7,000 banks from all the States were concentrated in New York.

Mr. President, I pointed out these defects in this Vreeland-Aldrich bill on the floor of the Senate on February 25, 1908, and in the debates which followed to May 30, 1908. I pointed out at that time the particulars in which these obstructions would make the Vreeland-Aldrich bill comparatively unsatisfactory, even as an emergency measure, and unavailingly urged the Republicans to modify it.

The Vreeland-Aldrich bill imposed so high a rate of taxation on the issuance of these emergency notes that only banks in the very throes of an existing panic could be induced to use the system.

The Vreeland-Aldrich Act provided, for example, a tax on these emergency notes of 5 per cent for the first month, 6 per cent for the second, 7 per cent for the third, and so forth, until a tax of 10 per cent per annum was reached.

A bank resorting to this system would only do so when face to face with a most disastrous panic, and it would not do so for the mere purpose of obviating and preventing a panic.

The Senator from Kansas praises the simplicity of the Vreeland-Aldrich Act. It was complicated in the extreme and unnecessarily and over Democratic protest.

It interposed all sorts of difficulties before the bank or the customers of a bank needing currency could obtain the currency.

The emergency currency of the Vreeland-Aldrich Act was exclusively in the control of the big city banks and only open to their initiative.

Under the Federal reserve act a private citizen can take commercial paper to his country bank and have that commercial paper converted into currency as good as gold within a day or two, without complication, without a national currency association, and free from all the red tape provided by the Vreeland-Aldrich Act.

The truth is the Republican Party, which has been in substantial control of the Government ever since the war, except a few years of a divided Democracy and divided responsibility, permitted the gigantic panic of 1873, the great panic of 1884, the ruinous panic of 1893, and the still worse panic of 1907 to shake this country to its foundations, without ever having taken any adequate steps to protect this country against financial panic and against currency stringency. It is a shameful record.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President—

Mr. OWEN. I yield to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. CURTIS. Did not the Republican Party provide for the Monetary Commission that really laid the foundation for the Federal reserve act, and upon whose report the committee prepared the Federal reserve act?

Mr. OWEN. Yes, Mr. President; in so far as the establishment of a Monetary Commission is concerned, and delaying the settlement of this matter for five years, the country may be duly grateful; but I remind the country and the Senator that the Monetary Commission brought in here a bill intended to concentrate the control of the credits of this country in the hands of the big banks of New York, and they were not permitted to do it, because the Democrats had control of the Senate and the House and the Presidency. They had 42 directors of their own choosing to concentrate the control of the credit system of this country in their hands.

The Republicans left the United States and its people at the mercy of the big banks and trust companies, who were allowed to control the credit system of the United States, enriching the few at the expense of the many unfairly and unjustly, and the Republicans profited by this cold-blooded policy.

The panic of 1907 was so disastrous that the country demanded action in terms the Republican Party could not ignore, and they brought out the emergency legislative fiasco called the Vreeland-Aldrich Act, which had the sole merit that under great difficulty, on almost impossible terms, the country could get emergency currency at an almost prohibitive rate—if the big banks consented.

The only thing of value in the Vreeland-Aldrich Act was the bare possibility under any circumstances of getting currency after a panic had taken place, because the conditions were too severe to obtain money until a panic had taken place or was actually impending.

The vital principle of the Vreeland-Aldrich Act of issuing emergency notes against adequate collateral under an interest charge high enough to cause automatic contraction had been presented to the Republicans in 1900 by the then chairman of the Democratic conference on the floor of the Senate, and had been rejected by the Republicans. The only principle of any value in the Vreeland-Aldrich bill was the principle above referred to, to wit:

Emergency currency issued against adequate collateral, under an interest charge sufficient to cause automatic retirement.

Just to the extent to which the Vreeland-Aldrich bill made the application of this principle difficult—and it did so in very numerous particulars, as I have pointed out—to that extent it was made unworkable, and was a fault and not an advantage.

On February 25, 1908, when the Senate of the United States had under consideration the so-called Aldrich Act (S. 3023) I felt it my duty to call the attention of Mr. Aldrich to the fact that he had rejected a proposal to conveniently and economically and quickly provide emergency currency which had been offered by the Democrats through Senator James K. Jones on February 6, 1900 (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, p. 1534), as an amendment to the then pending act amending the national bank act. This amendment was as follows, to wit:

Amendment proposed by James K. Jones, February 6, 1900: "That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to have printed and to keep on hand United States Treasury notes under a special account to be called the 'emergency circulation fund.' Such notes shall be full legal tender. Any citizen of the United States shall have the right to deposit United States bonds under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, and to receive from such fund 90 per cent of the face value of such bonds in United States Treasury notes, and shall have the right at any time within 12 months to redeem such bonds by repaying in United States Treasury notes the amount so received by him on account of such bonds, with interest at the rate of 6 per cent per annum on such amount. Failure to redeem such bonds within the limit of 12 months shall operate as a forfeiture of such bonds to the United States; and such bonds shall be sold to the highest bidder in the open market, and the balance, after the payment of the principal of the amount advanced, the interest on the same, and the expenses, shall be paid to the former owner of such bonds. Any moneys received from such sale may be exchanged with other moneys in the Treasury so that this fund shall consist alone of Treasury notes. The principal of all sums so advanced when repaid shall be returned to the 'emergency circulation fund,' and all interest upon such sums shall be passed to the credit of the Treasury under miscellaneous receipts."

The act passed, and this amendment was not accepted by Mr. Aldrich or by the Republican Senate.

I myself had prepared this amendment, as is pointed out in a letter of Hon. James K. Jones, copy of which I insert, as follows:

[Law offices of James K. Jones, James K. Jones, Jr., James K. Jones, 621, 622 Colorado Building. Telephone Main 638.]

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 11, 1908.

HON. ROBERT L. OWEN, United States Senate, City.

DEAR SENATOR: I inclose a copy of the amendment which I offered to the financial bill on February 6, 1900 (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, p. 1534).

You will, of course, recall the fact that you prepared the original draft of this proposed amendment, which I introduced in almost, if not in exactly, the form submitted by you. I think you will find the debate on that bill at that time quite interesting.

If that amendment had been adopted at that time and it had been written in the law, it would, in my opinion, have prevented the late panic.

I am glad to see that at last the principle of an emergency currency properly secured is recognized, and that the Committee on Finance of the Senate indorse it.

Congratulating you on your early connection with this idea, I am,
Very sincerely, yours,

JAMES K. JONES.

It will be observed that the leader of the Democrats proposed to Mr. Aldrich on February 6, 1900, a simple emergency provision, by which any citizen of the United States should have the right to deposit United States bonds and receive 90 per cent of the face value thereof in United States Treasury notes, under a penalty not exceeding 6 per cent for the use of such notes.

This simple provision, if accepted by the Republicans, would have prevented the panic of 1907, which Mr. Aldrich himself declared—was the most acute and disastrous in its immediate consequences of any which has occurred in the history of the country—

That—

the shrinkage in values of securities and property and the losses from injury to business resulting from and incident to the crisis amounted to thousands of millions of dollars—

That—

a complete disruption of the exchanges between cities and counties throughout the country took place—

That—

it is impossible to estimate the losses which were inflicted by this interruption of payments by the banks and the resultant interruption of exchanges—

And so forth.

But the Republicans were absolutely at fault in not providing the remedy.

The Democrats offered them an absolute remedy on February 6, 1900, which the Republicans refused to accept; and the failure to accept this provision made the Republican Party responsible for not having legislated so as to protect the country against this panic, even after they were urged by the Democrats to do so.

And when the Aldrich bill was passed, authorizing a monetary commission to make an investigation of the matter, I made a demand for an investigation of the panic of 1907—who caused it, who profited by it, and the extent to which they profited, and the investigation was refused me, as I verily believe, because it would have exposed, disgraced, and dishonored men who have contributed corruptly millions of dollars to finance Republican campaigns.

On December 23, 1913, over Republican opposition, the Democrats passed the Federal reserve act, conceded by all the world to be the most important piece of constructive legislation of the last half century. It has stabilized our finance, our industry, and our commerce; has established an unbreakable confidence, leading tens of thousands of men into new enterprises because of their faith in the stability of credits, and because of their belief that the old credit-destroying practice of creating credit stringencies from time to time, that the powerful few might profit at the expense of the masses, was substantially powerless to break down legitimate industry.

It has done more. It has set a great standard for the nations of the world, by which they can all profit when they realize its value.

By section 27 of that act the Vreeland-Aldrich bill was extended until June 30, 1915, from June 30, 1914, the day upon which it expired under the statute, with several very important amendments, reenacting sections 5153, 5172, 5191, and 5214 of the national-bank act, so that they should be restored as they were prior to the passage of the Vreeland-Aldrich Act, and amending the bill further so that the tax on circulating notes for the first three months should only be 3 per cent per annum.

This latter amendment was of vital importance, because it did not carry the implication that the banks were struggling in a panic when they chose to avail themselves of this act and take out emergency currency.

The Secretary of the Treasury perfectly well understood that the Democrats were going to pass this act as it had been drawn, and when the political enemies of the administration undertook to create a sentiment of pessimism, of distrust and doubt, and panic throughout the country during the summer of 1913 the Secretary of the Treasury took the bull by the horns and stated that he had in print five hundred millions in new national bank-note currency which he would not hesitate to issue if an emergency arose. This declaration from the Secretary of the Treasury was sufficient to overcome the timidity for which enemies of the administration, in my judgment, were responsible.

The act of the Secretary of the Treasury was one of patriotism and sound sense. He had the united Democrats behind him to make the Vreeland-Aldrich Act workable, as they did do when occasion arose, August 4, 1914, and he was fully justified in reassuring the country.

He had no occasion to enlarge upon the fallibility and weakness of the Vreeland-Aldrich Act. In his effort to restore confidence he made as strong a statement of his disposition to render service as was possible under the circumstances.

It was not an indorsement of the act of May 30, 1908, whose impracticable character was well known to the Secretary of the Treasury.

But, after all, when it came to the European war and it became necessary to meet an occasion which would have been sufficient to cause a gigantic panic in the United States, the Democratic administration amended the Vreeland-Aldrich Act within 48 hours, authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to suspend the limitations imposed by sections 1, 3, 5, 7, and 9 of the Vreeland-Aldrich Act, which contained the obstructions which I have above pointed out; and, moreover, providing that the banks, in exchange for this privilege, should furnish the Treasury with an adequate gold supply for redemption of such notes; and, moreover, providing that the national banks might issue additional circulation under the increased authority of the suspension of the provisions of the Vreeland-Aldrich Act; and, moreover, providing that the Secretary of the Treasury should extend the benefits of this act to all qualified State banks and trust companies which had joined the Federal Reserve System, or which might contract to do so within 15 days of the passage of the act.

The Federal reserve act was being put into operation and had already given the people of the United States a new spirit of hope and confidence and was soon after this in active operation.

The Senator from Kansas now boldly claims the credit for the protection of the country against a panic in August, 1914, under a Republican statute, which by its own terms would have expired June 30, 1914, which was vitally amended by the democracy on December 23, 1913, and which was in effect suspended as to its obstructive provisions on August 4, 1914, at the prayer of the leading banks of the country, who recognized that the bill which the Republicans passed was not a workable bill.

The fact is when it came to a vote on the act of December 23, which extended the Vreeland-Aldrich Act from June 30, 1914, to June 30, 1915, we find the following Republican Senators voted against it (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, p. 1230, Dec. 19, 1913):

Senators Borah, Bradley, Brandegee, Bristow, Burton, Catron, Clapp, Colt, Cummins, Dillingham, du Pont, Gallinger, Goff, Gronna, Jackson, Kenyon, La Follette, Lippitt, McCumber, McLean, Nelson, Oliver, Page, Penrose, Root, Sherman, Smith of Michigan, Smoot, Sutherland, Townsend, Warren, and Works.

And the only Republicans who voted for it were:

Senators Crawford, Norris, Perkins, Sterling, and Weeks.

Senator POINDEXTER as a Progressive also voted for the bill.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President—

Mr. OWEN. I yield.

Mr. JONES. I think the RECORD will show, if my recollection is correct, that I voted for the bill also.

Mr. OWEN. I am very glad to be reminded of that.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. OWEN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. GRONNA. Does the Senator from Oklahoma mean to say that 3 per cent was the maximum rate of interest charged the banks under the act?

Mr. OWEN. No, sir; I said the first three months it was 3 per cent.

Mr. GRONNA. Is it not also true that it would rise as high as 6 per cent?

Mr. OWEN. Yes.

The Republicans did, however, vote for an amendment which would have extended the Vreeland Act for one year from June 30, 1914, to June 30, 1915, without liberalizing it in any degree. (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, p. 1224, Dec. 19, 1913.) But even this they did merely in an attempt to defeat the Democracy in the passage of the Federal reserve act as drawn by the Democracy. And they only permitted the Federal reserve act to pass at the end of a serious opposition in which the Democrats were compelled to meet early in the morning and hold the Senate in session until late at night, week after week, until by physical exhaustion the Republicans relinquished the fight against the provisions of this great act.

The stubborn, unintelligent conduct of the Republicans, as a party, in their hostility to this bill of itself would be regarded by the people of the United States as unpardonable political incapacity if the people could only be made to know the facts. Great credit should be given the few individual Republicans who generously supported the bill and tried to improve it.

This great act is the basis of our present prosperity. It has established confidence in the minds of the people of the United States from the Atlantic to the Pacific and from Canada to the Gulf. Hundreds of thousands of new enterprises are springing up throughout the land. The national banks have increased in their deposits over two thousand millions in less than two years. The outflow of gold in 1913 and 1914 has been entirely corrected.

January 1, 1912, we had a gold stock in the United States (according to the estimates of the Director of the Mint) of $1,799,600,000, while June 30, 1916, we have $2,439,921,902. In the United States Treasury we have $1,854,000,000 gold and $501,000,000 silver as reserve against gold and silver certificates. Gold in the Treasury July 1, 1912, was $1,207,464,264; July 1, 1916, the gold in the Treasury was $1,854,000,000; a gain of $647,000,000 in 3½ years of Democratic administration. The record is unparalleled. On July 25, 1916, we had in the general fund of the Treasury $323,635,343.49, with an enormous net balance of $229,263,994.68, in addition to $249,569,000 of indebtedness to the Treasury of the Panama Canal (bond issue authorized, but not issued). Call money is available at 2 per cent, time money at 3½ per cent, mercantile credit at 4 per cent, bankers' acceptances at 2½ per cent, and domestic acceptances at 3 per cent.

The Department of Commerce, May 13, 1916, issued the statement that steel merchant vessels building or under contract from the United States now number 368, exceeding one million tonnage—the greatest ship-building activity the country has ever known. Every ship-building plant is working to capacity and very great enlargement is in progress.

The National City Bank of New York, analyzing the 1915 census returns, puts the manufactories of the United States at twenty-four billion for that year, and it would not be an overestimate to put those of 1916 at from twenty-eight to thirty billions. It will be observed that the Secretary of Commerce has understated the case according to this analysis.

The Manufacturers' Record of June 22, 1916, contains the following statement:

The value of the output of the steel works and rolling mills of the United States, which was $919,527,244 in 1914, will this year, by virtue of an increase of nearly 100 per cent in output in iron and steel products, and a very large increase in value, probably run to $2,500,000,000.

The clearings for 131 leading cities of the United States for June, 1916, amounted to $20,515,438,480 (Dun's Review). These clearings comprise only a part of the business activity of the United States and do not include internal checks nor transactions not paid by checks, and for the 12 months it is obvious that the business transacted by the people of the United States will easily run up to between two and three hundred billions. The increase of clearings of June, 1916, over the clearings of June, 1915, amount to about 46 per cent.

The following figures, taken from Babson's Desk Sheet of June 22, 1916, furnish an excellent comparison of business conditions existing during the first five months of the last three years of the Republican administration, 1911, 1912, and 1913, with the first five months of the present year under a Democratic administration (last available figures):

NEW BUILDING.

First five months of 1911, $209,644,754; 1912, $233,040,687; 1913, $216,982,789, as against $246,719,599 in 1916.

BANK CLEARINGS.

During the first five months of 1911, $66,164,734,000; 1912, $72,220,126,000; 1913, $72,397,164,000, as against $98,958,477,000 in 1916.

LOANS OF NEW YORK CLEARING-HOUSE BANKS (EXCLUSIVE OF TRUST COMPANIES).

Average per month during the first five months of 1911, $1,318,230,000; 1912, $1,397,481,000; 1913, $1,342,243,000, as against $2,287,909,000 in 1916.

DEPOSITS OF NEW YORK CLEARING-HOUSE BANKS (EXCLUSIVE OF TRUST COMPANIES).

Average per month during the first five months of 1911, $1,354,048,000; 1912, $1,439,322,000; 1913, $1,344,750,000, as against $2,456,389,000 in 1916.

CASH HELD BY NEW YORK CLEARING-HOUSE BANKS (EXCLUSIVE OF TRUST COMPANIES).

Average per month for the first five months in 1911, $373,631,000; 1912, $381,864,000; 1913, $350,744,000, as against $380,134,000 in 1916.

SURPLUS RESERVES OF NEW YORK CLEARING-HOUSE BANKS (EXCLUSIVE OF TRUST COMPANIES).

Average per month for the first five months in 1911, $35,118,867; 1912, $22,033,700; 1913, $14,549,412, as against $118,193,185 in 1916.

TOTAL RESERVES OF ALL NEW YORK BANKS.

Average per month for the first five months of 1911, $531,767,388; 1912, $610,479,375; 1913, $555,467,921, as against $926,393,987 in 1916.

IMPORTS OF MERCHANDISE.

For the first four months for the year 1911, $511,124,608; 1912, $597,923,043; 1913, $614,617,315, under the Payne-Aldrich Act, as against $809,635,241 for the first four months in 1916 under the Democratic tariff.

EXPORTS OF MERCHANDISE.

For the first four months in 1911 was $692,961,450; 1912, $786,002,403; 1913, $808,270,021, as against $1,548,242,644 for the first four months of 1916.

BALANCE OF TRADE.

For the first four months in 1911, $181,836,842; 1912, $188,079,360; 1913, $193,652,706, as against $738,907,403 for the first four months in 1916.

MONEY IN CIRCULATION.

Per capita, average, first six months, 1911, $34.49; 1912, $34.54; 1913, $34.59, as against $38.46 for 1916.

SHARES TRADED ON NEW YORK STOCK EXCHANGE.

First five months in 1911, $43,919,539; 1912, $62,166,829; 1913, $36,609,124, as against $72,231,817 for the first five months in 1916.

BONDS TRADED ON NEW YORK STOCK EXCHANGE.

During the first five months of 1911, $377,595,000; 1912, $360,016,500; 1913, $240,797,000, as against $462,970,950 in 1916.

NEW SECURITIES LISTED ON NEW YORK STOCK EXCHANGE.

For the first five months in 1911, $480,026,430; 1912, $790,653,220; 1913, $308,318,215, as against $809,756,575 in 1916.

RAILROAD NET EARNINGS (10 LEADING ROADS).

For the first four months in 1911, $60,007,477; 1912, $55,102,225; 1913, $58,041,026, as against $79,670,528 in 1916.

IDLE CARS.

On March 1, 1911, there were 189,842 idle cars; February 28, 1912, 7,842; March 1, 1913, 31,381; and on March 1, 1916, there was a net shortage of 20,551 cars.

NEW CORPORATIONS (IN EASTERN STATES WITH AUTHORIZED CAPITAL OF MILLION OR OVER).

For the first five months in 1911, $890,414,000; 1912, $958,129,000; 1913, $1,061,898,000, as against $1,208,125,300 in 1916.

PRODUCTION OF PIG IRON.

May, 1911, 1,893,000 tons, at $13.95 per ton; May, 1916, 3,351,000 tons, at $17.90.

The failures for first half of 1916 were $111,000,000, while for the same period of 1914 they were $185,000,000.

An absurd Republican attempt has been made to attribute our present prosperity exclusively to the European war and the shipment of goods abroad and to make the people believe our prosperity is transient and temporary for that reason.

A just and very temperate estimate of the export of war munitions and of supplies during the last two years giving the benefit of the doubt in favor of the larger estimate, made by Hon. William C. Redfield, Secretary of Commerce (New York Annalist, June 12, 1916, p. 708), compared to our gross foreign exports amounts to only about 17 per cent; that is, the volume of 17 per cent of four and a half billions would be less than a billion dollars per annum of war munitions and supplies.

The estimated volume of internal commerce in the United States for the last fiscal year amounts to over $45,000,000,000 on one turnover annually of the primary products from agriculture, forests, mines, manufacturing industries, and fisheries. Our foreign shipments because of the war is only 2 per cent of our internal activities on this low estimate. As a matter of fact, our internal commerce is easily a hundred billions, because our primary products are probably turned over on an average of between two or three times before being consumed. Estimated by our exchanges, it would be over two hundred billions. I submit as an exhibit a letter from Hon. William C. Redfield, Secretary of the Department of Commerce, of July 18, 1916, and of E. E. Pratt, chief of the bureau, giving the authority upon which I make this statement, merely pausing to point out that the possible amount of articles classified as suitable for war purposes include many articles which are available both for war and peace, and that these shipments are not shipments merely to countries at war, but shipments to neutral countries as well as belligerent countries.

The probability is that our shipments for war purposes will not amount to 1 per cent of our internal domestic activities. It is therefore entirely clear that the attempt of the Republican Party leaders to make our national prosperity appear to be dependent on the European war is entirely unsound and that they are engaged in a mischievous attempt to impair public confidence with a view to their own political advantage. This conduct shows how untrustworthy such leadership is.

If it were not for this war, our conditions would be more satisfactory, as in that event we would have been able to still more rapidly expand our foreign commerce. This war has enormously interrupted the ability of the European people to manufacture things which we desire, the purchase of which from them would enable them to buy more largely from us the things which we have that they want.

The Republican theory that we prosper in degree as we ship the products of our labor abroad, and refuse to accept the products of the labor of other people, is a fundamental error, a hoary-headed myth that can not be defended by sound sense or pure reason. Undoubtedly American commerce can be impaired by unfair practices from abroad, precisely as domestic American commerce can be injured by unfair practices at home, but in the long run foreign people can only buy the products of the labor of others in degree as other nations buy from them.

They can not pay for their imports (our exports) with gold without wrecking the gold redemption feature upon which every financial system of every important nation is founded. The great prosperity of the United States is largely due to the freedom from obstruction to the commerce between our 48 States.

The Senator from Kansas exhibits an astonishing temerity in his attempt to give the Republican Party credit for protecting this country against the threat of a panic in August, 1914, by passing a proper emergency currency act.

An abstract simple statement of the facts in this case are that on February 6, 1900 (p. 1534, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 1900), the Republicans rejected a Democratic proposal for a simple, workable, emergency circulation. On May 30, 1908, the Republicans passed an emergency act, the Vreeland-Aldrich Act, full of obstructions and difficulties, as set forth in sections 1, 3, 5, 7, and 9. The Democrats protested unavailingly in May, 1908, against this grossly defective statute.

The Democrats on December 23, 1913, amended this act substantially by lowering the tax on the emergency circulation, restoring the provisions of the bank acts repealed by the Vreeland-Aldrich Act, and extending its provisions one year. The Republicans all voted against this liberalization.

On August 4, 1914, the Democrats suspended sections 1, 3, 5, 7, and 9, and otherwise liberalized the act, so as to make the Vreeland-Aldrich Act workable, and did this on the prayer of the leading banks of the country.

The Republicans themselves agreed to these overwhelming changes in the Vreeland-Aldrich Act on August 4, 1916, without a vote of objection, because it was perfectly obvious the old Republican act was grossly defective and unworkable. The Democrats extended its life over Republican opposition December 23, 1913, and made it workable by Republican consent August 4, 1914. It was a complete confession of Republican financial legislative incompetency.

The Secretary of the Treasury was entirely justified in his report of December, 1913, and in his action in the summer of 1913, in advising the country that the country would be able to obtain from him the emergency currency necessary to protect the country against any currency stringency. He was justified because the Democrats had already determined to extend the act of May 8, 1908, and made it workable, and moreover because the Democrats were completely in control, and could, within 48 hours, make this measure completely workable by suspending the obstructive features of the act, as they did actually do on August 4, 1914, when an exigency really arose:

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, July 16, 1916.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I take pleasure in transmitting herewith statements showing the estimated value of our internal trade during 1915, together with a statement of the principal component factors, as outlined in your oral request. I also send you an estimate of the year's export trade in ammunition, war materials, etc., based upon official reports for 11 months. From this it will be noted that the approximate value of the fiscal year 1916 exports of each of the groups in question will be:

Ammunition and firearms.....	$478,000,000
Articles mainly suitable for war purposes.....	682,200,000
Total, above groups.....	1,160,200,000
All other articles.....	3,184,800,000
Total exports 1916 (estimated).....	4,345,000,000

Very truly, yours,

WILLIAM C. REDFIELD, Secretary.

Hon. ROBERT L. OWEN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

P. S.—Above includes all our trade in all above articles with neutral as well as with belligerent countries.

Exports of merchandise from the United States during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916.

[Approximate only, reports for June, 1916, not being available, yet the figures for that month are estimated on the basis of the returns for May.]

Articles.	Value.
Ammunition and firearms:
Cartridges.....	$24,300,000
Gunpowder.....	165,900,000
Other explosives (except dynamite).....	259,300,000
Firearms.....	18,500,000
Total.....	478,000,000
Articles mainly suitable for war purposes:
Animals—
Horses.....	73,000,000
Mules.....	23,000,000
Brass and manufactures of.....	162,400,000
Cars, carriages, etc.—
Automobiles, commercial.....	57,600,000
Aeroplanes and parts of.....	7,200,000
Copper and manufactures of.....	170,700,000
Hay.....	3,400,000
Iron and steel, manufactures of—
Horseshoes.....	2,200,000
Wire, barbed.....	24,000,000
Lead, manufactures of.....	14,000,000
Leather, manufactures of—
Boots and shoes, men's.....	37,800,000
Harness and saddles.....	6,200,000
Surgical appliances (not including instruments).....	3,200,000
Wool, manufactures of—
Wearing apparel.....	19,400,000
All other (except rags).....	33,600,000
Zinc and manufactures of.....	44,400,000
Total.....	682,200,000
Total above articles to all countries.....	1,160,200,000
All other articles.....	3,184,800,000
Total exports.....	4,345,000,000

Factors of internal trade of the United States, 1915.

Value.	Official data.	Estimate 1915.
	Billions.	Billions.
Manufactures produced, 1909.....	20.7	128.5
Agricultural products, 1910.....	8.5	10.5
Mineral products, 1914.....	2.1	12.5
Fisheries, forests, etc.....		1.5
Imported goods, 1915.....	1.7	1.7
Value added to domestic products by transportation.....		1.3
		45.0

<sup>1</sup> Estimated by Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce.

<sup>2</sup> Estimate supplied by Department of Agriculture, July 18, 1916.

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE,
BUREAU OF FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC COMMERCE,
Washington, July 18, 1916.

Hon. ROBERT L. OWEN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: Recurring to your oral request, I beg to confirm the estimate of $45,000,000,000 as the value of the commerce between the States of the Union in a single year. This total merely represents the aggregate value of a single turnover in products of manufacture, agriculture, mining, fisheries, and imported commodities, including a reasonable amount as the value added by transportation. To these factors for the latest year covered by census or other official measurements was added an estimate for the normal increase since that year.

Very truly, yours,

E. E. PRATT, Chief of Bureau.

The President was entirely justified in his Detroit speech, which the Senator from Kansas has unjustly criticized.

Mr. President, I will be glad to answer any question any Senator wishes to ask or any objection any Senator cares to make.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. OWEN. I yield the floor.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, I only want to say a word or two. I will not detain the Senate very long from the consideration of the business supposed to be before it. My remarks are rendered necessary by some remarks of my friend from Missouri [Mr. REED]. In colloquy with that Senator I stated what is true, that if I thought by any honorable means I could defeat the Federal child-labor bill I should not hesitate to employ those means.

It is necessary, I think, Mr. President, in the interest of historical accuracy that there should be some slight review of what has happened with reference to this particular measure.

About two weeks ago the members of the majority party on the floor held a free caucus or conference on this subject. I like the second word best. After a full discussion of the matter we determined that it was best and wisest that this measure should go over until December, when it could be considered at more length and with less partisan and political prejudice than it can be at the present moment.

Soon after that decision became known, intervention from outside sources took place. Very soon we were convened in conference again to reconsider our action on that question. We were notified when the second conference on the subject was called, which, I think, was last Tuesday night, that the sole object of that conference was to consider the child-labor legislation. I attended that conference, but left soon after what I saw was the inevitable and certain result of it. It became apparent that a majority of my party associates were determined that there ought to be a vote on this question during the present session, although their previous judgment, uninfluenced from any outside sources, had been entirely different.

The object of the conference had been stated to be the consideration of this one question. It was my understanding that after I had gone away and other Senators had gone, and while there was probably no one knows certainly—an actual physical attendance of something like 20 Democratic Senators out of 56—

Mr. KERN. More than 20.

Mr. HARDWICK. The Senator will correct me if I am in error, because I was not there. I said there were probably, according to the best information I can get, something like 20 Democratic Senators out of 56 actually present in person. Then another matter about which we had no notice that there was to be any action was taken up in some way, shape, form, or fashion by that little gathering, and a resolution of some sort was passed reciting that it was the sense of those gentlemen present that there should be no action with respect to the immigration legislation during the present session of Congress.

There is no particular controversy between myself and the junior Senator from Missouri on that question. That is about what happened. It may be that there were as many as 25 Senators, or something like that number, present instead of 20. I am not undertaking to state that fact with accuracy, but substantially I think I have stated the fact with accuracy.

I say there is no controversy between us, because the Senator from Missouri concedes all that I have ever contended, and that was that there was no effort to take any authoritative, official, or binding action with respect to this matter.

Senators may have passed some resolution stating that they did not want to take up the immigration bill just on the eve of election, but that has very little weight with me, persuasive or otherwise, because I am committed to my constituency to take the immigration bill at the first and at every opportunity that I shall get, and regardless of any action that these gentlemen might take. I think I can say that not only I but many other Democratic Senators would vote to dispose of this immigration legislation, in which we believe sincerely and for which we are willing to fight stoutly whenever the occasion arises.

Now, so much for that feature of it. Our caucus rules, of course, do not attempt or undertake to bind the Senators on the majority side to support any proposition about which they have constitutional scruples or concerning which they have made pledges to their constituencies.

Therefore the contention is not made, it could not be made, that with respect to the consideration of the immigration bill, either the Senator from Georgia or any other Senator on this side of the Chamber is bound to vote not to consider it during the present session.

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] suggested that the proposition to tie the immigration bill to the child-labor bill as an amendment was a scheme of mine; in substance and effect that was his suggestion; that it was a method I had employed with which to fight child-labor legislation.

Mr. President, the Senator is in error about that, although, frankly, if I vote for the amendment which the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] has suggested that he may offer, I admit that my object in doing so, and my sole object in doing so, will be to defeat the Federal child-labor bill; but it is unfair to the Senator from Idaho and to Senators who think as he does about this matter, and who have given notice of their intention to offer this amendment to the child-labor bill, to charge them with responsibility for my motives, if I should happen to vote for the amendment.

As a matter of fact, from the beginning I have been in very grave doubt as to whether or not I could afford to vote for the amendment if it were proposed by the Senator from Idaho, for the reason that I am so much opposed to the child-labor law; and I am so thoroughly convinced of its unconstitutionality that I should be compelled to vote against it, no matter what amendments were placed on it, and no matter how much I should favor any amendment to it that might be agreed to.

Mr. President, that is all I wanted to say about that. At a later time, and at very much more length, I expect to discuss the child-labor bill and the various questions involved in that legislation; but for the present all I want to say in that connection is that if I vote for the Borah amendment at all—the Senator from Missouri is right—it will be because I want to defeat the main proposition. I hesitate to do that, and I have not yet decided that I will do that, because I am sincerely and thoroughly in favor of the immigration bill, and I urgently insist that it ought to be taken up and acted upon during the present session of Congress. I therefore hesitate to tie the two propositions together. I do not know whether it would beat them both or pass them both. I should be sorry to see either happen. Therefore I should be in a very bad fix if they did tie them together. As the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP] suggests, I would be very much happier if either one "of the fair charmers were away." I should like to see the immigration bill passed, and I should be utterly displeased if the child-labor bill were to pass.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SAULSBURY in the chair). Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. HARDWICK. I do.

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator from Georgia is in favor of the immigration bill, is he not?

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes.

Mr. THOMAS. Does the Senator think that it would be businesslike or practicable to take up and consider the immigration bill at this late period in the session, in view of the fact that the last Congress passed the bill and the President vetoed it?

Mr. HARDWICK. I will answer the Senator's question by saying that I think it is perfectly feasible and perfectly practicable; and I will tell the Senator why. Because the bill reported from the committee, of which I am a member, is almost identical with the one we have heretofore passed.

Mr. THOMAS. Precisely.

Mr. HARDWICK. It would not, therefore, take long to pass it in this body—I venture that prophecy—unless a determined effort were made to delay it for the purpose of delay only, and I hardly think that would be done.

Mr. THOMAS. Does not the Senator think that if we should pass the bill the President would veto it?

Mr. HARDWICK. I do not hesitate to face that question also, and I believe I voice the sentiments of 99 per cent of my constituency when I answer it as I am going to answer it. If the President does veto the bill the Senator from Georgia is prepared to vote to pass it over his veto. Not only that, but I venture the statement in this presence that more than two-thirds of the Members of both Houses of Congress are equally prepared to do the same.

Mr. THOMAS. Will the Senator from Georgia vote to pass the combined bill or both bills over the President's veto?

Mr. HARDWICK. I have just said I would not; and if I vote for the so-called Borah amendment, it will be simply because I hope the Senator from Missouri was right in his prediction that the President would veto them both. Then my idea would be that we should take up the immigration bill as a separate and independent proposition and send it to the President separately.

Mr. THOMAS. Does the Senator suppose for a moment that the Democratic Party in power in both Houses would override the veto of its own President on an important matter of that kind at this juncture?

Mr. HARDWICK. I have not the slightest doubt about it, to give the Senator my own opinion.

Mr. THOMAS. Neither have I, I want to say to the Senator, any doubt that the Democratic Party would not do it.

Mr. HARDWICK. The Senator from Colorado, I think, is venturing into the realms of prophecy.

Mr. THOMAS. I am venturing into the realms of political wisdom and propriety.

Mr. HARDWICK. I do not know whether the Senator is doing that or not. My own opinion is precisely contrary to his.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President—

Mr. HARDWICK. Just a moment, if the Senator please. Members of both Houses of Congress, who have settled convictions on this great question, who have obligations on this great question, who represent the settled views and the well-matured opinions of great constituencies on this question, will not lightly surrender them at the behest of any man at any time, in my judgment. Of course, if the Senator from Colorado thinks otherwise, he is welcome to his opinion. My opinion is that on this one question—immigration—the Members of both Houses of Congress entertain opinions so well founded, entertain opinions so maturely formed, that they are not likely to yield them to any man, be he either President of the United States or what not, at this or at any other time. Of course that is a mere matter of opinion.

What I want to do, representing what I know are the wishes and views of my own constituency, is to have an opportunity to get this legislation acted on at the earliest possible moment. Of course, if the Senator from Colorado should be right in his opinion, if he entertains the opinion that it can not pass over the President's veto, we shall be no worse off than we are now, because we shall not have the legislation in either event.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I am as strongly of the opinion that the immigration bill should be placed upon the statute books as is the Senator from Georgia, but I am not willing to waste valuable time in the consideration of a measure, however important, the passage of which will probably be attended by a presidential disapproval, and I do not believe, if that disapproval should occur, it will be overruled or overridden by the action of the two Houses of Congress, certainly not at this time.

I am willing to stay here as long as anybody; it is our duty to remain here as long as we have indispensable business to transact; but I am not willing to stay here to transact business which, when transacted, will probably prove abortive. My judgment is that if this immigration bill is attached to the child-labor bill both will meet with the Executive disapproval. I do not know it; I have no right to go beyond an expression of opinion; but I think that opinion is pretty well founded. I believe and I hope that if, for the purpose of placing the President in an embarrassing position, he being a candidate for the Presidency, and for the purpose of compelling him either to veto the child-labor bill or to repudiate his action on the immigration bill at the last session, he should be asked to affix his signature to the bill with the rider, that he will refuse to do so; I think he ought to refuse to do so; and I think that if that is designed—and I am not attributing any such motive to the Senator from Georgia—

Mr. HARDWICK. Oh, I have said I have no such purpose.

Mr. THOMAS. As a political movement, the President, in public opinion, will be justified, under the circumstances, in refusing his consent to the measure with the amendment.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President—

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I do not wish to divert the Senator from Georgia from an immediate reply to the Senator from Colorado, but I should like to ask the Senator from Georgia if he has observed in the public press the reports that the Government of Norway, the Government of Italy, and the Government of Greece have tendered an inducement for the return of their people from the United States, the inducement being in the form of offering land and money compensation, to make up the great losses they have endured? I ask the Senator does he not think that the war and these evidences to which I have referred have removed any immediate exigency for the consideration of the immigration bill, and does not the situation differ now from that which prevailed immediately previous to the war, thus permitting the bill to go over until after the election without detriment to anybody?

Mr. HARDWICK. I will answer the Senator in just a moment.

Mr. President, answering first the suggestion of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS], I am one of those who believe that those of us who would pass this bill before election and over the President's veto, if necessary, are the truest and wisest friends of the President of the United States. I believe that by passing this legislation, in which I think fully two-thirds of the people of the United States believe and which two-thirds of the people of the United States demand, before election and removing it from the field of politics, we will have strengthened the hands of our President rather than have weakened them. Why? Because the men who get the legislation they want are not resentful; men who get what they are after are not mad with those who opposed them. If you remove it from the field of mooted politics, of mooted political issues, before the election, you may save the President the loss of many thousands of votes, which it is quite possible he might lose by the action which he has already taken in this matter.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. STONE. I should like to ask the distinguished Senator from Georgia if he does not believe, what I do believe, that in the settlement of matters of this kind—the order of business, the program of legislation—the majority party over here might arrange that without discussing it on the floor of the Senate?

Mr. HARDWICK. Well, I do not think that I entertain any such notion as that. I do not think that the party situation is quite so desperate as to require any secret caucuses about this thing. I do not think that the temper of the American people is such that we have to consider behind closed doors what we will or will not consider on this floor or elsewhere. Not at all. If the party is going to take action in an authoritative binding manner, in the manner prescribed by the rule of the majority of Senators, then I am willing to abide by it on every question where I am not exempted by the rules themselves from abiding by that decision; but until such action is taken, what constitutes the will and program of the majority of Senators? What this Senator says or what that Senator says or what some other Senator says? No. It can be determined in no such way. I know of no way that we can determine the precise question whether we are going to take up the immigration bill before the adjournment of the session except by a vote of the United States Senate, unless Senators on this side deem it a matter of such grave party interest as to justify, if not to require, party caucus action in the manner prescribed by the rules, and after notice to every Democratic Senator that that is the question which is to be determined and settled by the caucus.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I should like to have from my able friend from Georgia an answer to the question which I asked, namely, if the conditions have not removed the exigency?

Mr. HARDWICK. I will come to that in just a moment. I must get to it in regular order. I want first to answer the other question.

The Senator from Colorado says that he does not believe on the eve of an election a Democratic House or a Democratic Senate would pass a bill of this sort over the presidential veto. With all respect, I differ as earnestly and as completely as possible from my distinguished friend from Colorado. I do not believe that the Democrats are made of that sort of stuff. The opinions that they have on the immigration question come from their constituents. They represent, as I said just now, the well-settled and well-matured opinions of the people back home on this question; every one of us does; and my judgment is that, regardless of who stands against the wishes, the interests, and the desires of our people and our own obligations to them, every Senator and every Representative, Democratic and Republican, is likely to vote pretty much as his convictions go and as his obligations to his constituents run. I know that is true in my case, and I think it is true of 90 per cent of the membership of this body and of the other House of Congress.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Is it any more a discourtesy or a lack of consideration for Congress to pass a bill over the President's veto than it is for the President to veto a bill that passes Congress with practical unanimity?

Mr. HARDWICK. Certainly not. Talk about "teamwork"—

Mr. VARDAMAN. If the Senator will pardon me a moment.

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes.

Mr. VARDAMAN. The legislative department of the Government is the head, the thinking department in the matters of legislation. Here the laws are initiated, framed, and enacted. The framers of our peculiar form of government intended that Congress should do the thinking, while the executive department should perform the functions of the hand. The Congress has supreme power in the matter of making laws. And being a coordinate branch of the Government—of equal dignity and power with the executive department of the Government—I can not see how the passage of a bill over the President's veto could be construed as lacking in consideration for the President any more than the President's veto of a bill passed by Congress with practical unanimity would be taken as an affront to Congress by the President. The Congress and the President have their proper functions to perform, and they should perform those functions with independence and prudence, uninfluenced by any other consideration than a deep sense of responsibility to the American people, our common master. If I may be permitted to add in this connection, I will say that one of the dangers to the permanency of the form of government as established by its founders is the arrogation of authority by the Executive and the supine subserviency of the legislative department to presidential domination.

Mr. HARDWICK. The Senator from Mississippi is undoubtedly right. Speaking of "teamwork," are the Members of this body or of the other House of Congress to be criticized if they do not happen to agree with the President about some legislative proposition, and then is he to be allowed to differ from more than two-thirds of his legislative colleagues in both Houses of Congress and to be exempt from like criticism? Is it to be considered, forsooth, high treason on the eve of an election for us to consider whether we will pass a bill, the veto of the President to the contrary notwithstanding? To the suggestion of the Senator from Colorado I say no, in the name of American manhood, in the name of Democratic independence, in the name of our responsibility and duty as legislators.

Mr. CLAPP. And, Mr. President, especially when it is the function of Congress to act first upon a measure.

Mr. HARDWICK. Undoubtedly. The President of the United States—I dislike to suggest such a possibility—but it is barely possible that he may have changed his mind since he vetoed the immigration bill the last time. It may be that the Senator from Colorado is unduly, unnecessarily, and prematurely alarmed. It may be that when we send to the President this measure, which three-fourths of our people want, we will find that the President of the United States is willing for them to have it on the eve of an election.

Mr. THOMAS and Mr. HARDING addressed the Chair.

Mr. HARDWICK. Just one moment and I will yield to the Senators. I want to finish the sentence. Of course, I dislike to suggest the possibility that the President might change his mind on this question, but wise men have done so; wise men do sometimes change their minds, and who knows but that even President Wilson might with respect to this matter, after he knows the sentiment, the wishes, the will, and the desires of the American people, be willing to change his mind and let three-fourths of the Congress of both Houses have their way on this question?

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President—

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield now to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I want to assure the Senator that the suggestions which I made were not prompted by any feeling of timidity or alarm, or even of expediency. The thought I had in mind was this: We are approaching the end of the session, and we have an enormous amount of unfinished business. I think that it is unwise to spend our time on measures, however important, which, after we have passed them, may not receive the Executive approval. I think the Senator will concede that I am as liable to act upon these matters with a reasonable degree of independence, and in a spirit entirely free from a fear of the consequences—

Mr. HARDWICK. I hope the Senator will not misunderstand me. My remarks, although some of them were in the nature of a reply to the Senator's question, were in nowise personal to the Senator. I have the very highest regard for him—

Mr. THOMAS. Oh, I understand that.

Mr. HARDWICK. And for his position, and for his independence, mentally and politically.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President—

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield first to the Senator from Ohio, if the Senator from New Hampshire will pardon me.

Mr. HARDING. I have been so much diverted and enlightened, as well, by the remarks of the Senator from Georgia that I am very reluctant to cast even a pebble into the troubled waters on that side of the aisle. But since we are having a discussion of senatorial consideration for the Executive in connection with the legislative program, I want to ask the Senator from Georgia if it would not be wise to invite the Executive into the majority caucus. I have been reading in the newspapers not a little lately, Mr. President, about the Executive determination that Congress shall sit until certain measures are enacted. In view of the different functions of the legislative and executive branches of the Government, I am curious for some enlightenment on this Executive order that Congress must accept its orders from the White House.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, answering the very interesting suggestion of the Senator from Ohio—if my friend from New Hampshire will pardon me just a moment—I want to say this; and I am going to speak with absolute candor and frankness about this thing, though it is a subject that is right hard to discuss in that spirit.

Under our American system the President of the United States is not only the Chief Executive of the Nation, but also, and sometimes I think unfortunately, he is the recognized leader of a great political party. Therefore, whether he belongs to your political party or to mine for the time being, it is not beyond the limits of propriety, as these things go and as our system has developed, that the President should make suggestions of a political nature to members of his own party. Of course, I do not think that they should ever take the form of commands; and I should feel very much hurt, indeed, if I believed that in the case which the Senator has in mind the President of the United States had undertaken to lay anything like a command upon this branch of Congress or upon the Congress as a whole.

We have read a great deal in the newspapers about this. The Senator knows how inaccurate and how unreliable most of it is. I take it, to be fair to the President of the United States—and I know the Senator from Ohio wants to do that—that he has made no commands or demands about this business; that he has merely expressed his opinion, his desires, and his wishes under the circumstances. That is as far as he could with propriety go; and I venture the assertion, without any personal knowledge of the facts, that he has not gone one inch farther in this matter, although in this particular matter I think he made a very great mistake in going even that far.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Georgia allow me to contribute some slight reply, in addition to his own, to the query or suggestion of the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. HARDWICK. Just a moment. I beg the pardon of the Senator from New Hampshire. I promised to yield to him.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will wait.

Mr. HARDWICK. I hope the Senator will not think I was rude to him.

Mr. GALLINGER. No; the Senator is always courteous.

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire right now.

Mr. GALLINGER. I rose to propound a question to my good friend the Senator from Colorado. The Senator from Colorado calls attention to the large amount of work that is ahead of us between now and the time of adjournment. I know that there is a large amount of work ahead of us; and I was going to ask the Senator from Colorado if he does not think it would be a good plan to drop the shipping bill and take up the immigration bill instead?

Mr. THOMAS. I do not.

Mr. GALLINGER. The shipping bill will of necessity take a good while. The immigration bill, I think, we could pass in a very short time.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, if anything would determine me to insist upon considering the shipping bill at this session, it is the recent publication of a blacklist of American merchants and American business institutions by the British Government. And I assert that if the shipping bill had not been defeated by the Republican filibuster of last session, we would have to-day a merchant fleet sailing upon the ocean that would make that blacklist absolutely ineffective.

Mr. GALLINGER. We would have one ship, would we? That is all; and we would have had to buy that from some foreign country. Now, I just want to ask one other question. How would it do for the Senator's administration to take up that blacklist matter and call Great Britain to account?

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator need not be alarmed. The administration is active. It has taken the first step; and I want to assure the Senator that while he may not be entirely satisfied—we can not expect our opponents to be satisfied with everything we do—the subject is in good hands, and will be dealt with with vigor and determination.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the President is going to do that, we do not need the shipping bill.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President—

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield now to my friend from Illinois.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, with the permission of the Senator from Georgia, I should like to revive to the memory of the eminent Senator from Ohio that if there is any disposition in any President to direct Congress that it shall remain in session until certain things shall be done it was in pursuit of the precedent established by the administration of Roosevelt and Fairbanks, when the direction came from the President to the Vice President, who was then the Presiding Officer of the Senate, that two bills should be passed—one known as the Panama bill and the other a railroad bill for amending the interstate commerce act and giving certain privileges for the chastisement of certain railroads unfriendly to the then President—and the Vice President, then the Presiding Officer of the Senate, carried out the direction, and held this body in such slavish obedience until they did pass, notwithstanding the party of the President was opposed to them, that it not only succeeded, but the convention over which the eminent Senator from Ohio lately presided rewarded that former Vice President by giving him a renomination.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, if the Senator is through, I hope that no such sorry precedent as that will ever be followed by a Democratic President. If any Republican President was ever guilty of any such conduct as that—and I am assuming it is true, as the Senator asserts it—I hope that no Democratic President ever will do such a thing. My own defense of the President of our country and the leader of our party is that he has not been guilty of such conduct. It is inconceivable to me that the President should undertake to lay his commands upon Congress or upon Members of it. I can not and do not believe that he would adopt such a course.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President—

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield to the Senator from California.

Mr. WORKS. The Senator has referred to the very unfortunate fact that the President of the United States has come to be regarded also as the leader of the political party to which he belongs.

Mr. HARDWICK. I think it is an unfortunate fact.

Mr. WORKS. I want to ask the Senator whether he understood that these suggestions about bringing on certain legislation were made in the capacity of President of the United States or in the capacity of leader of the Democratic Party?

Mr. HARDWICK. I will answer the Senator very frankly. My understanding—I did not talk to the President about this last matter—but my understanding, in a way, is that the suggestion was made by the President as the party leader and advised in a party way.

Mr. WORKS. Would not the Senator regard it as an impropriety for the President to urge any action on the part of the Senate as President of the United States?

Mr. HARDWICK. Except in a message to Congress in the way pointed out by the Constitution.

Mr. WORKS. I agree with the Senator very heartily in that statement.

Mr. HARDWICK. But the Senator from California and other Senators on that side, and Senators on this side as well, must readily concede the truth of what I have said. Under our American system, as it has grown up and developed, whether it be fortunate or unfortunate—and I think it is unfortunate—the President of the United States, in all cases, whether he belongs to one party or the other, is a great party leader, and that sometimes gets him in embarrassing positions, I admit.

Mr. WORKS. It is not a political question. It has existed on both sides.

Mr. HARDWICK. Undoubtedly.

Mr. WORKS. But I think that does not make it any the less unfortunate.

Mr. HARDWICK. Or any the less undesirable. I agree with the Senator.

Now, Mr. President, I want to let the consideration of the pending bill be resumed, so I am going to quit in just one more minute; but I want to say this in defense of the President of the United States; I have already stated that his position as a party leader sometimes forces him into positions of this kind. Sometimes his activities are purposely exaggerated by people who have a definite purpose in doing so, either by the friends of a bill who are trying to put it through, or by the opponents of a bill who are trying to defeat it, and who claim presidential support in the one case or presidential aid in the other. But, Mr. President, the point I am making, and the plea I am making, is for congressional independence, for congressional assertion—for the Congress of the United States to stand for what it knows the American people want, and to stand for it now.

Why delay? Why halt? Do your people want to halt? Do mine want to halt? I tell you "no," as far as mine are concerned. I believe I can say "no" as far almost any one of your constituencies is concerned. I believe that if there is any one proposition upon which a vast majority of the American people concur it is this great immigration question. I believe that recent events showing the undesirability of some elements of our foreign population under some circumstances and conditions have strengthened the determination generally throughout this Republic to proceed to enact such laws as will keep out the more undesirable immigrants from foreign shores, who bring over all sorts of theories and ideas about government to corrupt and lower the standard of our own body politic.

We know our constituents want that legislation, and want it now. I believe, as far as I am concerned, and I do not hesitate to express the belief, that two-thirds of both Houses of Congress stand ready now to pass that legislation over the veto of any President, Democratic or Republican. Besides, I do not think we ought to be certain that the measure is going to be vetoed if it is sent to the President again, for the reason I suggested just now.

Besides that, Mr. President—I do not want to take time to answer the suggestion of the Senator at any length—it is true that for the present there are not as many immigrants coming into this country as formerly; but I will say to the Senator from Illinois that my information is that the quality of the immigrants we are getting now is fully as bad as it ever was, if not worse than it ever has been. I say to the Senator from Illinois that now, when there is no pressure from foreign Governments to let their people in here, when there is no demand on us to keep an open door from the people of these different nations with whom we are at peace and with whom we have treaties of amity and friendship—now, when they want to join with us to keep their own people at home, is the accepted time to enact restrictive legislation of this character, because we will have the aid of all the Governments of the earth if the Senator is right; and now we can readjust our laws, without giving offense to anyone, in such a way as to establish the conditions that we want to establish in this country, that your constituents and mine, Senators, are demanding at your hands and at mine.

The responsibility is on us and not on the President of the United States. We are legislators, and not the President of the United States. His legislative functions as President of the United States begin when we send the bill to him and not sooner.

It is up to us, primarily, as to what legislation we will or will not pass; and I urge you, Senators, before this session shall adjourn, to send to the President of the United States the restricted immigration bill, commonly called the Burnett bill. If we will do that, and if it should be vetoed, I believe its passage by a two-thirds majority is certain in both Houses of Congress.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, before the Senator takes his seat I should just like to ask him a question.

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. In the Senator's opinion, which is the more pressing need from the standpoint of Congress—the enactment of the immigration bill, which has to be dealt with from a national standpoint, or the enactment of the child-labor bill, where 46 States are already meeting, at least in part, the requirements?

Mr. HARDWICK. There can be no doubt as to the answer to that question, from my point of view at least. I regard the immigration bill as one of the most important and desirable before this country. Before long I hope to be able to demonstrate to the Senate that the so-called Federal child labor bill is not only the most undemocratic but the most un-American measure that ever was forced upon the attention of a great Congress, utterly destructive of American standards and of American ideals, utterly ignoring fundamental American principles of every kind that were dear to our fathers, and that are still important if the American system is to be preserved to the people of this Republic.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I move that the Senate adjourn until 10 o'clock on Monday morning.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, July 31, 1916, at 10 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, July 29, 1916.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon, and was called to order by the Clerk, Hon. South Trimble, who read the following communication:

THE SPEAKER'S ROOMS,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., July 26, 1916.

Hon. SOUTH TRIMBLE,
Clerk of the House:

I hereby designate Hon. CHARLES M. STEDMAN, a Representative from North Carolina, to preside in the House on Saturday, July 29.
CHAMP CLARK.

Mr. STEDMAN took the chair as Speaker pro tempore amid applause.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou great Spirit, infinite in wisdom, power, and love, our heavenly Father, help us to worship Thee in spirit and in truth by a faithful, conscientious, and efficient service in all the affairs of life, that we may leave in our wake a record worthy of the talents Thou hast bestowed upon us, be they few or many. The special order of the day proves the worth of a noble life, a man of large parts, true to his convictions, faithful as a public servant, still lives in the hearts of his people. His statue placed in this Capitol will speak to coming generations and inspire men to go and do likewise. So may we live and pass on to the glory and honor of Thy holy name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday, July 27, was read and approved.

THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I send to the desk the resolution, and I move its adoption.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 329.

Resolved, That the designation and appointment by the Speaker of Hon. CHARLES M. STEDMAN, a Representative from the State of North Carolina, as Speaker pro tempore for this day during the temporary absence of the Speaker, be, and the same is hereby, approved, and the said CHARLES M. STEDMAN is hereby empowered to sign as Speaker pro tempore during this day enrolled bills and joint resolutions and appoint conferees.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the Senate as notice of the action of the House.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the President as notice of the action of the House.

The resolution was agreed to.

BRIDGE ACROSS MAHONING RIVER, OHIO.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, on Thursday last the House passed the bill H. R. 16912, granting the consent of Congress to the county commissioners of Trumbull County, Ohio, to construct a bridge across the Mahoning River in the State of Ohio. The bill was amended but the title was not amended, and I ask unanimous consent that the title be amended by striking out the words "the county commissioners of."

Mr. ADAMSON. I thought that was done, but it was overlooked.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the title of the bill referred to may be amended by striking out the words "the county commissioners of." Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Sharkey, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had approved and signed bills and joint resolution of the following titles:

On July 26, 1916:

H. R. 6057. An act to amend section 14 of the reclamation extension act approved August 13, 1914;

H. R. 11261. An act for the relief of Mary S. Corbin; and

H. R. 11262. An act for the relief of Mrs. C. D. Corbin.

On July 27, 1916:

H. R. 12193. An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

On July 28, 1916:

H. J. Res. 218. Joint resolution authorizing the acceptance of the gift of the Berkshire Trout Hatchery, Berkshire County, Mass.; and

H. R. 10484. An act making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes.

PANAMA CANAL ZONE.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing an opinion recently rendered by the Hon. Henry D. Clayton, judge of the United States court of the State of Alabama, which settled certain questions in the Canal Zone.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing an opinion by the United States judge, Henry D. Clayton. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the Army appropriation bill (H. R. 16460), disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the Army appropriation bill, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object—

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I object to the unanimous consent.

Mr. HAY. I will ask the gentleman from Illinois what is the purpose of his objection, if he simply wants delay?

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. My purpose is delay. I want to give Members an opportunity to think and see whether they can not serve the people of the country by helping them to exercise an influence to stop this increase in the Army bill.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. Speaker, I raise the point of order that the objection comes too late.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Oh, no, Mr. Speaker, I was on my feet.

MILITARY ACADEMY BILL.

Mr. HAY. I ask unanimous consent, then, Mr. Speaker, to take from the Speaker's table the Military Academy bill (H. R. 16699), disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the Military Academy bill, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. HAY, Mr. DENT, and Mr. MCKENZIE.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, may I get the attention of the House for a moment to ask my colleague a question? Of course, the Army appropriation bill will eventually go to conference. Is it the determined purpose of my colleague that this bill shall be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back to the House, and then to object to sending the bill to conference, there having been delay enough to know what the Senate amendments are? In other words, what I am trying to get at—

Mr. GARNER. Whether it will be necessary to have a quorum.

Mr. MANN (continuing). Is whether we will be under obligation at this time to send out word to Members who have gone home, or who are away on private or public business, that they must return in order to get this bill into conference.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I am not prepared to state just now what course I shall pursue. I will say that it is my purpose now to attract the attention, if I can, of the people of the country to what I believe is the most vicious proposition that has ever been considered in the House in the way of unnecessary appropriation, one that will create militarism and practically put the country into a military camp. If I can be of service in that way, I shall be gratified. I will say to the gentleman that it is not my purpose or intention to put any Member of the House to any inconvenience, but I hope gentlemen will understand that this is not due to any personal feeling on my part against any Member of the House.

Mr. MANN. I understand the gentleman's position.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I feel keenly that this is a very vicious proposition. The people and the leaders of this great legislative body, the greatest in the world, seem to have their faculties and activities in opposition to this vicious legislation chloroformed.

Mr. MANN. My colleague will realize this as quickly as anybody else in the House. The suggestion is to disagree to the Senate amendments. That is what the House will do eventually, and that is what my colleague wants to do eventually. There is no escape from the proposition practically that the Army appropriation bill, in some shape, will become a law, and that before it becomes a law it will go to conference. If the proposition should be to agree to the Senate amendments in the House, then there would be a very strong point in objecting to it; but, after all, in the end we shall disagree to the Senate amendments and send the bill to conference. I am only speaking in behalf of Members of the House. There are a large number of us here, but the House is not very actively engaged just at present, and many Members have been told that they might properly leave Washington. I have said that to Members upon this side of the House, and the same thing has been said to Members upon the Democratic side of the House. To call these gentlemen back to accomplish a thing which is bound to be accomplished anyway would be to impose a great inconvenience upon many Members. I have no objection myself to the bill going over and being referred to the committee and reported back, but the question is whether we shall have to send out word to everybody to come back here. Some one may move to concur in the Senate amendments if it comes before the House, and then we will want the Members here. It seems to me that my colleague has accomplished his purpose already, which is to attract the attention of the country to the proposition and to his position.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAY. Yes.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, permit me to suggest to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN] that if he at this time permits this bill to be sent to conference disagreeing to the Senate amendments, which are all increases, he will prevent a motion to concur being considered, for the reason that we have not a quorum present; but if he forces the presence of a quorum here, when the motion to concur may be made, it may be carried, and in that event is he not defeating the very object that he had in view, which is to prevent the large increases which have been placed upon the bill by the Senate? Has the gentleman considered that phase of the question?

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I am not stating that because of my action it will be necessary to call members back here to get a quorum. I have not made any statement to justify that opinion at this time. I simply object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

TROOPS OF NATIONAL GUARD IN UNITED STATES SERVICE.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I present herewith a privileged report from the Committee on Military Affairs, and ask for its adoption.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Virginia presents a privileged resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 323 (H. Rept. 1060).

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed, if not incompatible with the public interest, to inform the House of Representatives—

First. How many troops of the National Guard are now in the service of the United States in compliance with the President's order of June 18, 1916?

Second. What is the prescribed war strength for the organizations called into the service of the United States by the above order?

Third. Have any organizations been accepted into the service of the United States whose strength fell short of the minimum prescribed peace strength? If so, was the minimum requirement waived by the President?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER], pending the consideration of the resolution, may address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Massachusetts may address the House for 15 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to that. I control the time, and yield the gentleman 15 minutes.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Speaker, I introduced this resolution which we are now considering, but it is not upon the subject of this resolution that I desire to speak. I have some observations to offer on the Army appropriation bill as it came from the Senate. Let me preface my remarks by saying that the Senate has done a very sensible thing in yielding to the House in the matter of the appropriation for the dependent families of National Guardsmen in the service of the United States. We have no business to force a National Guardsman with a dependent family to make his choice between asking for his discharge and leaving his family unprovided for. I am also glad that the Senate has provided for the families of Regulars called to Mexico or to the border. It will not cost very much. There are very few Regulars who have families, and most of those families are not dependent. I think, however, that the Regular soldier will feel better satisfied if he feels that his family will get the same treatment as the family of the National Guardsman.

The day before yesterday I was exceedingly glad to see the Navy appropriation bill go to conference. In the form in which the Navy bill passed the Senate, it was a thoroughly good bill and will mark the beginning of a real Navy. That the bill is in such splendid shape is in my opinion due more to Senator SWANSON and Senator LODGE than to any one else. I wish I could say that this Army appropriation bill which we are now considering is good. I wish that I could even say that it is not bad; but the fact is, Mr. Speaker, this bill is bad because it is utterly inadequate, and any one who really believes in preparedness must know that it is utterly inadequate. The fact alone that the RECORD does not show a single antipreparedness Senator voting against the bill is an exceedingly significant circumstance. I do not think the fault lies with Senator CHAMBERLAIN. The fault lies fundamentally with the recent Hay Army reorganization law, and with the War Department, which refuses to grasp its nettle in the matter of field artillery and field-artillery ammunition. The actual facts which can not be disputed are these: The country has been cockered up into the belief that the Regular Army has been increased by the Hay Act to 175,000 enlisted men of the line, peace strength. Theoretically, that will be the case in the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and not before. This Army appropriation bill, which we have before us, permits us to pay 105,000, and no more, enlisted men of the line of the Regular Army during the next year.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARDNER. Certainly.

Mr. TOWNER. I received word yesterday from The Adjutant General's Office that the net increase in the Regular Army under the act passed some months ago up to the present time was 3,700 men. How long does the gentleman think it will be before we get this 175,000 men in the Regular Army?

Mr. GARDNER. It will be a very long time, and there will have to be a total reorganization of the Army before this can be done.

Mr. TOWNER. May I ask the gentleman another question?

Mr. GARDNER. Certainly.

Mr. TOWNER. What is the gentleman's idea about what will be necessary to get the Regular Army up to that quota?

Mr. GARDNER. That involves a very long discussion. I published that in the RECORD at one time and I should be very glad to go into it. There are four principal things which I believe ought to be done before we can get our organization into proper shape, and I shall try and remember to send the gentleman a copy of my remarks upon the subject, but I want to read now an extract from a letter from the Secretary of War to Hon. GEORGE W. LOFT, a Democratic Member of this House from the State of New York, written on July 7, 1916:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, July 7, 1916.

Hon. GEORGE W. LOFT,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

SIR:

The Hay-Chamberlain Act authorizes about 105,000 enlisted men for the line of the Regular Army during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917; this is also the number provided for in the pending Army appropriation bill.

Very respectfully,

NEWTON D. BAKER,
Secretary of War.

As to the appropriations in this bill for field artillery and field-artillery ammunition, we are simply nibbling at the problem instead of digging our teeth into it. The board of expert Army officers known as the Treat Board has just made its report to the War Department. The report tells us what we ought to accumulate in the way of field artillery and field-artillery ammunition in order to have enough on hand to take care of us if war with a first-class power should break out. The Treat Board's figures show that we must expend $441,000,000 for field artillery and field-artillery ammunition. This pending bill, together with a bill passed earlier in the session, allows us to expend $38,000,000 for that purpose. At that rate of appropriation it will be between 11 and 12 years before we shall have enough field artillery and field-artillery ammunition on hand to give us an adequate supply for the early months of a war. The War Department absolutely refuses squarely to face the greatest lesson taught by this war, to wit, the necessity of field guns, big and small, quantities of artillery ammunition, and plenty of machine guns. The joke of it is that the Army appropriation bill this year carries just seven times as much for field artillery and field-artillery ammunition as was carried by the Army appropriation bill last year, and yet last year we had pretty much the same information available as we have now. Twenty months have elapsed since Maj. Gen. WOTHERSPOON, Chief of Staff, United States Army, in his annual report told Congress pretty much the same story as the Treat Board has told us this year. Our present situation with regard to field-artillery ammunition if it were not pathetic would be ludicrous. We have on hand an accumulation of a little less than 550,000 rounds. Here is a letter from Gen. Crozier setting forth the facts:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ORDNANCE,
Washington, July 5, 1916.

Hon. A. P. GARDNER,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. GARDNER: In reply to your letter of July 1, 1916 (O. O. file 000.71/574), I may state that there are actually completed and in the possession of the United States 698 field guns and carriages of modern types and 545,300 rounds of ammunition therefor. This does not include the 2.95-inch mountain guns, with which part of the service is equipped, and for which there is a reasonable supply of ammunition on hand.

Very truly, yours,

WILLIAM CROZIER,
Brigadier General, Chief of Ordnance.

The newspapers tell us that in preparing for the Somme advance the British Army alone expended 1,000,000 rounds of artillery ammunition per day. In other words, in a single day, on a single sector of a single front, a single one of the European belligerents used up nearly twice as much field-artillery ammunition as our entire national supply.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I call for a vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the resolution offered by the gentleman from Virginia.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

FEDERAL FARM-LOAN ACT.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 330.

Resolved, That there be printed 50,000 copies of public law No. 158, known as the Federal farm-loan act, of which 10,000 shall be placed in the House document room and 40,000 in the folding room.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the resolution? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

WAR-RISK INSURANCE BUREAU.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 13224) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department," approved September 2, 1914.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I have no objection to the consideration of the bill or any objection to the bill. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] has been giving considerable attention to this matter and offered objection when this bill was up. He informed me the other day that he was willing for the passage of the bill if it could be amended so as to extend the time of the bureau one year instead of two years as proposed. Is that satisfactory to the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, where it states in the bill that these powers of the war-risk insurance bureau shall be extended four years from the date of its passage, I suggest an amendment in line 7, by striking out "four" and inserting "three." That will be one year from September 2.

Mr. MANN. That meets with the suggestions of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MANN. Let the bill be reported.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 13224) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department," approved September 2, 1914.

Be it enacted, etc., That section 9 of an act establishing a Bureau of War Risk Insurance, approved September 2, 1914, be, and it is hereby, amended so as to require the suspension of the operations of the act within four years from the date said act was approved.

Sec. 2. That all moneys received from premiums and from salvage shall be covered into the Treasury to the credit of the appropriation made for the payment of losses and be available for the purposes thereof.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend by striking out the word "four" and inserting the word "three" in lieu thereof, in page 1, line 7.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 7, strike out the word "four" and insert in lieu thereof the word "three."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. ALEXANDER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

STATISTICS OF COTTON SEED AND COTTONSEED PRODUCTS.

Mr. ASWELL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 4767) authorizing the Director of the Census to collect and publish statistics of cotton seed and cottonseed products, and I move the adoption of the report.

Mr. MANN. Has the conference report been reported?

Mr. ASWELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

Mr. MANN. The conference report is short enough. Let it be read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the report.

The Clerk read as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 1002).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4767) entitled "An act authorizing the Director of the Census to collect and publish statistics of cotton seed and cottonseed products," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 6.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the title of said bill, and agree to the same.

H. W. SUMNERS, Chairman,

J. B. ASWELL,

GEO. R. SMITH,

Managers on the part of the House.

WM. E. CHILTON,

MORRIS SHEPPARD,

R. M. LA FOLLETTE,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4767) entitled "An act authorizing the Director of the Census to collect and publish statistics of cotton seed and cottonseed products," submit the following statement in explanation of the report agreed upon:

Amendments 1 and 2 provide for taking into account, along with crude cottonseed oil, refined cottonseed oil held by refiners, brokers, exporters, and warehousemen. Your committee recommends their adoption.

Amendments 3 and 4 are intended to render the provisions of section 3 of the bill applicable to the owners, officers, or agents of refineries. Their adoption is also recommended.

Amendment 5 is as follows:

SEC. 4. That the Director of the Census be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to collect and publish statistics of raw and prepared cotton and lint, cotton waste, and hull fiber consumed in the manufacture of guncotton and explosives of all kinds, and of absorbent and medicated cotton, during the calendar year 1915, and quarterly thereafter, and the quantity held in such establishments at the end of each quarter. The statistics herein provided for are in addition to those now collected in compliance with the act of Congress approved July 22, 1912, the provisions of that act being made applicable to and governing the collection and publication of the data.

Your committee believes that the section thus added will, if carried into the law, serve a useful and practical purpose, and its adoption is therefore recommended.

Amendment 6 was receded from by the Senate.

H. W. SUMNERS,

J. B. ASWELL,

GEO. R. SMITH,

Managers on the part of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. ASWELL, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 5985. An act authorizing the Commissioner of Navigation to cause the steamship Republic to be enrolled and licensed as a vessel of the United States;

S. 5014. An act to amend section 1 of the act of August 9, 1912, providing for patents on reclamation entries, and for other purposes;

S. 1740. An act to repeal an act entitled "An act granting to the city of Twin Falls, Idaho, certain lands for reservoir purposes," approved June 7, 1912, and to revoke the grant made thereby;

S. 5496. An act to amend section 5 of an act entitled "An act to authorize the drainage of certain lands in the State of Minnesota," approved May 20, 1908;

S. 1061. An act to allow additional entries under the enlarged homestead act;

S. 2383. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to amend sections 2291 and 2297 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to homesteads";

S. 6116. An act providing for the taxation of the lands of the Winnebago Indians and the Omaha Indians in the State of Nebraska;

S. 21. An act to authorize aids to navigation and other works in the Lighthouse Service, and for other purposes;

S. 5899. An act to punish persons who make false representations to settlers and others pertaining to the public lands of the United States;

S. 5427. An act referring certain claims against the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations of Indians to the Court of Claims;

S. 5992. An act authorizing the cutting of timber for mining purposes by corporations organized in one State and conducting mining operations in another;

S. 5430. An act for the relief of the Southern States Lumber Co.;

S. 5612. An act providing additional time for the payment of purchase money under homestead entries of lands within the former Fort Peck Indian Reservation, Mont.;

S. 6016. An act for the relief of the Pillager Bands of Chippewa Indians of Minnesota, and for other purposes;

S. 789. An act providing for an additional judge for the district of Montana;

S. 5912. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to acquire certain Indian lands necessary for reservoir purposes in connection with the Blackfeet Indian reclamation projects.

S. 1361. An act to correct the military record of Thomas Smart; and

S. 1691. An act for the relief of Edward S. Farrow.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 11156. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to cause to be appraised and to sell the Boise & Arrow-rock Railroad, and for other purposes;

H. R. 10668. An act to repeal section 4 of the act of Congress approved June 11, 1906, known as the forest homestead act, and for other purposes;

H. R. 2536. An act for the relief of Joseph A. Buckholdt;

H. R. 348. An act to establish the Lassen Volcanic National Park in the Sierra Nevada Mountains in the State of California, and for other purposes;

H. R. 13298. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to make payments to certain Indians of the Rosebud Sioux Reservation, in the State of South Dakota, who were enrolled and allotted under decisions of the United States district and circuit courts for the district of South Dakota; and

H. R. 11958. An act to provide for the sale of certain Indian lands in Oklahoma, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendment bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 12208. An act adding certain lands to the Teton National Forest, Wyo.; and

H. R. 15957. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War and to widows of such soldiers and sailors.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendment bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 15955. An act extending certain privileges of canal employees to other officials on the Canal Zone and authorizing the President to make rules and regulations affecting health, sanitation, quarantine, taxation, public roads, self-propelled vehicles, and police powers on the Canal Zone, and for other purposes, including provision as to certain fees, money orders, and interest deposits.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill of the following title:

H. R. 17172. An act further extending appropriations for the necessary operations of the Government and of the District of Columbia under certain contingencies.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2500) authorizing the adjustment of rights of settlers on a part of the Navajo Indian Reservation in the State of Arizona.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4767) authorizing the Director of the Census to collect and publish statistics of cotton seed and cottonseed products, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 16460. An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917; and

H. R. 16699. An act making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 16185. An act to give the consent of the Congress to the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River near and above the city of New Orleans, La., and for other purposes; and

H. R. 16068. An act to authorize the construction, maintenance, and operation of a bridge across the Black River at or near Bennetts Ferry, Ark.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Senate accepts the invitation of the House of Representatives to attend the exercises at the unveiling of the pediment on the east front of the House wing of the Capitol at 10.30 o'clock a. m., Wednesday, August 2, 1916.

The message also announced that the President had approved and signed joint resolution and bills of the following titles:

On July 21, 1916:

S. J. Res. 150. Joint resolution to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to accept from the city of Pittsburgh certain lands in exchange for other lands of equal area.

On July 26, 1916:

S. 35. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to issue patent for certain lands to the town of Myton, Utah;

S. 36. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to issue patents for certain lands to the town of Duchesne, Utah; and

S. 2845. An act authorizing the sale of the marine-hospital reservation in Cleveland, Ohio.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

S. 5912. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to acquire certain Indian lands necessary for reservoir purposes in connection with the Blackfeet Indian reclamation projects; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

S. 1361. An act to correct the military record of Thomas Smart; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 1691. An act for the relief of Edward S. Farrow; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 5985. An act authorizing the Commissioner of Navigation to cause the steamship Republic to be enrolled and licensed as a vessel of the United States; to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

S. 5014. An act to amend section 1 of the act of August 9, 1912, providing for patents on reclamation entries, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

S. 1740. An act to repeal an act entitled "An act granting to the city of Twin Falls, Idaho, certain lands for reservoir purposes," approved June 7, 1912, and to revoke the grant made thereby; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

S. 5496. An act to amend section 5 of an act entitled "An act to authorize the drainage of certain lands in the State of Minnesota," approved May 20, 1908; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

S. 1061. An act to allow additional entries under the enlarged homestead act; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

S. 2383. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to amend sections 2291 and 2297 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to homesteads"; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

S. 6116. An act providing for the taxation of the lands of the Winnebago Indians and the Omaha Indians in the State of Nebraska; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

S. 21. An act to authorize aids to navigation and other works in the Lighthouse Service, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

S. 5992. An act authorizing the cutting of timber for mining purposes by corporations organized in one State and conducting mining operations in another; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

S. 5439. An act for the relief of the Southern States Lumber Co.; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 5612. An act providing additional time for the payment of purchase money under homestead entries of lands within the former Fort Peck Indian Reservation, Mont.; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

S. 6016. An act for the relief of the Pillager Bands of Chippewa Indians of Minnesota, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 789. An act providing for an additional judge for the district of Montana; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

PENSIONS.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take the omnibus pension bill (H. R. 15957) from the Speaker's table, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Colorado asks unanimous consent to take the bill H. R. 15957 from the Speaker's table, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

Mr. MANN. Let the bill be reported by title.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 15957) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The SPEAKER pro tempore named the following conferees: Mr. KEATING, Mr. VINSON, and Mr. SELLS.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on next Wednesday, after the special orders that have already been made, I may address the House for one hour.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that on Wednesday next, after the special order is disposed of, he be allowed to address the House for one hour. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I have no objection to the gentleman addressing the House. A number of gentlemen on this side want opportunity to address the House at an early date, but it is quite possible that on Wednesday the House may want to consider some bills on the Wednesday Calendar from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Mr. BORLAND. I understand that.

Mr. MANN. If it is done, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON] desires to proceed.

Mr. BORLAND. I do not want to interfere with anything that comes up before the House that the House desires to consider in the ordinary course of its business.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

TARIFF ON WOOL AND SUGAR.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for one minute and extend my remarks in the RECORD on the tariff on wool and sugar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent to address the House for one minute and extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman from Wyoming is recognized for one minute.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, the tariff act of October 3, 1913, known as the Underwood bill, reduced the duty on sugar 25 per cent and provided that on and after the 1st day of May, 1916, sugar should be admitted free of duty. The act of April 27, 1916, repealed these provisions of the Underwood bill and restored the rates of duty carried in the Payne tariff law. No reduction in the price of sugar resulted from this reduction of duty. On the contrary, the price gradually but steadily advanced. The result to the American sugar industry was, however, disastrous.

The Louisiana and Texas planters believed that they could not carry on their cane-sugar production without a loss, even with the 25 per cent reduction in tariff, if it brought about, as was certainly intended and expected by those who favored it, a corresponding reduction in the price of sugar. The sugar-beet growers and beet-sugar producers of the West were hopeful that they might be able to weather a 25 per cent reduction, but both they and the cane-sugar producers realized that when sugar went to the free list, if the price of sugar went down correspondingly, as the advocates of free sugar prophesied it would, they would be unable to conduct their business without a heavy loss.

The result of all this was enormous loss in the shutting down and dismantling of sugar mills and factories, both in the cane and beet sugar regions, a great reduction in the acreage devoted to cane and beet raising, and corresponding loss to the farmers and growers.

But the reduction claimed and expected never materialized. The importers promptly absorbed the 25 per cent reduction and added it to their profits. The Treasury lost the revenue and the people paid more for their sugar. Then came the European war, cutting off from the markets of the world the enormous beet-sugar production of Germany and Austria, and to a considerable extent that of Russia, a condition which, together with the control over the markets exercised by the refining interests, boosted sugar over 50 per cent in price almost immediately and finally sent it to and maintained it at a price almost double that of the period before the war. In the meantime the Federal Treasury was losing the difference between the old and new tariff rates, and these differences amounted in the period from March 1, 1914, to the end of the fiscal year 1916 to $46,284,603, and for the fiscal periods in question, according to the Bureau of Domestic and Foreign Commerce of the Department of Commerce, were as follows:

Sugar imported under new law and approximate difference in duty between old and new rates.

	Pounds	Value.	Approximate difference between duty under old and new rates.
Sugar, Mar. 1 to June 30, 1914.....	2,566,121,216	$25,318,021	$9,258,485
Year ending June 30, 1915.....	4,931,466,032	155,204,278	17,185,144
Year ending June 30, 1916.....	5,786,446,863	285,451,870	19,840,974
Total.....			46,284,603

Such has been the result of Democratic tariff blundering as affecting a single article of commerce. Tremendous loss of revenue when sorely needed, at no gain to the people in lower prices. It is true the Democratic Party is not responsible for the high price of sugar during the war period, but the fact that sugar did not decrease in price between the 1st day of March, when the duty was reduced, and the following August, when war was declared, but actually advanced, is conclusive proof that the Democratic Party erred in its contention that high duties necessarily maintained high prices for sugar and that a reduction in price would follow a reduction in the tariff rate.

The fact is, as the Republicans have always contended, that with free sugar or a low tariff rate the importers' trust could afford to reduce the price of sugar so low as to put the domestic grower out of business and would undoubtedly reduce the prices temporarily for that purpose and then raise them again immediately the purpose was accomplished. The domestic industry would not dare to take advantage of such a raise to again embark in the business, knowing that the importer had it in his power by a reduction in the price to compel them to sell at a loss.

A duty on sugar has made possible the building up of a great American industry, the effect of which has been to take from the importers' trust the power to manipulate the market. The tariff has therefore served the double purpose of bringing large revenues to the Federal Government and building up a domestic industry whose increasing product tends constantly to reduce the price below what it would be under free-trade manipulation by the importers. Furthermore, the industry thus built up has been of great and growing value to the farmers; in fact, to all the people of the sections where sugar is produced.

WOOL.

As I said at the beginning of my remarks, the tariff act of October 3, 1913, known as the Underwood bill, placed wool on the free list, beginning December 1, 1913. Wool was placed on the free list on the claim that the tariff on wool was a great burden on the consumers of the country, the users and wearers of woolen goods, and that under free wool the people would be able to obtain articles composed wholly or in part of wool at a much lower figure. The failure of the repeal of the tariff on wool to accomplish any such purpose is known and patent to all who purchase or use woolen goods. And this is not only true now, but it was true from December 1, 1913, when wool went on the free list, to August, 1914, when the war in Europe began. The proponents of free trade raked the country over during that period to find examples of reduced costs of woolen goods, without success. As a matter of fact, there was a slight but nevertheless definite and certain general increase in the cost of woolen goods in that period. Since the beginning of the European war wool and woolens have still further advanced, owing to the enormous demand which war creates for woolen goods and products. In the meantime the Public Treasury has a large portion of the time been in an impoverished and depleted condition, and one of the reasons—in fact, the most important single reason for that condition—is the loss of the wool duties. These losses of revenue, as estimated by the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce of the Department of Commerce, amounted for the period from December 1, 1913, to June 30, 1914, to $121,799,124.66, the amount for the various fiscal periods being as follows:

Estimated revenues from wool, applying Payne law rates.
Dec. 1, 1913, to June 30, 1914.....	$28,726,263.92
July 1, 1914, to June 30, 1915.....	31,872,118.66
July 1, 1915, to Mar. 31, 1916.....	44,946,031.74
Apr. 1 to June 30, 1916 (estimated on basis of general imports of wool).....	16,254,710.34
	121,799,124.66

Where shall we go to find more striking illustrations of Democratic tariff blundering and Democratic incompetency in handling the revenues and finances of the country than is to be found in the figures of revenue losses from these two items alone, totaling, as they do, $168,081,727.66.

The House passed a few days ago a revenue measure which it was estimated would yield annually something over $200,000,000 in revenue. The great bulk of that vast sum it is proposed to raise by direct, burdensome, inequitable, and in some cases almost confiscatory levies on the business, the enterprise, and the resources of the country and its citizens. If the duty had been retained on wool and on sugar, more than three-quarters of the sum which it is expected will be raised during the next year through this burdensome and inequitable revenue measure would now be in the Treasury available for current needs, assuming, of course, that the administration had not squandered it in the meantime. Let it not be forgotten that this entire sum of over $168,000,000 would have been obtained from duties on wool and sugar without placing an additional burden of a single penny on any consumer of these articles, for whatever may be claimed as to the effect of tariff duties under other circumstances and conditions in increasing the cost of products to consumers, no one with even superficial knowledge of the facts or the slightest regard for the truth will claim that during this period in which the price has been fixed by foreign demand and supply, the price to the consumer would have been increased one iota by the maintenance of the duty on sugar or on wool. We should have had in the Treasury $168,000,000 contributed wholly by those who seek our markets for these articles. It would have been paid mostly by the foreign producer, though in the case of sugar some part of it would undoubtedly have been taken from the swollen profits of the Sugar Trust.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I further ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of woman suffrage, and to insert an editorial on that subject.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

Mr. Speaker, on December 6, the first day of the present Congress, I introduced House joint resolution No. 2, proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States extending the right of suffrage to women. The resolution was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and there remains unacted upon to this day. The members of organizations devoted to the cause of suffrage, individuals interested in the cause of suffrage, associations of various sorts and kinds organized to promote the public good, have appealed to the members of the Judiciary Committee in person, by letter, and by petition, constantly and continuously, to report the resolution, or a resolution of the same tenor and effect, and yet nothing has been done.

The Democratic members of that committee are in full control. They could report the resolution out at any time. In fact, so nearly unanimous are the Republican members of the committee in favor of the resolution that two or three favorable Democratic votes joined with the Republican votes would have reported the resolution at any time. The Democratic membership, as representing the Democratic Party in the House, is therefore responsible for the failure to give the House an opportunity to pass upon this proposed legislation.

Of course, Democratic Members who may be, or who may claim to be, favorable to woman suffrage will endeavor to absolve their party from responsibility, but they will hardly be successful in so doing. The situation would not be so exasperating from the standpoint of the friends of suffrage if Democratic members of the committee and Democratic Members generally had been more frank and candid in their attitude toward this question. The friends of suffrage have reason to feel that there has been much of backing and filling, of indirection, of lack of candor, and seeming lack of sincerity in the attitude of many on this subject.

But if Members of Congress are open to the charge of not being entirely frank and definite and foursquare in their attitude on this question, what shall we say of the attitude of the President, the leader of the Democratic Party? His shifting and shuffling in the matter has been fairly amazing, and it is no wonder that it has left the friends of suffrage in a position and frame of mind that inclines them to doubt the President's sincerity and fixedness of purpose on any and all questions. I shall avail myself of the opportunity accorded to me by placing in the RECORD as a part of my remarks an editorial from the New York American of yesterday, the 28th, on this subject, which is as follows:

THE PRESIDENT'S EXTRAORDINARY EXCUSES TO THE SUFFRAGISTS.

The President has set himself in opposition to the desires and ambitions of the women enrolled under the banner of equal suffrage.

His opposition is frank enough. The reasons he gives for this opposition are, however, disingenuous.

Mr. Wilson has, of course, the right to be opposed to equal suffrage or to the maintenance of that doctrine as a national issue. But if he wishes his position to inspire respect it should at least show sincerity.

For the President to say that he opposes woman suffrage because his party platform did not declare for it is an obviously insincere statement.

No President ever violated so many party pledges as he, and none has ever manifested such utter disregard for the will of the Democratic masses as expressed in their platform.

Consider his record:

The Democratic platform upon which he was elected promised the free use of the Panama Canal for American ships. This pledge he forced a Democratic Congress to repudiate.

The platform proclaimed the ineligibility of Presidents to a second term. The President elected on that platform began planning for his second term before being inaugurated to his first.

The platform promised a discriminating duty on goods imported in American ships, and this duty when imposed by Congress was revoked by the Executive order of Mr. Wilson.

The platform guaranteed an adequate Navy, but the President, until the opening of his campaign for reelection, opposed suitable naval legislation with such insistence that the sincerity of his present eleventh-hour conversion is questioned by many.

For all President Wilson's present reverence for the sanctity of platforms no Executive has been readier than he to incorporate in his policies matters upon which the platform was either silent or against which a long and unbroken line of party precedents can be cited.

If Mr. Wilson had always held scrupulously to the pledges of the platform of his party, then his excuse to the suffragists would be valid.

If, indeed, he had been governed in the main by platform pledges, his excuse would be intelligible, if not wholly convincing.

But when he has made a specialty of departing from the platform in nearly every particular, it is absurd for Mr. Wilson to excuse his attitude in opposition to woman suffrage on the ground that the party platform has not declared in favor of it.

The second excuse offered for not complying with the request of the suffragists is equally unconvincing. He says that he can not dictate to his party!

This statement should have been followed by Artemus Ward's famous footnote: "N. B.—This is wrote sarkastical."

We can imagine the somewhat sour smiles with which Senators STONE and KERN, Chairmen KITCHIN, HAY, PADGETT, and FLOOD will greet this statement of the man who has been accustomed to call them to the White House and give his orders for Congress to execute.

There never has been a President who has dictated to his party in Congress as much as has Mr. Wilson, and there has never been a Congress which has with equal servility submitted to that dictation as has this Democratic Congress.

The suffragists will perforce have to accept President Wilson's declaration that he opposes equal suffrage. His excuses they may dismiss as mere moonshine.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the subject of woman suffrage. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

FREDERIC C. HOWE.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a letter from the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET], with an inclosure, being a letter written by some gentleman to him, taking exception to some remarks that he made on the floor. It is very short and gives an explanation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] asks unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a letter from the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET], with an inclosure, addressed to him. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Following is the inclosure:

SLACONSET, MASS., July 20, 1916.

HON. W. S. BENNET,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. BENNET: In reading the newspaper account of what you said about me the other day in the House I note some things that are not true. I admit that I am a radical in my political and economic beliefs, and you can term me a "half-baked radical" if you choose, but I do not believe in free love and have never said anything to justify the statement which you quote to the effect that the immigrant could do anything he liked with his body. Inasmuch as these and several other things of the same kind are not true, I feel that they ought to be stricken from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. I am quite willing to stand on the things I believe in and the principles I hold, but it isn't sportsmanlike to quote some chance enemy. I think you will agree with me in that. You and I have different opinions as to how Ellis Island is run and how it ought to be run, and that is a public matter quite proper for contention. But I feel that I have a right in fairness to ask that you strike from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD in editing your speech the gossip and the purely personal matters, for, of course, I have no hearing in Congress. It isn't quite fair to let them stand, is it? I think you will agree with me on that, even though we honestly differ about Ellis Island and the propriety of the Government running its own feeding establishment.

Very respectfully, yours,

FREDERIC C. HOWE.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the Army appropriation bill (H. R. 16460), disagree to all the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the Army appropriation bill, disagree to all the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference. Is there objection?

There was no objection; and the Speaker pro tempore announced as the conferees on the part of the House Mr. HAY, Mr. DENT, and Mr. KAHN.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT—SAMUEL SCHWARTZ (H. DOC. NO. 1308).

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying documents and photographs, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs and ordered to be printed:

To the House of Representatives:

In response to the resolution adopted by the House of Representatives on July 14, 1916, reading as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be, and he is hereby, requested to furnish the House of Representatives with a statement of what he has done to secure the release of Samuel Schwartz, an American citizen alleged to be unjustly deprived of his liberty by or under the authority of the Government of Great Britain since proof was given him that the said Samuel Schwartz did not expatriate himself, but on the contrary resided at 22 West One hundred and twelfth Street, New York City, from 1902 to 1907—

I transmit herewith a report from the Secretary of State and accompanying papers, showing the action taken by the Department of State in the case of Samuel Schwartz, claiming American citizenship and alleged to have been unjustly deprived of his liberty by authority of the Government of Great Britain.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE, July 29, 1916.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. HERNANDEZ, for three weeks, on account of important business.

To Mr. PRICE, for 10 days, on account of important business.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to get a change of reference. On July 25 I introduced a joint resolution (H. J. Res. 280) authorizing the Secretary of War to use such means as he has or may be furnished him for the relief of distress and need among the people of Alabama and Mississippi occasioned by the recent storm, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations. I desire to have it referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. The latter committee has all these resolutions, as I understand, and is considering them now.

Mr. MANN. I think not.

Mr. HARRISON. They had a hearing yesterday upon those resolutions.

Mr. MANN. My impression is that the Committee on Appropriations had several of them. There is a whole raft of those resolutions.

Mr. HARRISON. I think on one day of this week a motion was made by some gentleman—I do not know who it was—to change the reference of these bills to the Committee on Appropriations from the Committee on Military Affairs, but a point of order was raised, and they remained with the Committee on Military Affairs. Yesterday there was a hearing before the Committee on Military Affairs touching this question.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is slightly in error. The Speaker laid before the House the other day a request that these resolutions be transferred from the Committee on Military Affairs to the Committee on Appropriations; that is, two specific resolutions; an effort was made to do that. A large number of these resolutions have been introduced. My impression is that most of them, or at least some of them, are pending before the Committee on Appropriations. I think it likely that that is the only committee that can do anything in reference to those resolutions.

Mr. HARRISON. My only object in getting this transfer from the Committee on Appropriations to the Committee on Military Affairs is that if there is any action taken it will probably come from the Committee on Military Affairs, and the question should be considered as a whole by the same committee. If any relief is granted, it ought to be general, comprehended in one bill.

Mr. MANN. I think it likely that some help ought to be granted. Here is the situation: The Committee on Military Affairs, having some of these resolutions before it, will probably be authorized to report a resolution in lieu of the various resolutions which it has before it covering the same subject. I suppose the Committee on Appropriations can do the same thing. All of these resolutions which have been introduced referred to floods in particular rivers, which were named. Of course we do not expect to pass a dozen such resolutions. I think the gentleman would be better off to have the resolution pending in both committees.

Mr. HARRISON. I prefer that my bill be considered with other similar bills now pending and being considered by the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. MANN. I take it that if the Committee on Military Affairs reports a resolution, it will be a general resolution, covering all these floods in the several States.

Mr. HARRISON. I think that is what ought to be done.

Mr. QUIN. If the gentleman will permit, Mr. Speaker, I want to say to the gentleman that the Committee on Military Affairs is waiting for reports from the engineers. We have a meeting in prospect to consider those reports.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Mississippi yield to me for a moment?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. A few days ago, at my request, the Speaker submitted a request for unanimous consent to change the reference of two specific bills for the relief of flood sufferers, one introduced by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] and the other introduced by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LEE], from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which they had been referred, to the Committee on Appropriations. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY], the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, saw fit to object to that request for a change of reference.

I was of the opinion then, and I am still of the opinion, that the proper reference of all bills relating to this subject was to the Committee on Appropriations. Possibly no Member on this floor has a greater personal interest in this particular subject than I, the district from which I come having been almost destroyed—certain sections of it—by the flood waters of one of these rivers, and the people are helpless. But, Mr. Speaker, without prolonging this discussion, believing as I do that the Committee on Appropriations should take cognizance of this subject, if any committee does at all, and should then suggest some measure, as indicated by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], that will embrace all this stricken territory, I object to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON].

Mr. HARRISON. Will the gentleman reserve his objection for a moment?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I will reserve it.

Mr. HARRISON. May I ask the gentleman, who is a distinguished member of the Committee on Appropriations, whether that committee contemplates giving hearings and bringing out soon a resolution that will take care of the situation?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I will say that the Committee on Appropriations and no member of it has yet had specific and definite information furnished through reliable channels on which it can act. Certain bills have been referred to that committee, and I think the gentleman from Mississippi and no Member of the House would be willing to say that the Committee on Appropriations would not act upon the resolutions. It has often acted on resolutions for relief of this kind when it had the evidence before it.

Mr. HARRISON. I do not think that the Appropriations Committee would not act, but I am of the opinion that one committee ought to have full jurisdiction of the question, so that we can get action, and I do not care whether it is the Committee on Military Affairs or the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. It was not until the last session of Congress that a bill of this kind was ever referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. I think there was one, but I believe that the Committee on Appropriations has jurisdiction of this matter.

Mr. ADAMSON. Will the gentleman from Mississippi yield?

Mr. HARRISON. I will yield.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, when we received the intelligence of the devastation by flood, a number of us appealed to the War Department for relief and investigation. Investigations were immediately ordered; and a few days ago, when the wrangle or altercation came up in the House as to which committee should have jurisdiction, we discovered that both committees had some of these bills. I have one before the Committee on Military Affairs and my colleague [Mr. HOWARD] has one before the Committee on Appropriations. The suggestion I made to both committees is in line with what the gentleman from Illinois suggested, that, no matter what resolution they act upon, it should be amended by a substitute or otherwise, so as to embrace all the flood district and to provide for some measure of relief for all the sufferers. My judgment is that it is better to let them stay in both committees, and the committee that acts on it can act so as to apply relief to the whole territory.

Mr. BRITT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. BRITT. I have introduced a similar joint resolution for the relief of the sufferers in my district, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations. It is a matter of indifference to me which committee considers it. I heartily approve of the suggestion that all the resolutions be consolidated and acted upon by some committee.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I will say to my colleague that my information is that all the bills introduced on this subject for various localities have been referred to the Committee on Appropriations, except the two first introduced—one by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] and one by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LEE]. Those two by inadvertence, I am sure, were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. BURNETT. Not by inadvertence, because they properly belong there.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I am advised by the authorities of the House that it was by inadvertence, and, I think, by people who at least know as much about parliamentary rules as the gentleman from Alabama. The records of Congress will show that measures of this kind, until the Arkansas bill in the present Congress was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and which was the first one referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, have been referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BURNETT. I think the gentleman is mistaken. My recollection is that the Ohio resolution was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the matter of the boll-weevil conditions in Texas. I think the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] reported one of the bills and the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. NICHOLS] the other. There have been a number of cases, Mr. Speaker, that have been referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. RAGSDALE. I have been much interested in the proposed legislation, but I differ somewhat in the scope of the bills introduced, because I think that Congress ought to go further than the proposed legislation. I have been to the War Department more than once, and in the first instance, before I offered any resolution or took any action, I requested the Secretary of War to send an Army officer to my district, which he did, and I understand from conversations that I had with the Chief of Engineers to-day, and with the Secretary of War, that they sent other officers into other States. They have heard from all the officers except one and were in telegraphic communication with him to-day, and expect to hear from him soon, giving final information upon which they propose to make a recommendation to Congress.

My idea is, and I hope that the legislation will conform to it, and I understand that it is the intention of the War Department to recommend not only the giving of sums of money or rations to those in immediate need of it, but also to provide work on the highways and roads under the Chief of Engineers of the Army. My idea is that this legislation, if it includes that recommendation, should go to the Committee on Military Affairs; because the construction work on the roads will be done under the direction of the engineers of the Army. For that reason, it seems to me, and for that reason I ask that my resolution be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. This information is received from the officers they have sent into the field and the whole recommendation will come from the Secretary of War asking for a lump-sum appropriation to provide for the immediate necessities for the sufferers and to provide for sums to be appropriated to provide employment for those who want to work.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I object to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. McKINLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a short statement by Congressman GREENE, of Vermont, on how President Wilson has kept us out of war.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing a statement by the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GREENE]. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that upon Wednesday next, after the address by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND], subject to the same conditions upon which his request was granted, I be permitted to address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] asks unanimous consent that on Wednesday next, after the address of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND], he be allowed to address the House for 15 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a similar request, following the address of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr.

GREEN], for 20 minutes, to address the House on the subject of John Ericsson.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Nebraska asks unanimous consent that on Wednesday next, after the address of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN], he may be allowed to address the House for 20 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to give notice to the House that on Thursday next I shall call up the conference report on the Agricultural appropriation bill. There may be a necessity for the presence of a quorum at that time, though I am not sure.

Mr. MANN. Does not the Senate act on that conference report first?

Mr. LEVER. Yes; but I am assuming that they will act upon it in the meantime.

PENSIONS.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill S. 4654, granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and of wars other than the Civil War, and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, and that the same may be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Colorado asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill S. 4654, and that the same may be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pensions laws—

The name of Joseph Wessler, late of Battery B, Battalion Utah Volunteer Light Artillery, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $16 per month.

The name of Charles A. Myers, late of Company B, Fifty-first Iowa Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of William Peters, late of Hospital Corps, United States Army, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Floyd E. Driskel, late of Troop I, First Regiment United States Cavalry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of George Beals, late of Company I, Fifth Regiment United States Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Omar E. Brown, late of Company K, Eighteenth Regiment United States Infantry, Regular Establishment, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Anson Meyers, late of Company E, Twenty-fourth Regiment United States Infantry, Regular Establishment, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Joseph D. Sovern, late of Company H, Eleventh Regiment United States Infantry, Regular Establishment, and pay him a pension at the rate of $17 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Virginia Watson, widow of Eugene W. Watson, late rear admiral United States Navy, retired, and pay her a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of James Conway, late boiler maker, United States Navy, Regular Establishment, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Henry Dussault, late of Company H, First Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of James C. Larimer, late of Troop K, Eighth Regiment United States Cavalry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $14 per month.

The name of Lizzie Breen, widow of Patrick Breen, late of Troop G, First Regiment United States Cavalry, Regular Establishment, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of George Milholland, late of Company H, Twenty-first Regiment United States Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Cyrenus Rodgers, late of Company C, Third Regiment Kentucky Volunteers, War with Mexico, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of James M. Freeman, late of Company E, Eighth Regiment United States Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John A. Smith, late of Company C, One hundred and sixty-first Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Caleb St. Clair, late of Company B, Eleventh Regiment United States Infantry, Regular Establishment, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month.

The name of Carrier Thompson, late of Company L, Sixteenth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of James G. Royse, late of Capt. Parker's company, Iowa Dragoon Volunteers, War with Mexico, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month.

The name of Dennie Dixon, late of Company L, Sixth Regiment United States Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Julia P. Denny, widow of Frank L. Denny, late colonel and quartermaster, United States Marine Corps, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Louisa M. Fletcher, widow of William Fletcher, late of Company G, First Regiment Ohio Volunteers, War with Mexico, and captain, Twentieth Regiment United States Infantry, and major, United States Army, retired, and pay her a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of William Bradley, late of Company L, Second Regiment United States Volunteer Engineers, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Samuel A. Greenlee, late of Company I, First Regiment West Virginia Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Caroline Heywood, widow of Charles Heywood, late major general commandant, United States Marine Corps, Regular Establishment, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of John A. Avirett, late of Company I, Fourteenth Regiment United States Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Andrew Houllhan, late of Company D, Nineteenth Regiment United States Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Edward J. Galman, late first lieutenant Company D, First Regiment Montana Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month.

The name of John P. Todd, late of Troop I, Second Regiment United States Cavalry, Texas and New Mexico Indian War, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month.

The name of Sarah Warnack, widow of Frederick C. Warnack, late of Company E, Second Regiment Illinois Volunteers, War with Mexico, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Frank McCabe, late of Company I, First Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Grant E. Getchell, late of Company M, Thirteenth Regiment Minnesota Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Clifford T. Cheek, late of Company C, Thirtieth Regiment United States Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Edward J. Cuzzort, late of Company E, Eighteenth Regiment United States Infantry, and Signal Corps, United States Army, Regular Establishment, and pay him a pension at the rate of $16 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Louise M. Swift, widow of Franklin Swift, late lieutenant, United States Navy, Regular Establishment, and pay her a pension at the rate of $35 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Joseph C. Chilton, late of the United States Marine Corps, Regular Establishment, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Elizabeth J. Burt, widow of Andrew S. Burt, late brigadier general United States Army, Regular Establishment, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Edward Lenfesty, late of Company M, One hundred and fifty-seventh Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month.

The name of Edward D. Smith, late of Company H, Fourth Regiment United States Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $16 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Williamson S. Wright, late first lieutenant Fourteenth Company United States Volunteer Signal Corps, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month.

The name of Paul E. Busch, late of Company D, Signal Corps, United States Army, Regular Establishment, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Emer A. Robbins, late of Company L, Sixteenth Regiment United States Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month.

The name of Michael H. Spaulding, late of Company H, Third Regiment United States Volunteer Engineers, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $17 per month.

The name of Benjamin Kelsey, late of Troop D, Second Regiment United States Dragoons, Regular Establishment, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Joseph A. Nolan, late of Company B, Forty-fifth Regiment United States Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Fred Lamke, late of Company A, Second Regiment United States Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Robert F. Seawell, late of Company B, First Regiment Alabama Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Curt Seay, late of Battery C, First Regiment United States Artillery, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $16 per month.

The name of John T. Krenek, late of Company A, Third Regiment United States Infantry, Regular Establishment, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Sophronia Neel, widow of Thomas Neel, late of Company C, First Regiment Illinois Volunteers, War with Mexico, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Samuel C. Cochran, late of Company E, First Regiment Idaho Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of James A. Saurbaugh, late of the Hospital Corps, United States Army, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Frank L. Simpson, late of Company D, Fifty-first Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $15 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Viola C. McConville, widow of Edward McConville, late major First Regiment Idaho Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay her a pension at the rate of $35 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Bertha Z. Smith, widow of Howard Smith, late surgeon, United States Navy, Regular Establishment, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Elizabeth W. C. Allen, widow of Charles J. Allen, late brigadier general, United States Army, Regular Establishment, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Ellie Jones Quinby, widow of Ira Quinby, late major First Regiment United States Infantry, and lieutenant colonel, United States Army, retired, and pay her a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Joseph H. Cote, late of Company G, First Regiment Maine Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Maria L. Dougherty, widow of William E. Dougherty, late brigadier general, United States Army, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Eliza J. Salmon, widow of John Salmon, late of Capt. Thomas Graves's company, Virginia Militia, War of 1812, and pay her a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The following committee amendments were severally reported and severally agreed to:

Page 1, line 8, strike out "$16" and insert "$12." (Joseph Wessler.)
Page 1, line 11, strike out "$30" and insert "$12." (Charles A. Myers.)

Page 2, line 3, strike out "$30" and insert "$12." (William Peters.)

Page 2, line 24, strike out "$40" and insert "$30." (Virginia Watson.)

Page 3, strike out lines 22, 23, 24, and 25. (James M. Freeman.)

Page 4, strike out lines 15, 16, 17, and 18. (Dennie Dixon.)

Page 5, line 1, strike out "$40" and insert "$35." (Louisa M. Fletcher.)

Page 5, strike out lines 11, 12, 13, 14, and 15. (Caroline Heywood.)

Page 5, strike out lines 16, 17, and 18. (John A. Avirett.)

Page 5, line 21, strike out "$36" and insert "$30." (Andrew Houllhan.)

Page 6, strike out lines 22, 23, and 24, and, on page 7, strike out lines 1 and 2. (Edward J. Cuzzort.)

Page 7, line 13, strike out "$50" and insert "$30." (Elizabeth J. Burt.)

Page 7, line 21, strike out "$16" and insert "$12." (Edward D. Smith.)

Page 7, strike out lines 23 and 24, and, on page 8, strike out lines 1 and 2. (Williamson S. Wright.)

Page 8, line 8, strike out "$20" and insert "$12." (Emer A. Robbins.)

Page 8, strike out lines 13, 14, 15, and 16. (Benjamin Kelsey.)

Page 8, strike out lines 17, 18, 19, and 20. (Joseph A. Nolan.)

Page 9, line 5, strike out "$16" and insert "$12." (Curt Seay.)

Page 9, strike out lines 14, 15, and 16. (Samuel C. Cochran.)

Page 9, line 19, strike out "$40" and insert "$30." (James A. Saurbaugh.)

Page 10, line 7, strike out "$30" and insert "$12." (Bertha Z. Smith.)

Page 10, strike out lines 8, 9, 10, and 11. (Elizabeth W. C. Allen.)

Page 10, line 15, strike out "$40" and insert "$30." (Ellie Jones Quinby.)

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:
Page 3, line 3, after the word "month," insert as a new paragraph: "The name of Peter Black, late of the United States Navy, U. S. S. Ohio, War with Mexico, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. KEATING, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The foregoing bill is a substitute for the following Senate bills referred to the Committee on Pensions:

S. 83. Joseph Wessler.	S. 1703. James G. Royce.
S. 89. Charles A. Myers.	S. 1775. Dennie Dixon.
S. 90. William Peters.	S. 1804. Julia P. Denny.
S. 91. Floyd E. Driskel.	S. 1827. Louisa M. Fletcher.
S. 97. George Beals.	S. 1895. William Brac y.
S. 99. Omar E. Brown.	S. 2074. Samuel A. Greenlee.
S. 114. Anson Meyers.	S. 2238. Caroline Heywood.
S. 115. Joseph D. Sovern.	S. 2265. John A. Avirett.
S. 573. Virginia Watson.	S. 2284. Andrew Houllhan.
S. 629. James Conway.	S. 2309. Edward J. Galman.
S. 653. Henry Dussault.	S. 2476. John P. Todd.
S. 862. James C. Larimer.	S. 2534. Sarah Warnack.
S. 959. Lizzie Breen.	S. 2546. Frank McCabe.
S. 1122. George Milholland.	S. 2596. Grant E. Getchell.
S. 1124. Cyrenus Rogers.	S. 2601. Clifford T. Cheek.
S. 1346. James M. Freeman.	S. 2660. Edward J. Cuzzort.
S. 1506. John A. Smith.	S. 2721. Louise M. Swift.
S. 1510. Caleb St. Clair.	S. 2725. Joseph C. Chilton.
S. 1651. Carrier Thompson.	S. 2728. Elizabeth J. Burt.

S. 2780. Edward Lenfesty.
S. 2834. Edward D. Smith.
S. 2951. Williamson S. Wright.
S. 2960. Paul F. Busch.
S. 3112. Emer A. Robblas.
S. 3150. Michael H. Spaulding.
S. 3176. Benjamin Kelsey.
S. 3229. Joseph A. Nolan.
S. 3237. Fred Lamke.
S. 3288. Robert F. Seawell.
S. 3317. Curt Seny.
S. 3323. John T. Krenck.

S. 3324. Sophronia Neel.
S. 3623. Samuel C. Cochran.
S. 3624. James A. Sautbaugh.
S. 3638. Frank L. Simpson.
S. 3643. Viola C. McConville.
S. 3655. Bertha Z. Smith.
S. 3671. Elizabeth W. Allen.
S. 3903. Elie Jones Quirby.
S. 4258. Joseph H. Cote.
S. 4469. Maria L. Dougherty.
S. 4546. Eliza J. Salmon.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HUGHES] is entitled to one hour by special order, and has been waiting for some time.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, I will have to yield to my friend from Colorado again, and then I will yield about two minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox].

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to call up the omnibus pension bill, S. 5914, and ask its immediate consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Colorado asks unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill, the title of which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 5914) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and of wars other than the Civil War, and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to its present consideration? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws—

The name of William Bell, late of Company A, Twenty-fourth Regiment United States Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month.

The name of Michael Lacey, late of Company L, Third Battalion Engineers, United States Army, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Margaret Rowsell, widow of George Rowsell, late of Company D, Fourth Regiment United States Infantry, Regular Establishment, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Odell Valcour, late of Seventy-eighth Company, United States Coast Artillery Corps, Regular Establishment, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month.

The name of John E. Halaas, late of Company I, Thirty-sixth Regiment United States Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Michael Orell, alias Charles Welsh, late of Company K, Seventeenth Regiment United States Infantry, Regular Establishment, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month.

The name of Thomas F. Lancaster, late of Troop E, Eleventh Regiment United States Volunteer Cavalry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Adesta L. Kendall, widow of Lucius H. Kendall, late colonel First Regiment Maine Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Wilber Feaster, late of Company C, One hundred and sixty-first Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Joseph T. Kling, late of Company G, Second Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month.

The name of Minnie A. Curtis, widow of Lee A. Curtis, late of Battery B, Utah Volunteer Light Artillery, War with Spain, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Thomas E. Sims, late of Company K, Twenty-first Regiment Kansas Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Jennie G. George, widow of Charles P. George, late captain, Sixteenth Regiment United States Infantry, and major, United States Army, retired, Regular Establishment, and pay her a pension at the rate of $35 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving, and $2 per month additional on account of the minor child of said Charles P. George until she reaches the age of 16 years.

The name of George A. Wilson, late of Battery C, Utah Volunteer Light Artillery, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month.

The name of Henry Lee, late of Company K, Second Regiment Oregon Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Mary S. Colborn, widow of Robert G. Colborn, late of Company G, Fifteenth Regiment United States Infantry, War with Spain, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month and $2 per month additional on account of the minor child of said Robert G. Colborn until he reaches the age of 16 years.

The name of Edward Smith, late of Company E, Sixteenth Regiment United States Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $8 per month.

The name of Martha L. Sternberg, widow of George M. Sternberg, late brigadier general and Surgeon General United States Army, Regular Establishment, and pay her a pension at the rate of $100 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Henry Koehler, late of Troop D, Seventh Regiment United States Cavalry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $18 per month.

The name of William R. Claxton, late of Company B, Second Regiment New Jersey Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month.

The name of Dale C. Cook, late of Company C, Fortieth Regiment United States Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month.

The name of Raymond Christian, late of Company B, Nineteenth Regiment United States Infantry, Regular Establishment, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of George P. Thompson, late of Company B, First Regiment West Virginia Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $8 per month.

The name of Henry Sparman, late of Company G, Second Regiment Louisiana Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Milford W. Oxley, late of U. S. S. Franklin, United States Navy, Regular Establishment, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John B. Lucas, late of Battery A, Missouri Volunteer Light Artillery, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Minnie Jeffers, widow of Le Roy Jeffers, late of Company I, First Regiment Tennessee Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month and $2 per month additional on account of each of the minor children of said Le Roy Jeffers until they reach the age of 16 years.

The name of Fonetta W. D. Scott, widow of Bernard O. Scott, late commander, United States Navy, Regular Establishment, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of John McClintic, late of Company G, One hundred and fifty-ninth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Minnie Kinder, widow of Everett Kinder, late of Company D, Thirty-fifth Regiment United States Volunteer Infantry, and One hundred and third Company, United States Coast Artillery, War with Spain, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month and $2 per month additional on account of each of the minor children of the said Everett Kinder until they reach the age of 16 years.

The name of William Meyers, late of Company M, Twentieth Regiment United States Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $16 per month.

The name of Joseph England, late of Company B, Ninth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of George W. Mosler, late of Company C, Second Battalion, Nineteenth Regiment United States Infantry, Regular Establishment, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Reuben Allred, late of Company A, Mormon Battalion, Iowa Volunteers, War with Mexico, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Harry B. Helm, late of Company A, One hundred and fifty-eighth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of George Rhode, late of Troop I, Second United States Cavalry, Regular Establishment, and pay him a pension at the rate of $17 per month.

The name of Margaret S. Gemberling, widow of John W. Gemberling, late second lieutenant Company F, One hundred and seventy-second Regiment Pennsylvania Drafted Militia Infantry, and dependent mother of George B. Siegles, late of Company A, Fourth Regiment United States Infantry, War with Spain, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Jennie S. Gilman, widow of Forrest J. Gilman, late of Company M, First Regiment Maine Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month and $2 per month additional on account of each of the minor children of the said Forrest J. Gilman until they reach the age of 16 years.

The name of William A. Bowen, late of Company E, Third Regiment Georgia Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Mary A. C. Kaigler, widow of William Kaigler, late of Company D, First Regiment Georgia Volunteers, War with Mexico, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Willie Hall, late of Company E, Third Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $8 per month.

The name of Thomas Campbell, late of Battery L, First Regiment United States Artillery, Regular Establishment, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Caroline Carr, dependent mother of William H. Carr, Company A, Thirty-third Regiment Michigan Volunteer Infantry; Alvin Carr, Company K, Thirtieth Regiment United States Infantry; and Philo V. Carr, Company K, Thirtieth Regiment United States Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month.

The name of Charles Groves, late of Company D, Seventh Regiment United States Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month.

The name of Newton H. Reed, late of Company M, Fourth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Oliver Bryant, late of Company F, Fifteenth Regiment Minnesota Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Horace A. Gerald, late of Company K, First Regiment Maine Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Sarah J. Lewis, widow of Samuel Lewis, late of Company C, Mormon Battalion, War with Mexico, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Jen Rody Chauncey, late of Company H, Seventeenth Regiment United States Infantry, Regular Establishment, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Charles M. Bradbury, late of Company G, First Regiment Maine Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Robert H. Cowan, late second lieutenant Company K, Second Regiment North Carolina Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Irene Bialock, widow of Vernon D. Bialock, late of Sixth Battery, United States Field Artillery, Regular Establishment, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month and $2 per month additional on account of the minor child of said Vernon D. Bialock until she reaches the age of 16 years.

The name of Joseph W. Carrier, late of Company A, Third Regiment Tennessee Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William B. Hanley, late of Company F, Third Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Peter F. Weasel, late of Company I, Sixteenth Regiment United States Infantry, Regular Establishment, and pay him a pension at the rate of $10 per month.

The name of Karl S. Newstrom, late of Company H, Second Regiment Tennessee Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Margaret A. Ede, widow of Alfred L. Ede, late Lieutenant (junior grade), United States Navy, Regular Establishment, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving, and $2 per month additional on account of each of the minor children of said Alfred L. Ede until they reach the age of 16 years.

The name of Flora C. Plumb, widow of Charles F. Plumb, late of Company A, Fourth Regiment United States Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Margaret R. Thompson, widow of Richard E. Thompson, late colonel, Signal Corps, United States Army, Regular Establishment, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Mary O'Hara Carnes, widow of John Carnes, late of Battery M, Seventh Regiment United States Artillery, War with Spain, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month, and $2 per month additional on account of each of the minor children of said John Carnes until they reach the age of 16 years.

The name of Grace W. Post, widow of Henry B. Post, late second Lieutenant, Twenty-fifth Regiment United States Infantry, Regular Establishment, and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Edward Loudon, late of Company F, Fifth Regiment United States Infantry, Regular Establishment, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Mary A. Loveland, widow of Leslie R. Loveland, late of Company H, Third Regiment United States Infantry, War with Spain, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month, and $2 per month additional on account of each of the minor children of said Leslie R. Loveland until they reach the age of 16 years.

The name of Maria A. Hastings, widow of Daniel M. Hastings, late of Capt. Walker's company, First Regiment Texas Volunteer Cavalry, War with Mexico, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Lillias E. Knapp, widow of John J. Knapp, late captain, United States Navy, Regular Establishment, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Isalah S. Watkins, late hospital steward, Forty-ninth Regiment United States Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Sarah A. Herndon, widow of Dabney Herndon, late assistant surgeon, United States Army, Florida Indian War, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Susan L. F. Rand, widow of Stephen Rand, late rear admiral, United States Navy, retired, Regular Establishment, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Louise D. Finley, widow of Walter L. Finley, late colonel First Regiment United States Cavalry, Regular Establishment, and pay her a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Susan S. Stran, widow of Thomas V. Stran, late of Company A, Second Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, War with Mexico, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Frank D. Haskell, late of Ordnance Detachment, United States Army, Regular Establishment, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Helen A. Gibbs, dependent mother of Randolph H. Gibbs, late of U. S. S. Annapolis, United States Navy, Regular Establishment, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Thomas J. McBride, late of Battery K, Fourth Regiment United States Artillery, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The foregoing bill is a substitute for the following Senate bills referred to the Committee on Pensions:

S. 74. William Bell.	S. 5226. Mary A. Loveland.
S. 408. Michael Lacey.	S. 5241. Marie A. Hastings.
S. 449. Margaret Rowsell.	S. 5277. Lillias E. Knapp.
S. 572. Odolon Valcour.	S. 5278. Isalah S. Watkins.
S. 601. John E. Halaas.	S. 2782. Minnie Kinder.
S. 863. Michael Urell, alias Charles Welsh.	S. 2784. William Meyers.
S. 891. Thomas F. Lancaster.	S. 2788. Joseph England.
S. 916. Adesta L. Kendall.	S. 2838. George W. Mosier.
S. 1149. Wilber Feaster.	S. 2871. Reuben Allred.
S. 1150. Joseph T. Kling.	S. 2954. Henry B. Helm.
S. 1208. Minnie A. Curtis.	S. 3313. George Rhode.
S. 1356. Thomas E. Sims.	S. 3316. Margaret S. Gemberling.
S. 1418. Jennie G. George.	S. 3418. Jennie S. Gilman.
S. 1421. George A. Wilson.	S. 3701. William A. Bowen.
S. 1555. Henry Lee.	S. 3712. Mary A. C. Kaigler.
S. 1600. Mary S. Colborn.	S. 3718. Willie Hall.
S. 1709. Edward Smith.	S. 3992. Thomas Campbell.
S. 1716. Martha L. Sternberg.	S. 4023. Caroline Carr.
S. 1755. Henry Koehler.	S. 4081. Charles Groves.
S. 1815. William R. Claxton.	S. 4115. Newton H. Reed.
S. 1903. Dale C. Cook.	S. 4183. Oliver Bryant.
S. 1937. Raymond Christian.	S. 4235. Horace A. Gerald.
S. 2063. George P. Thompson.	S. 4285. Sarah J. Lewis.
S. 2196. Henry Sparman.	S. 4318. Jen Rody Chauncey.
S. 2247. Milford W. Oxley.	S. 4335. Charles M. Bradbury.
S. 2269. John B. Lucas.	S. 4359. Robert H. Cowan.
S. 2563. Minnie Jeffers.	S. 4433. Irene Blalock.
S. 2599. Fonetta W. D. Scott.	S. 4601. Joseph W. Carrier.
S. 2617. John McClintic.	S. 4653. William B. Hanley.
S. 5104. Mary O'Hara Carnes.	S. 4741. Peter F. Weasel.
S. 5177. Grace Post.	S. 4758. Karl S. Newstrom.
S. 5219. Edward Loudon.	S. 4875. Margaret A. Ede.
	S. 4996. Flora C. Plumb.

S. 5089. Margaret R. Thompson.
S. 5279. Sarah A. Herndon.
S. 5333. Susan L. F. Rand.
S. 5359. Louise D. Finley.

S. 5429. Susan S. Stran.
S. 5430. Frank D. Haskell.
S. 5446. Helen A. Gibbs.
S. 5505. Thomas J. McBride.

The following committee amendments were severally reported and severally agreed to:

Page 1, strike out lines 6 to 8, inclusive (William Bell).
Page 2, strike out lines 5 to 8, inclusive (Odolon Valcour).
Page 3, strike out lines 10 to 22, inclusive (Jennie G. George).
Page 3, line 25, strike out "24" and insert "12" (George A. Wilson).
Page 4, line 3, insert dollar mark before "12" (Henry Lee).
Page 4, line 10, strike out "$100" and insert "$50" (Martha L. Sternberg).
Page 4, line 20, strike out "18" and insert "12" (Henry Koehler).
Page 4, strike out lines 21 to 24, inclusive (William B. Claxton).
Page 5, strike out lines 23, 24, and 25, and on page 6, lines 1, 2, and 3 (Minnie Jeffers).
Page 6, line 6, strike out "30" and insert "12" (Fonetta W. D. Scott).
Page 6, line 22, strike out "$16" and insert "$12" (William Meyers).
Page 7, line 4, strike out "$30" and insert "$24" (George W. Mosier).
Page 8, line 25, strike out "$20" and insert "$12" (Caroline Carr).
Page 9, strike out lines 1, 2, and 3, inclusive (Charles Groves).
Page 11, line 4, strike out "$50" and insert "$30" (Margaret A. Ede).
Page 11, strike out lines 8 to 11, inclusive (Flora C. Plumb).
Page 11, strike out lines 12 to 15, inclusive (Margaret R. Thompson).
Page 11, strike out lines 16 to 21, inclusive (Mary O'Hara Carnes).
Page 12, strike out lines 4 to 9, inclusive (Mary A. Loveland).
Page 12, strike out lines 15 to 18, inclusive (Lillias E. Knapp).
Page 13, line 4, strike out "$50" and insert "$30" (Susan L. F. Rand).

The bill as amended was ordered to be read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. KEATING, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HUGHES] is recognized for one hour.

VOCATIONAL EDUCATION.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, the Congress authorized, and under that authorization the President appointed a commission to consider the question of vocational education. That commission was in session for three months. They had numerous and varied hearings. They made a report to this House, and a bill was suggested by it. The bill was introduced in the House and referred to the Committee on Education. The committee considered that bill and the subject of vocational education for four or five months, and after having given it most thorough consideration they reported out that bill unanimously. One of the special regrets I have is that it will be impossible to pass that bill at this session of Congress, but it will be the endeavor of the committee, and my endeavor as its chairman, to present that bill to this House early in December, and I hope and believe it will be passed.

THE CASE STATED.

There is a tremendous wastage of youth in the United States. With very few exceptions it may be said that American boys and girls leave school at 14 years of age, or earlier, and go to work. At least 2,000,000 boys and girls between the ages of 14 and 16 are working for wages in this country. They are unskilled at that age and unfit for responsibility. Each year 1,000,000 young people are required simply to maintain the ranks of our working population.

There are 24,000,000 persons 18 years of age and over in this country engaged in farming, mining, manufacturing, and mechanical pursuits, trade, and transportation. Of the 14,250,000 engaged in manufacturing and mechanical pursuits not 1 per cent have had, or at the present time have, any chance to secure adequate industrial training.

VOCATIONAL TRAINING IS NEEDED TO PREVENT WASTE OF HUMAN LABOR.

We are among the world's great industrial peoples, striving mightily for our place in the commercial sun. We need that place to keep our workmen employed and their families happy, but we omit a necessary thing to win and hold the position for which we strive. We train the physician for his job, the lawyer for his profession, and we teach the veterinarian how to care for the horse. With exceptions, excellent indeed, but all too rare, we are letting the city boy and the mechanic's son go it alone. We are so busy with winning our way, so concerned with our own National, State, and local affairs that a great problem like the wasting of our youth has been almost untouched.

Hence it has come to be that the early years of a young mechanic's life are often wasted in learning how to earn his living after he has reached the time of life when it is his desire and duty to earn that living. Here is a weakness and a waste that may well alter the place of the United States in the commercial and industrial world.

The American people have hardly begun the work of providing for the practical education of these millions of our wage-workers. In this whole country there are fewer trade schools than are to be found in the now unfortunate little German kingdom of Bavaria, with a population not much greater than that of New York City. There were at the outbreak of the war more workers being trained at public expense in the city of Munich alone than in all the larger cities of the United States, representing a population of more than 12,000,000. It is substantially true that practically every German citizen who could profit by it may receive vocational training for his life work in the schools and classes supported out of the public treasury.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUGHES. I will.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am not entirely familiar with the provisions of the gentleman's bill, and I know they are at his finger's end. Will the gentleman state just what his bill, in a general way, provides—the one which has been reported?

Mr. HUGHES. If the gentleman will wait, I will get to that in a few minutes, and I will be very glad to get to it.

To provide in our educational system some opportunity for our workers to improve their efficiency and thereby better their own and the communities' well-being is a social obligation which can not be avoided with impunity. But, disregarding for the moment this obligation, even to replace the annual mortality and superannuation of our great army of workers, each year 1,000,000 young people are required simply to maintain the ranks of our working population. Therefore, the immediate problem of vocational education is the problem of equipping for the successful pursuit of some useful trade or occupation the youths who go to work at the rate of more than 1,000,000 a year.

If we assume that a system of vocational education pursued through years of the past would have increased the wage-earning capacity of each of these to the extent of 10 cents a day, this would have made an increase of wages for the group $2,500,000 a day or $750,000,000 a year with all that this would mean to the wealth and life of the Nation. [Applause.] This is a very moderate estimate and the facts would probably show a difference between the earning power of the vocationally trained and the vocationally untrained of 25 cents a day. This would indicate a waste of wages through lack of training amounting to $6,250,000 every day, or $1,875,000,000 for the year. [Applause.] That is difficult for us to conceive and believe, but these figures are true.

Vocational training is required to conserve and develop our natural resources. These resources are decreasing. Successful competition with foreign countries in the future will depend upon our ability to "sell more brains and less raw material." [Applause.]

Despite the fact that the average intelligence is very high here, in this country perhaps higher than elsewhere in the world, we have begun to lower it, because our present system of universal education takes insufficient heed of the youth who goes to work. Large-scale production, the extreme division of the labor and the "all-conquering march of the machine," have practically driven out the apprentice system which, in a simpler age, taught the young not only details, but complete crafts. So, for the training which the trades themselves once furnished we now must substitute school training.

The returns of the old trade, technical, and apprenticeship school showed that the wage-earning power of their graduates steadily increased in direct ratio with their learning. This mind development is wealth creation, as certain as mine development. We must remember this, and we have not been doing so.

The increased demand for trained workers is an irresistible urge toward vocational training. The supply is relatively diminishing with the constantly increasing demand upon our industries for more and better goods. The European war and its disastrous results will be certain to emphasize this situation.

The unexampled prosperity of the American manufacturer has been in days past due, first, to the abundance and cheapness of the raw material which he has found at hand; second, to the inventive genius of the American people; third, to the presence in the American brain of organizing ability leading to production on a large scale; and, fourth, to the presence in this country of a great body of cheap foreign labor of the first generation, working its way upward to civic and industrial worth.

The opening of new foreign sources of supply and the depletion of our own stock of virgin raw material, the deterioration in the quality of cheap labor coming to us from Europe, both tend to make action imperative to our welfare. In proportion as our natural resources fail, we must increase the efficiency of human labor in the shop as well as on the farm.

TRAINED INTELLIGENCE NEEDED.

Only trained intelligence can conserve our mines, our forests, and our water powers; only trained intelligence can restore to our depleted land its old fertility [applause]; only trained intelligence can make it possible for us to maintain our higher standard of living for workers, and yet successfully compete with the workshops in lands where lower standards prevail.

The greatest resource of any nation is the undeveloped skill and vocational possibilities of its population. We must work this as industriously as we have worked our water power, our mines, our fields. Vocational training is especially needed to prevent waste of human labor, which is the most destructive form of extravagance of which a nation can be guilty.

The conservation and full utilization of our natural resources can be accomplished only in proportion as we train those who handle them. Public discussion and legislative fiat must be supplemented by an agricultural education which will teach the farmer how to make the soil yield an abundance and at the same time leave it rejuvenated, and by an industrial education which will teach our workers in shops and factories how to use material without waste and how to turn the products of our forests and our mines into articles of higher and still higher value.

THE SOCIAL AND EDUCATIONAL NEED FOR VOCATIONAL TRAINING IS EQUALLY URGENT.

Different tastes and abilities and equal opportunities to all to prepare for their life work, equality of opportunity in our present system of education, is not afforded to the mass of our children. While our schools are opened freely to every child, their aims and purposes are such that a majority of the children are unable to take advantage of them beyond a certain grade, and hence do not secure at public expense a preparation for their work in life. Although here and there we see the beginnings of change, it is still true that the schools are largely planned for the few who prepare for college rather than for the large number who go into industry.

The commission appointed to study this subject found that only half of the children who enter the city elementary schools of the country remain to the final elementary grade, and only one in ten reaches the final year of high school. On the average, 10 per cent of the children have left school at the age of 13; 40 per cent left by the time they are 14; 70 per cent by the time they are 15; and 85 per cent by the time they are 16 years of age. On the average, the schools carry their pupils as far as the fifth grade, but in some cities great numbers leave below that grade.

If we assume that all children should have a minimum school training equivalent to the eight grades of the elementary school, we must acknowledge that the schools now furnish this minimum to less than half the children who enter them. The rest leave school with inadequate general education and with no special training to fit them for work. Vocational courses are therefore needed to attract and hold in school pupils who now leave because they are unable to obtain suitable preparation for useful employment. For such pupils the vocational courses also offer the only opportunity which the schools have to give further training in citizenship.

Our existing scheme of education presupposes leisure to acquire academic culture or to prepare for leadership in the professions. Vocational culture and training for leadership in industry is equally important, and these can come only when education is broadened to meet the needs of all the children, so that each and every one may have a chance to develop in accordance with his or her capacity and be prepared to render to society the particular service of which he or she is capable.

Vocational training is needed for its indirect but positive effect on the aims and methods of general education, by introducing into our educational system the aim of utility to take its place in dignity by the side of culture, and to connect education with life by making it purposeful and useful.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUGHES. Yes, sir; gladly.

Mr. MANN. Like the other Members of the House, I have been very much interested in what the gentleman has said so far in his speech and will be in the rest of it. The subject of vocational education I think is one of the most important subjects before the American people to-day, or, for that matter, before the peoples of the world, but particularly with us. We are going to be in competition with other nations, where they do better than we about instructing their youth in the vocations. The gentleman is chairman of the committee and has given a great deal of study to this subject. I think the most valuable study that has been given in this country has been given by our distinguished friend from Georgia [applause] to this subject, and he has reported a bill into this House. I think I asked upon one occasion that the bill be passed over—if I did not I had intended to do so when it was reached on the Unanimous Consent Calendar—because I thought the bill ought to be very carefully considered when we are entering upon so broad a domain, and if there is any man in this House who knows the subject it is our distinguished friend from Georgia, and if there is any man in this House who has influence on the subject in the House it is our distinguished friend from Georgia. [Applause.]

Of course, it is none of my business about the politics in his district or State, but if his district wants to do a service to the American people it will give him an opportunity to largely dispose of the subject of vocational education in this country by keeping him in the Congress. [Loud applause.]

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, I assure the House that I can not find words to express my gratitude for the kindly expressions of my distinguished friend who has just made these remarks so complimentary to myself. I hope to God I may continue to deserve them. [Applause.]

Mr. MANN. Without wishing to interrupt the gentleman further, I want to say, if I may be permitted, that what I said is what I feel, and is the unanimous sentiment of everybody on both sides of the House. [Applause.]

Mr. HEFLIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUGHES. I will.

Mr. HEFLIN. As a member of the Committee on Agriculture, I want to say that the gentleman from Georgia has made a profound impression upon me in discussing this question of training the youth of the country in the work of scientific and intensive farming, and I know of no man in this House who has been more industriously engaged in behalf of the agricultural classes than has my good friend from Georgia. [Applause.]

Mr. HUGHES. Of course, I am always a little weak when you speak of agriculture, my chosen profession. God knows I love it. [Applause.] I have devoted all my life to agriculture, and expect to continue it until I die. I thank the gentleman most kindly for his consideration.

The mission of vocational education is not only to provide definite training in the technique of the various occupations, but to relate that training closely to the sciences, mathematics, history, geography, and literature which are useful to the man and woman as a worker and a citizen. Under such instruction the student worker becomes familiar with the laws of health and with his rights and obligations as a worker and a citizen in relation to his employer, his fellow employees, his family, the community, the State, and the Nation. By thus relating education closely to the world's experience it becomes purposeful and useful and enables the worker to see the significance of, to use, and to interpret in terms of his own experience the knowledge and culture which the race has accumulated. Such education is at least entitled to a place in dignity by the side of the more formal and literary culture now given by the schools.

Vocational education is needed for its social value. It advances the time for the full earning power in mechanical and other trades by nearly or quite 10 years. This means the ability to save earlier in life; therefore the earlier establishment of homes and on a more secure basis. Furthermore, it means adding about one-third to the life period of full earning power.

Vocational education is a wise business investment. In the last analysis expenditure of money for vocational education is a wise business investment, which will yield larger returns, not only in educational and social betterment but in money itself, than a similar amount spent for almost any other purpose. It is recognized that boys and girls can not be valued in terms of dollars and cents, save as these represent returns in social well-being both to themselves and to society.

National grants are justified by the national character of the problem, for it concerns all the people and is of nation-wide interest and importance.

Vocational education as at present contemplated is peculiarly a national problem. It is beneficial to the entire community, since it has to do with the happiness and productive powers of the producers in the country. Nothing is of more vital importance to the community as a whole than to serve the full talents and capacities of its future citizens. This vocational education seeks to do. The problem is so extensive that it can not properly be worked out unless undertaken by the Nation as a whole. It should also be pointed out that such a problem as vocational education will never be enthusiastically and fundamentally taken up by local communities, because school workers rarely stay in the community where they are educated, but go to other communities and States to find a better market for their labor and skill. The problem should not only be made a national one but should be undertaken in a way that would give permanent results.

It is the duty of the National Government, in so far as it does not interfere with the constitutional rights of the States, "to promote the general welfare." National efficiency is the sum total of efficiency of all individual citizens and the national wealth is the sum of their wealth-producing capacity. While, therefore, our national prosperity in the past has been based largely upon the exploitation of our national resources, in the future it must be based more and more upon the development, through vocational education, of our national resource of human labor. In the markets of the world we compete, not as individuals but as a unit against other nations as units. This makes the protection of our raw material and of our productive skill and human labor a national problem, and unquestionably introduces a national element into vocational education, making the right preparation of the farmer and the mechanic of vital concern to the Nation as a whole. On national grounds, therefore, Federal aid for vocational education becomes necessary, and unless it is undertaken as a national duty, the national welfare, which is a time-honored provision of the Constitution, is at stake.

Since the founding of the Government Congress has passed, in all, more than 42 acts which conferred directly upon all the States, or upon specific States, usually at the time of their admission to the Union, national grants of either land or money to be expended for the benefit of education.

Abundant precedent for national grants to education is found in the grants given under the Morrill, Nelson, Hatch, and Smith-Lever Acts to colleges of agriculture and mechanic arts. Probably no aid given by the National Government for education has ever proved so fruitful as have these grants. New and vigorous colleges have been created, small and feeble State institutions have been awakened into new life, the agricultural and engineering professions have been developed, and the States have been stimulated to make large and rapidly increasing appropriations to these colleges and to their State universities.

The problem is pressing. The opportunity for highly skilled labor in all its forms was never what it is to-day. The nations of the world reach out to the United States and we to them. Our ability to seize this opportunity depends in large measure upon an abundant supply of highly skilled artisans in every line. The urgency is such that the States and cities can not meet it if they would. The Nation must help if it is to be done in time.

Only 9 of the 48 States have established State systems for vocational education, and these systems are not as yet reaching even 1 per cent of the workers who need training. These States are New York, Connecticut, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Indiana, Wisconsin, California, Nebraska, and Massachusetts.

While the task confronting us is difficult and stupendous it can be overcome and will be overcome just in proportion as we work at it. Germany has done much, but her experience has for us only suggestion, never precedent and rule. By beginning now, under the stimulus of national encouragement, we shall learn by experiment and study how to meet the varied and complex demands of industry, due to peculiar social, economic, industrial, educational, and administrative conditions in each State and locality.

Vocational education is further justified by the interstate character of the problem, due to the interstate character of our industries and the national character of State business and industrial life. Because of its extreme mobility labor, particularly that which is skilled and is therefore in great demand, has taken on a national character. A man may be born in Indiana, trained a worker in Massachusetts, and spend his days as a machinist in California. A State can not be expected to devote large sums from her public revenues to the making of good workmen for the benefit of other States. Only out of a common fund like the National Treasury can the burden be equalized and adjusted so that each State may in justice be expected to meet the obligation resting upon its schools.

Industries are so interrelated that every State is interested commercially in the quality of workmanship in every other State. Cotton is grown in Georgia, woven into cloth in Rhode Island, and consumed in Iowa. Iron is rolled in Pennsylvania or Alabama, made into plows in Wisconsin, and used in Oregon. The widespread distribution of many large-scale industries is such that State lines must be disregarded when we think of the places and problems involved, not only in the making and selling of products but also in the education and employment of labor.

WHAT THE BILL FOR NATIONAL AID TO VOCATIONAL EDUCATION PROVIDES.

The bill provides:

1. National grants to be given to the States for stimulating vocational education in agriculture and in the trades and industries.

The term "agricultural education," as used in this bill, includes education for the farm home as well as for that farm itself. Hence, home economics, so far as it relates to the farm home, is included in the grant for instruction in agriculture.

2. The grants to be given are in two forms:

a. For the training of teachers of agricultural, trade and industrial, and home economics subjects.

b. For the paying of part of the salaries of teachers, supervisors, and directors of agricultural subjects, and of teachers of trade and industrial subjects.

3. Appropriations are to be made to a Federal board for making studies and investigations which shall be of use in vocational schools. These studies cover the subjects of agriculture and home economics, trades and industries, commerce and commercial processes, and methods of teaching and courses of study for such subjects.

KINDS OF SCHOOLS TO BE AIDED BY NATIONAL GRANTS.

The schools to be aided in part by the National Government must be—

1. Schools supported and controlled by the public.

2. The instruction given in them must be of less than college grade.

3. They should be designed to prepare boys and girls over 14 years of age for useful or profitable employment in agriculture, in the trades and industries, and in home economics.

4. The schools should be of three types in order to meet a variety of needs:

(a) All-day schools in which practically half of the time should be given to actual practice for a vocation on a useful or productive basis.

(b) Part-time schools for young workers over 14 years of age which should extend either their vocational knowledge or give preparation for entrance to a vocation or extend the general civic or vocational intelligence of the pupils.

(c) Evening schools to extend the vocational knowledge for mature workers over 16 years of age.

All costs of maintenance, including the cost of buildings, lands, or equipment other than the salaries of teachers, are to be borne by the State and local communities.

ADMINISTRATION.

A Federal board is to be created to administer and to cooperate with the States in promoting vocational education and for studies, investigations, and reports to aid the States in establishing and administering vocational schools.

The States shall designate or create State boards through whom the National Government will deal. The State board is required to submit its plans for using the fund to the Federal board, which will approve such plans when it finds them to be in conformity with the purposes and provisions of the act appropriating the grants. In this way the contractual relation between the State and Federal Governments is recognized and put into effect. The State, as the resident partner, conducts and supervises the business, and the Federal Government, as the nonresident partner, approves the plan of action as a condition of Federal aid.

CONDITIONS FOR PROPER SAFEGUARDING OF EXPENDITURES.

1. For each dollar received from the Government the State shall expend an equal amount for the same purpose, besides meeting all costs of plant, equipment, and maintenance.

2. The controlling purpose of all such education must be to "fit for useful employment." It must be less than college grade, and designed to meet the needs of persons over 14 years of age who have entered upon trade, industrial, farming, or home-making pursuits.

3. The schools aided in part by the National Government must be supported and controlled by the public.

4. Before money for training teachers can be received, each State must show that such training will be given only to persons who have had adequate vocational experience in the line of work which they are preparing to teach.

5. To administer these funds in the States, each legislature is required to designate or create a State board of not fewer than three members. The existing State board of education may be so designated. Thus each State will have its own board and study its local needs, being free to develop its own plans and always taking the initiative in the movement.

Summarizing its provisions, the bill extends to the States the help of the Government in establishing vocational education and in training persons to teach. This is to be done by grants of money and by the establishment of a Federal board for vocational education to work with and through the States in starting this form of education. The purpose of the proposed law is not to enable the Federal Government to enter the educational field and establish schools but to extend such aid as will stimulate the different States of the Union to develop the work themselves. In effect, the bill proposes to extend to the boy and girl of less than college grade opportunities for training in the vocations which our young people are entering at the rate of more than 1,000,000 a year.

So here we have the United States coming forward with what, at least, is the most ambitious plan for educational advance likely to be carried out anywhere in the world during the immediate future. While Europe is killing off its trained workers we are preparing to train ours.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, I am a member of the committee and know, perhaps, better than others do who are not members of the committee what has been done by the chairman of the committee in the study of this great subject of industrial education. The chairman of the committee has been not only assiduous in his work but he has been so wise, Mr. Chairman, in management of the affairs that there has never been the slightest friction in the committee. They have all worked together harmoniously for the purpose of securing the very best class of legislation. [Applause.]

There have been some differences of opinion in the committee. Sometimes the committee has not agreed with the chairman in his views, but he has taken such a broad view of this whole matter that I am very sure the bill which is now submitted has his approval, and that means a very great deal in the estimate of those who know him best, because he knows better than anybody else what is needed, and he knows best what can be practically obtained, and that is almost equally important. I am very glad, indeed, to say that the service which he has rendered to the country in the preparation of this legislation for submission to Congress, both as a member of the commission which first formulated this regulation and then as chairman of the committee which has perfected it, as we believe, and presented it to the House, has been such as to entitle him to a debt of gratitude from the entire country. [Applause.]

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman sincerely.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Arkansas is recognized.

RURAL CREDITS AND OTHER DEMOCRATIC LEGISLATIVE ACHIEVEMENTS.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. Speaker, many of my constituents are asking for information on the subject of the recently passed Federal land-loan act, and I take this opportunity to give them the information desired. I have compiled for them an analysis of the new law and will add a few thoughts on the achievements of the Democratic administration.

FARM LOANS BOARD.

The rural-credits law contemplates a farm-loan board of five members, four of whom are to be appointed by the President, the Secretary of the Treasury being a member ex officio. The expenses of this board will be paid by the Government, and its office is to be in Washington. It will have supervision over the rural-credits system much the same as the Federal Reserve Board has supervision over the 12 reserve banks of the United States. The country will be divided into 12 districts, in each of which will be established a Federal land bank authorized to make long-term loans on farms. Each bank is to have a capital stock of $750,000. This stock may be subscribed for by the public within 30 days; if not, it is to be subscribed for by the United States Government.

FEDERAL AID TO THE BANKS.

The sum of $9,000,000 is appropriated for the use of the land banks provided for by this system. This money is finally repaid to the Government without interest. The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to deposit as much as $500,000 in any land bank so that its operation may not be crippled for lack of abundant means. For the purpose of making the bonds and mortgages issued by the land banks attractive to investors these securities are exempted from all Federal, State, and municipal taxation. It would be better for the farmer if these bonds bear a small rate of interest, the smaller the better, as it is provided that these land banks shall lend money to the farmer at a rate of interest not to exceed 1 per cent more than the interest paid on the bonds, this 1 per cent being allowed for the expenses of the bank, and in no case shall a farmer be required to pay more than 6 per cent interest.

As I stated in a speech on June 27, the farmers of the country have been paying interest rates averaging 8½ per cent, totaling $500,000,000 annually. This rate of interest is greater than the farmers can afford to pay. Hence it is important that the interest rate be lowered, and this is accomplished by the act in question.

SUBJECT OF LOANS.

The right to make loans by a Federal bank is prescribed as follows:

1. To provide for the purchase of land for agricultural purposes.
2. To provide for the purchase of equipment and live stock necessary for the proper and reasonable operation of the farm.
3. To provide buildings and for the improvement of farm lands.
4. To pay off the indebtedness of the owner of land mortgage existing at the time of the organization of the farm-loan association.

The Federal land bank under this act is permitted to loan 50 per cent of the value of the land mortgaged and 20 per cent of the value of the improvements situated thereon.

A loan can be made for not less than 5 nor more than 40 years. To avail yourself of the provisions of this act you must be a farmer at the time you borrow or shortly become engaged in the cultivation of the farm that is mortgaged. When the subscription to the stock in any Federal land bank has reached the sum of $100,000 the officers and directors of said bank shall be chosen by the national farm-loan association and the Federal Farm Loan Board, as follows: Six of said directors shall be known as local directors and shall be selected by and be representative of the national farm-loan association, and the remaining three directors shall be known as district directors, and are appointed by the Federal Farm Loan Board and represent the public interest. In other words, each Federal land bank will be controlled by nine directors, each holding office for a term of three years. When the subscription reaches $100,000 the borrowers who own the stock in the bank will control the same.

FARM-LOAN ASSOCIATION.

In order to secure a loan a farmer must be a member of the national farm-loan association. These associations are local and are composed of not less than 10 members, all of whom must be borrowers. Each association elects a president, vice president, secretary-treasurer, and a loan committee of three, none of whom shall receive a salary except the secretary-treasurer, who acts as the business manager. When an application for a charter for a local association is filed with the district land bank an examiner is sent to the locality to appraise the lands represented by the application, and if the lands are found eligible for loans the charter is granted. These associations are organized to solicit loans, pass upon the character of the applicant for the loan, and to make a final appraisal of the lands which the applicant offers as security.

HOW LOANS ARE MADE.

The borrower is required to make application for membership in the association. His application must be accompanied by subscription for stock in the association to the amount of 5 per cent of the amount he wishes to borrow. If he desires to borrow $1,000 he must subscribe for ten $5 shares, or $50 worth. When the loan is paid this stock money is refunded to the farmer. The stock purchased need not be for cash, but the amount may be carried in the loan. The borrower's application is forwarded to the district land bank, together with the stock subscription. The land is appraised and the title investigated by the land bank, and if it is found satisfactory the loan is made and the money is sent to the secretary-treasurer of the local association for the borrower. All payments of principal and interest are made to the local secretary-treasurer.

AMOUNT LOANED, DATE OF MATURITY, AND INTEREST RATE.

The farmer can borrow 50 per cent of the value of his lands and an additional 20 per cent of the value of his improvements.

BORROWER'S LIABILITY.

One borrower is not liable for the debts of other borrowers in his association, but each member is liable for 5 per cent of the capital stock subscribed for by him and an additional 5 per cent on this stock, so if the Federal land bank should fail the borrower would only be responsible for the unpaid balance on his loan and 10 per cent of the original face value of his loan. In the case of the failure of the land bank, the loss to the borrower would not exceed the amount he now pays the local agent for procuring a loan for him.

HOW LOANS ARE PAID.

When the borrower pays his interest each year he can also pay an additional sum to be applied on the principal. This is known as the amortization plan. For instance, if a man procures a loan of $1,000 for 20 years at 5 per cent, the same can be paid according to the table that follows:

Amortization table.

Annual periods.	Total annual payment.	Interest at 5 per cent.	Paid on principal.	Amount of principal still unpaid.
1.....	$80.24	$50.00	$30.24	$969.76
2.....	80.24	48.48	31.75	938.00
3.....	80.24	46.90	33.34	904.67
4.....	80.24	45.22	35.01	869.66
5.....	80.24	43.48	36.76	832.90
6.....	80.24	41.64	38.59	794.31
7.....	80.24	39.71	40.52	753.79
8.....	80.24	37.68	42.55	711.23
9.....	80.24	35.56	44.68	666.56
10.....	80.24	33.32	46.91	619.64
11.....	80.24	30.98	49.25	570.39
12.....	80.24	28.51	51.72	518.67
13.....	80.24	25.93	54.31	464.36
14.....	80.24	23.21	57.02	407.34
15.....	80.24	20.35	59.87	347.46
16.....	80.24	17.37	62.87	284.60
17.....	80.24	14.23	66.01	218.59
18.....	80.24	10.93	69.31	149.28
19.....	80.24	7.46	72.78	76.50
20.....	80.24	3.82	76.50	.....
Total.....	1,604.80	604.80	1,000.00	.....

The following table gives the figures for the payment of a loan of $1,000 for 36 years at 6 per cent interest:

Annual periods.	Total annual payment.	Interest at 6 per cent.	Paid on principal.	Amount of principal still unpaid.
1.....	$68.39	$60.00	$8.39	$991.61
2.....	68.39	59.49	8.90	982.71
3.....	68.39	58.96	9.43	973.28
4.....	68.39	58.40	9.99	963.39
5.....	68.39	57.80	10.59	952.80
6.....	68.39	57.16	11.23	941.57
7.....	68.39	56.49	11.90	929.68
8.....	68.39	55.79	12.60	917.08
9.....	68.39	55.02	13.37	903.71
10.....	68.39	54.28	14.11	889.60
11.....	68.39	53.37	15.02	874.58
12.....	68.39	52.47	15.92	858.66
13.....	68.39	51.52	16.87	841.79
14.....	68.39	50.50	17.89	823.89
15.....	68.39	49.43	18.96	804.93
16.....	68.39	48.29	20.10	784.83
17.....	68.39	47.08	21.31	763.52
18.....	68.39	45.81	22.58	741.04
19.....	68.39	44.45	23.94	717.09
20.....	68.39	43.02	25.37	691.63
21.....	68.39	41.49	26.90	664.73
22.....	68.39	39.88	28.51	636.22
23.....	68.39	38.17	30.22	606.00
24.....	68.39	36.36	32.03	573.97
25.....	68.39	34.43	33.96	540.01
26.....	68.39	32.40	35.99	504.02
27.....	68.39	30.24	38.15	465.87
28.....	68.39	27.94	40.45	425.42
29.....	68.39	25.52	42.87	382.55
30.....	68.39	22.95	45.44	337.01
31.....	68.39	20.22	48.17	288.84
32.....	68.39	17.33	51.06	237.78
33.....	68.39	15.26	53.13	184.65
34.....	68.39	11.07	57.32	127.33
35.....	68.39	7.63	60.76	66.57
36.....	70.55	3.99	66.57	.....
Total.....	2,464.21	1,464.21	1,000.00	.....

GENERAL STOCK LAND BANKS.

The law also authorizes individuals to organize general stock companies for the purpose of making farm loans. The banks are to be organized with the capital of private individuals, and the Government does not contribute to the capital stock of these banks. Each bank must have at least $250,000 worth of capital stock. These banks may issue bonds on mortgages the same as Federal land banks, and their interest charge is limited to 6 per cent. It will require several months for the Government to organize and put in operation the machinery necessary to make these loans.

WHAT THE PRESENT CONGRESS HAS DONE.

Besides passing the rural-credits act, this Congress has passed a good-roads bill providing for the following annual payments for good roads:

First year.....	$5,000,000
Second year.....	10,000,000
Third year.....	15,000,000
Fourth year.....	20,000,000
Fifth year.....	25,000,000

The States will have to make available an equal amount or its equivalent, so that the amount of money to be expended upon highways throughout the country in the next five years will amount to $150,000,000. The Republican Party has been in power almost continuously since the Civil War and has never given the farmers either rural-credits legislation or good-roads legislation. The Democratic Party has given to the country the income-tax law, statehood for New Mexico and Arizona, election of Senators by direct vote of the people. It has abrogated boss rule in the House; it has provided for the publicity of campaign expenses; it has given us the Federal Trade Commission law, the war-risk insurance law. This administration has enacted the Clayton antitrust law, the Underwood tariff law, the Federal reserve law, and it has given beneficial labor legislation for America's toilers, the eight-hour day, the Children's Bureau, the child-labor bill, safety of railway employees, Bureau of Labor Safety, workmen's compensation law, the seamen's law, the anti-injunction law. The House during this Congress has passed bills to prevent gambling in farm products, the immigration bill, a warehouse bill, grain-grades bill, a ship-purchase bill, conservation bills, the flood-control bill.

It has been a Congress of achievements, especially in the interest of the farmers and the laborers of the country. The country has never been so prosperous as it is to-day because of Democratic policies and performances. The Republican Party makes promises, but does not fulfill the same. The Democratic Party made promises and has delivered more than it promised. The average price of wheat under Roosevelt was 78 cents per bushel; under Taft, 87½ cents per bushel; and the present price is 99½ cents per bushel. The average price of corn under Roosevelt was 45 cents per bushel; under Taft, 54 cents per bushel; and the present price is 71½ cents per bushel. The average price of oats under Roosevelt was 35 cents per bushel; under Taft, 37 cents per bushel; and the present price is 39½ cents per bushel. The average price of cattle under Roosevelt was $8.22; under Taft, $9.73; and the present price is $11.30. The average price of horses under Roosevelt was $184; under Taft, $202; and the present price is $205. The price of hogs under Roosevelt was $7.23; under Taft, $9.38; and the present price is $9.85.

PROSPERITY IS GENERAL.

The total resources of the national banks of the country on March 1, 1916, were $13,830,000,000, which exceeds by $370,000,000 the greatest resources ever recorded in the history of the United States. In New England, under the Wilson administration, the bank deposits have been increased 31 per cent. The bank deposits of the Dakotas, Nebraska, Kansas, Montana, Wyoming, Colorado, New Mexico, Oklahoma, and Arkansas have increased during the same period 42 per cent.

The Republicans claim that much of this prosperity is due to the war in Europe. Some of it is due to that fact, but more is due to the fact that under the Wilson administration everybody has had a square deal—the people have had their day in legislative court—and every effort has been made honestly to serve all the people. The Republican Party brought about prosperity in spots; the Democratic Party has brought about prosperity in every nook and corner of the land. And let me stress the important fact that the President and this Congress kept the country out of war. On this record the Democratic Party, the oldest and yet the youngest and most progressive party in the country, can with confidence go to the people for justification and indorsement.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. GARNER). The gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN] is recognized for 40 minutes.

THE NATIONAL GUARD.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, in order that I may not too greatly tax the patience of the House, I shall ask permission to print in the RECORD some data furnished me by one of the departments of the Government.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD as indicated. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, during the War with Spain 18 years ago the country was painfully shocked when word came from Porto Rico that the Army was being fed on meat that was unfit for consumption. It was charged that putrid or "embalmed" beef was being served to the country's military servants.

There was a great scandal, and instantly the strongest of all powers—public opinion—demanded an investigation. The investigation was made, the deplorable truth ascertained, and the remedy applied.

That incident passed into history. I believe that it had an influence for good, for the conditions of 1898 can never be duplicated. Since then we have developed a system of inspection of all the food furnished to the Army and much of that consumed by citizens, and the horrors of 1898 are now impossible.

But the fact that there exists no reason now for criticism of the supply corps of the Army has not prevented some partisan newspapers and scandal mongers from assailing the administrative officers of the War Department. A desperate but futile effort is being made to discredit capable officers and to show unfitness where a high degree of efficiency exists.

The fact is, Mr. Speaker, that a considerable army has been moved from far away parts of the Union to the Mexican border without hitch and with all the dispatch the occasion required. These troops were moved in safety and comfort even if Pullman berths and 9-foot linen sheets could not be supplied to all the men.

There was complete and satisfactory cooperation between the railways and the military. One hundred and two thousand National Guardsmen were taken from places as remote as Massachusetts and Connecticut to the Mexican border with only one minor accident. Three members of a Minnesota battery were hurt, two very slightly, and one seriously but not dangerously.

I have been advised by an officer at the War Department that the railway service was wonderfully efficient. Indeed, he said that it could not have been bettered, even from the military viewpoint, unless the country, its commerce, and its citizens had been completely subordinated to the Army. I need not say that if that had been attempted there would have been a roar of indignation that no officer, civil or military, could have stood against.

We now have an army on the border and across the international boundary so well prepared for any prospective duty that no citizen need give himself the slightest uneasiness as to what will happen.

Of course, they are not all veterans, not all regulars, but they are both in comparison with any enemy they are apt to meet. In equipment, discipline, and other military essentials they are completely ready for such tasks as may be assigned them.

As to numbers—but, mind you, I only speak an opinion now—I believe they exceed all the armies of all the factions in Mexico at any one time since the outbreak of civil war in that country in December, 1910. With the cooperation of the Navy and Marine Corps we have force enough on the border to smother Mexico without much sacrifice and without a call for reinforcements. Of course, if we should be called on to garrison a country with nearly 800,000 square miles of territory, to suppress guerrillas and maintain order for an indefinite time, another problem would have to be solved.

But, Mr. Speaker, all of us hope that there will be no conflict with Mexico, and it begins to appear that there will be none. Every good citizen hopes that the President will succeed in his efforts to keep us out of war, and that order will soon be re-established in Mexico. I am convinced that only an unimportant part of the people want war, and I am also convinced that those who do want it will furnish very few recruits for the service if it should come.

It is much to be regretted that a show of force, in its nature a threat against a neighbor, had to be made. However, conditions seemed to require it. It was made and I sometimes think that my Republican friends have been chagrined at its success. Comparative calm on the border has succeeded the turbulence and threat of war that was disturbing the country 30 days ago, and it is this very calm and prospect of peace that is displeasing to some of the critics of the administration. It does not fit in with certain commercial schemes, and the newspapers—some of them—say it is displeasing to the National Guard.

A few days ago one of the great New York papers contained a news dispatch from the border in which it was said that the National Guard had broken down under the first severe test and "through no fault of its own."

If the National Guard has broken down we ought to know it, for we have relied upon it as one of our arms of defense in times of danger. If it has broken down through "no fault of its own" we ought to know it, and, by all means and at almost any cost, we should make an effort to find out whose fault it is.

But has it broken down? I do not believe that it has, and certainly the story in the New York paper was not convincing. The charge was sustained by arguments—if they can be called arguments—that only provoked a smile. The story in the New York paper said that "90 per cent of the men are dissatisfied and discontented and are anxious to get back home to their work and families."

I think it probably true that many of the men do want to get back home to their work and their families, although the percentage mentioned is certainly a gross exaggeration. Of course they are discontented. We belong to a discontented race.

That is why we achieve. Being discontented they must ease their minds by blaming some one, and so they aim their maledictions at the most conspicuous target—the President. They are reported to have said that they "have been buncoed by the President," that they were "promised that they should go into Mexico," and a lot of other foolish things.

Let me read you a part of this sensational story about the breaking down of the National Guard:

[Special to the Washington Post.]

NEW YORK, July 23.

The Sun this morning prints the following special from Brownsville, Tex.:

Under its first severe test the National Guard is breaking down, and through no fault of its own.

Ninety per cent of the men are dissatisfied and discontented and are anxious to get back home to their work and their families. This statement may come as a surprise to a public that is being fed daily by assurances from Washington that everything is lovely along the Rio Grande and that the militia are bubbling with joy over their present situation and future prospects, but it is the indelible truth, and any candid person with persistence enough to get under the surface of things can find it out for himself.

Let it be thoroughly and completely understood that they are not trying to play the baby act, that they are not merely seeking to crawl out of the hard labor of training in a climate as tropical as Panama, and that they are not lying down on the country. In no sense are they quitters, but they have reasoned it out among themselves as American citizens have a habit of reasoning things out, and they have made up their minds that they were tricked and deceived and they are being kept here for the political purposes of the administration.

They stayed in the National Guard and responded enthusiastically to the order to go to the border, because they wanted to fight for their country. They wanted to play a part in helping their country defend itself and maybe pacify a troublesome and dangerous neighbor. They were assured and believed they were going into Mexico. They believe now that they were very unfairly and very insincerely treated. They think they were purposely deluded, and they are beginning to get mad.

How absurd all that is! No one worth while, no one with authority to speak, ever told recruits to the Guard any such things. Overzealous and indiscreet recruiting officers now and then may have drawn on their imaginations in picturing the delights of soldiering on the border, but there are not many full-grown American citizens in the Regular Army, or the Militia, who do not know that they have no authority to promise such things. All this is part of a scheme to discredit the administration.

The truth is, I suspect, that the realities of military service on the border in midsummer are not to their taste. Drilling under a hot sun and routine camp duties are not pleasant work, and they pall quickly.

The charge that they are being kept on the border for political purposes is somewhat more serious, because it is calculated to develop discontent, where it does not exist, and lack of respect for the President and others in control.

These troops were sent to the border for a serious purpose, and that purpose has been largely accomplished. There was grave danger of war. That danger seems to have passed. There were occasional incursions of bandits, with danger to the lives and property of American citizens. These incursions, notwithstanding the extraordinary difficulty of guarding an 1,800-mile-long border with only a fordable river or an imaginary line between Mexico and the United States, have almost ceased. Perhaps they never will be entirely done away with, for they have occurred now and then ever since 1836, when Texas ceased to be a part of Mexico.

In the old days these invaders were called bandits or cattle thieves. Now they are given a new dignity, and are called Carranzistas or Villistas, according to taste or the proximity to the border of this or that faction of Mexican patriots.

But their nature is unchanged. They will kill when they can, and they still have an unsatisfied longing for the Texan's cattle and horses.

It is the duty of the Government to protect its citizens and their property, and it was in the discharge of that duty the President sent a military force to the frontier. He sent a greater force than was ever on the border before, because the menace was greater. I believe it is his duty to keep them there as long as there is any danger, and I think he will. Their presence on the international boundary has had a quieting effect. It was distinctly a peace move, and that, I suspect, is why it displeases so many people. Before they reached the border the Mexicans were truculent and war seemed imminent, but precisely in the ratio in which the Mexicans came to appreciate the earnestness of the Government of the United States their own inclination to war diminished.

Where is the politics in keeping them on the border? If they are so discontented and hold the Wilson administration responsible, they can do as much harm with letters as if they were at home.

When order has been restored and any Mexican Government has shown itself able to protect the lives and property of foreigners—in other words, when the danger shall have passed—they will be withdrawn. I believe it will be done then, no matter what unfriendly political critics may say.

THE QUESTION OF RATIONS.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to speak briefly about the specific charges of inefficiency that have been brought against the present management of the War Department, with particular reference to the recent troop movement, food supplies, and medical service.

First in importance is the charge that the National Guardsmen were not given sufficient food while on the way from their home stations to the Texas-Arizona border. The answer is that the charge is false.

Fortunately every order and other thing of importance in connection with the disposition of the Army is a matter of record, and every statement I shall make—and they are based on data supplied by the Secretary of War at my request—can be verified by a visit to the Department of War. So it is easy to learn just what was done for the militia while on the way to the Mexican boundary.

There is no State in the American Union which is more than five days' travel by rail from the border. When the men from northern and remote States were ordered to the front they were given 10 days' rations. These are the same rations furnished the Regular Army. As the maximum estimate of the time required for the longest possible journey to the seat of the "near war" is less than five days, that is a hundred per cent margin of safety. And yet I am told the newspapers carried a story a few weeks ago telling how, owing to an inadequate supply of food, the Nebraska troops, who entrained at Lincoln, in that State, were in a starving condition before they reached Omaha.

Mr. STEENERSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Yes; briefly. I want to get through.

Mr. STEENERSON. I received a letter this morning from a judge in my town who has a son on the Mexican border, inclosing a letter from the young man, who is in Company K, I believe, of the Third Minnesota, in which he complains that the soldiers now on the border—at least in his company—could not get bread; that their breakfast was bacon and coffee; and that nobody but officers had any bread to eat; and the soldiers had no money with which to buy it. He said that it was obtainable at the post trading place. Now, this is a reliable man. I know the young man, and his father is a judge there, and this complaint came to me this morning.

Mr. SLAYDEN. It is conceivable that some accident may have happened that would temporarily deprive them of the ordinary conveniences. A bakery might burn, as bakeries sometimes do. I am going to tell the gentleman in a moment just what is supplied to these men.

Mr. STEENERSON. The complaint I believe to be true. I have referred it to the War Department. I did not want to make any sensation about it.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I do not know about the particular instance. I have been without bread on the border when I have been out camping.

Mr. STEENERSON. The strange thing is that the soldiers could get no pay when due, and the only way they could get bread was to buy it.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I did not get any data about that from the department. I do not know why it should be.

Mr. STEENERSON. I wish to say that this complaint comes from a very worthy person.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Let us hear from the pay department about that.

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, what marvelous appetites these Nebraskans must have. They seem to have consumed 60 ounces of beef and the five days' allowance of bread, prunes, and other stuff in the travel ration all in one day. Of course if their food supply was gone in a few hours it was simply thrown away and there should have been an investigation. But I don't believe that it happened.

In this connection I shall ask your attention to the Regular Army ration, the kind supplied to these hungry militiamen on their recent expedition to the border. There is a garrison ration and a travel ration. I will print both. But first let me quote a statement made by the Acting Quartermaster General to the House Committee on Military Affairs.

Gen. Sharpe said:

There is no army in the world which is fed as well as ours.

That is a fact that is known to everybody who knows anything about the military establishments of the various governments in the world. Our Army is not only well fed, it is lavishly fed.

Here is the garrison ration and the things that may be substituted:

Garrison ration.	Substitute ration.
Beef, fresh.....oz.. 20	Mutton, fresh.....oz.. 20 Bacon <sup>1</sup> .....oz.. 12 Canned meat, when impracticable to furnish fresh meat.....oz.. 16 Hash, corned beef, when impracticable to furnish fresh meat.....oz.. 16 Fish, dried.....oz.. 14 Fish, pickled.....oz.. 18 Fish, canned.....oz.. 16 Turkey, dressed, drawn, on Thanksgiving Day and Christmas, when practicable.....oz.. 16 Soft bread.....oz.. 18 Hard bread, to be ordered issued only when the interests of the Government so require.....oz.. 16 Corn meal.....oz.. 20
Flour.....oz.. 18	Rice.....oz.. 1.6 Hominy.....oz.. 1.6 Potatoes, canned.....oz.. 15 Onions, in lieu of an equal quantity of potatoes, but not exceeding 20 per cent of total issue.....oz.. 15 Tomatoes, canned, in lieu of an equal quantity of potatoes, but not exceeding 20 per cent of total issue.....oz.. 15 Other fresh vegetables (not canned) when they can be obtained in the vicinity or transported in a wholesome condition from a distance, in lieu of an equal quantity of potatoes, but not exceeding 30 per cent of total issue.....oz.. 15
Baking powder.....oz.. .08	Apples, dried or evaporated.....oz.. 1.28 Peaches, dried or evaporated.....oz.. 1.28 Jam, in lieu of an equal quantity of prunes, but not exceeding 50 per cent of total issue.....oz.. 1.12 Coffee, roasted, not ground.....oz.. 1.4 Coffee, green.....oz.. .32 Tea, black or green.....oz.. .32
Beans.....oz.. 2.4	Pickles, cucumber, in lieu of an equal quantity of vinegar, but not exceeding 50 per cent of total issue.....oz.. .014 Cloves.....oz.. .014 Ginger.....oz.. .014 Nutmeg.....oz.. .014 Lard substitute.....oz.. .64 Oleomargarine.....oz.. .5
Potatoes <sup>2</sup> .....oz.. 20	Flavoring extract, vanilla.....oz.. .014
Prunes.....oz.. 1.28
Coffee, roasted and ground.....oz.. 1.12
Sugar.....oz.. 3.2
Milk, evaporated, unsweetened.....oz.. .5
Vinegar.....gill.. .16
Salt.....oz.. .64
Pepper, black.....oz.. .04
Cinnamon.....oz.. .014
Lard.....oz.. .64
Butter.....oz.. .5
Syrup.....gill.. .32
Flavoring extract, lemon.....oz.. .014

<sup>1</sup> In Alaska, 16 ounces of bacon, or, when desired, 16 ounces salt pork, or 22 ounces salt beef.

<sup>2</sup> In Alaska the allowance of fresh vegetables will be 24 ounces instead of 20 ounces, or canned potatoes, 18 ounces instead of 15 ounces.

NOTE.—Food for troops traveling on United States Army transports will be prepared from the articles of subsistence stores which compose the ration for troops in garrison, varied by the substitution of other articles of authorized subsistence stores.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Yes.

Mr. COX. Is that all in the ration of one day?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Yes; that is all in the ration of one day. These substitutions may be made in order to give a greater variety.

Mr. KINKAID. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield there for a question?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Texas yield to the gentleman from Nebraska?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Yes, if the gentleman will be brief about it. I have only a limited time, as the gentleman knows.

Mr. KINKAID. I desire to know whether the gentleman, who has had so long an experience on the Committee on Military Affairs—

Mr. SLAYDEN. I am not now a member of that committee.

Mr. KINKAID. The gentleman used to be. I forgot. I would like to know whether the gentleman has given any special consideration to the question of whether the Army of the United States is fed as scientifically as it might be fed; that is, whether the ration is balanced as well as it might be balanced, upon scientific principles?

Mr. SLAYDEN. I have given casual investigation to it, and I will say to the gentleman that I think it is, and this list shows that the requisite quantity of carbohydrates and proteids are in the ration and that it is balanced. They give them all the fresh fruit and vegetables they can, whenever they can be had.

Mr. KINKAID. The gentleman was just reading some exceptions there. They may elect to take other food than the foods prescribed for them. They may elect therefore to unbalance the ration. The gentleman has noticed that. They may elect to take it almost all in the one kind or in the other, and therefore they may get what is not suitable for winter or what may not be suitable for summer.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Where does the gentleman find that authority?

Mr. KINKAID. I found it in a book I was reading for my own good.

Mr. SLAYDEN. This is the ration that is served to them. I do not believe the line officers or the medical officers would permit the men to change that so as to affect their health.

Mr. KINKAID. I will call the matter up again. I do not want to take up the gentleman's time now.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Here is the travel ration, a full 10 days' allowance of which was given men from the Northern States when they started to the South:

Travel ration (for troops traveling otherwise than by marching, and separated from cooking facilities).

Component articles and quantities.	Substitute articles and quantities.
Soft bread.....oz.. 18	Hard bread.....oz.. 18
Beef, corned.....oz.. 12	Hash, corned beef.....oz.. 12
Beans, baked.....oz.. 4
Tomatoes, canned.....oz.. 8
Jam.....oz.. 1.4
Coffee, roasted and ground.....oz.. 1.12
Sugar.....oz.. 2.4
Milk, evaporated, unsweetened, oz......5

The fact that all this food is not consumed in a day by the Regular Army man, who has a celebrated appetite, attests its adequacy. The saving is credited to the soldier and paid to him in cash and can be, and usually is, spent to procure for the company mess luxuries not provided by the Government. This saving amounts to an average of about $50 a month for each company.

The story of starving soldiers in the troop movement of Texas is absurd. I am of the opinion that it is a baseless sensation and that it is probably connected with the determination of partisan papers to discredit the troop movement and make political capital.

It has never been my fortune to see anything of war, except as a very youthful spectator in the later Civil War days, but when I realize the quantity and quality of the food supplied American soldiers now, and recall the parched corn and raw turnip that on some occasions was the fare of the Confederate, I wonder what Lee's men would have accomplished if they had been as well fed and armed.

How they would have laughed at the complaint of the militiaman that the Government had not given his company a professional cook! That charge I am afraid will stick. It is a way of remissness that governments have, and I doubt if even the soldiers of France who have been heroically battling at Verdun since February are furnished Parisian chefs.

On the order of the Secretary of War Gen. Sharpe, acting chief of the Quartermaster Corps, has furnished me a statement which shows how carefully the comfort and health of the American soldier is looked after. With the permission of the House I shall also print that in connection with my speech, but for the benefit of those who would not read so long a document I will give a brief summary.

The meat supply is first inspected at the great packing houses in Fort Worth, St. Louis, Kansas City, Omaha, Chicago, and Buffalo by specially trained officers of the Quartermaster Corps. Other officers are stationed wherever troops in large numbers are located, and before meats are distributed to the company and regimental cooks it is again inspected. Other food supplies are also inspected by experts, many of whom have had special training in the chemistry of foods.

The quality of the supplies and the general efficiency of the corps in distribution have been certified to time and time again by people wholly unconnected with the service.

Gen. Tasker H. Bliss, an officer of great experience and recognized ability, who was sent to the frontier to look into these charges of dereliction, says that the men are contented, the food abundant, excellent in quality, and of a suitable variety. That is what officers and men told him.

One gentleman remarked in my presence that "Uncle Sam appears to have furnished his soldiers nearly everything but nursing bottles." [Laughter.] Before quitting this subject of supplies I will ask the House to remember that no complaints have come from the Regulars. Solicitous governors who are candidates again seem to have forgotten them.

Mr. SMITH of New York. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield there?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. SLAYDEN. How much time have I remaining, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has 12 minutes remaining.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Then I regret I can not yield.

TRAVEL FACILITIES.

There has been unimportant complaint of the railway accommodations provided for the troops when going to the border. One State executive was, if correctly reported, vociferous in his demand that Pullman cars be supplied to the troops from his State. I wish it could have been done, Mr. Speaker, but if Pullman berths are to be supplied to all the men of the ever-increasing armies in all their movements we must open new mines of silver and gold to meet the bills. It is a new idea in campaigning. To pass two or three nights in an ordinary day coach once or twice in a lifetime is an endurable hardship, and one that the great majority of our people undergo in their travels.

It is evidence of their forethought and efficiency that our Quartermaster Corps long ago sought to provide for just such an emergency as the transfer of our Army to the Mexican border. Specifically they worked out the movement to Mexico a year ago with railway officials.

And may I digress right here long enough to say that the cooperation of these railway officials made the movement to Mexico the complete, easy, and brilliant success that it most assuredly was.

The men were moved for long distances and in many cases for hundreds of miles over single-track roads. Yet it was quickly, comfortably, and safely done. It took 300 trains of more than 3,000 ordinary passenger, tourist, and standard Pullman coaches, 400 baggage cars, 1,300 box cars, 2,000 stock, and 800 flat cars.

Think what it means to move over a hundred thousand men, their baggage, food, artillery, harness, and horses for distances that in some cases approximated 3,000 miles and have them converge on a remote frontier line.

It is an accomplishment that sheds equal glory on the military and the transportation people. More than 7,500 coaches and freight cars were suddenly withdrawn from ordinary commercial work, much to the inconvenience of business men, but no word of complaint was ever heard from them or from the railway people.

HOSPITAL AND MEDICAL SERVICE.

The parents and other relatives of the soldiers on the border have been needlessly alarmed by the meddling of a few people who dearly love the limelight and newspaper paragraphs. As Col. Birmingham, the Acting Surgeon General, says, "The sick rate is low and no epidemics of camp diseases are expected."

The truth is, Mr. Speaker, that the great majority of these men were never in as healthful a climate as they are at this time. There are no swamps, no malaria, and few of the dangers that might be expected in a colder section of the country. It is hot during the day, but there is little humidity, and the difference between day and night temperature always more than 20 degrees, and that insures comfortable nights and sound sleep.

The Surgeon General, by order of the Secretary of War, has sent me a report from every military camp in Texas, New Mexico, and Arizona, which I shall print, but will not take the time to read. I also append a list of the hospitals, number of beds, and other data bearing on the care of the sick and disabled. These, with a copy of the letter sent to a gentleman in Richmond, dispose of the sensational appeal for funds to provide hospitals.

I hope gentlemen of the House who are interested in the question and who have seen the absurd appeals sent out by some excited people for funds to provide the Army of the United States with hospital service and hospital conveniences will read that letter.

RECRUITING THE GUARD.

Mr. Speaker, one method of recruiting the guard has been resorted to in at least one State that the Army resents.

In giving me the data bearing on this question an officer connected with the War Department said:

It is a low conception of the military obligation of its citizens that will permit the paroling of felons to furnish its quota of troops to meet an emergency.

Yet that is precisely what was done in one instance.

When the history of the military movements of the first half of the year 1916 comes to be written I am sure it will be said that in sending the Army to the Mexican border the President did a wise and patriotic thing. It quieted the fears of the timid, manifested the purpose of the Government to protect its people, and prevented war. It will be justified by all the people. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Now I will yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of New York. I wanted to ask if the gentleman had made any personal investigation of transportation facilities, and whether he believed it was proper, for instance, to bring men to Texas from the State of New York in day coaches, with two men in a seat?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Well, I will publish with this a communication from the Quartermaster General, stating in detail what they did, and what they tried to do, and what they could not do because the railways did not have the equipment in the country for it. The gentleman means just two men to one seat?

Mr. SMITH of New York. Yes; two men to one seat.

Mr. SLAYDEN. That was not often done. Often, when they traveled in day coaches, according to the statement given to me by the Quartermaster General—and I do not doubt its accuracy—they had one seat; I mean by that one entire bench, to one man, sometimes two seats facing each other to three men, and then they had tourist Pullmans whenever they could be had. I have not time to read his statement or go into it in detail here, but it gives the number of tourist Pullmans that were available in the country, all that the corporations owned, and my recollection is that it was 786. But my memory may be at fault on that. The Quartermaster General, however, has copies of all these documents that he supplied to me, and he will no doubt be glad to give them to the gentleman if requested by him.

Mr. SMITH of New York. Has the gentleman from Texas heard that the railroads provided cars which they would not use in the ordinary traffic, because the traveling public would not ride in such cars?

Mr. SLAYDEN. I have not heard that statement.

Mr. SMITH of New York. The cars I saw in Buffalo that were used by soldiers looked as if they never had been used in 25 years, and there was a great deal of complaint about the carriage of the men of New York State, and practically all of them.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, it is the privilege of the soldier to grumble. It is a privilege that all of us have, and that all of us exercise, and I have no doubt if he had not that to complain about he would find something else. But soldiering is not a pastime. As I heard a major general say the other day—and I may not quote all his language, because it might be censored by the editor of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, but I will whisper to the gentleman from New York that he said to me confidentially—that they were d—d lucky they did not have to walk. [Laughter.]

Mr. Speaker, I wish to append these papers as a part of my remarks:

HOSPITAL AND MEDICAL SERVICE.

Memorandum for the Surgeon General in re bed capacity of hospitals in Southern Department.

Location.	Under construction.		Total beds.	Sick rate.
	Beds.	Will be completed.
Brownsville, Tex.	180	Under construction	360	No report, but low.
McAllen, Tex.	150	3 weeks	150	Do.
Llano Grande, Tex.	150		150	Do.
San Houston, Tex.	230		750	16 per 1,000 for garrison.
Laredo, Tex.	90		130	12 per 1,000.
Eagle Pass, Tex.	180	4 wards completed	180	7 per 1,000.
Del Rio, Tex.	60		60	No report, but low.
Marfa, Tex.		Ward hospital under construction, but no report as to bed capacity.
Bliss, Tex.	440		880	Do.
Columbus, N. Mex.				5 per 1,000.
Douglas, Ariz.	200		200	No sickness in militia.
Nogales, Ariz.			330	4 per 1,000.
Deming, N. Mex.	120		120	No troops.
Total	1,820		3,310	General sick rate very low.

In addition there are 6 field hospitals, each with capacity of 216 beds—total of 1,296, available for use in an emergency.

With the Militia there are 20 field hospitals, each of 216 bed capacity—total of 4,320.

Field hospitals are mobile hospitals, but available for care of sick in an emergency. Each regiment has a regimental hospital to care for minor cases.

A hospital train has been authorized—capacity, 210 patients—and is now being completed at Chicago and will be sent to the southern department within 10 days.

Plans are under way to evacuate from the border to Forts McPherson, Oglethorpe, Thomas, and Sheridan such sick or convalescents as may be necessary. The sick rate is low, and no epidemics of camp diseases are anticipated.

In addition to the above the Letterman General Hospital, United States Army, Presidio of San Francisco, San Francisco, Cal., can care for an additional 625 patients; the Army and Navy General Hospital, Hot Springs, Ark., for 150 additional, and the Walter Reed General Hospital, United States Army, Takoma Park, D. C., for 250 additional.

Each of these hospitals can expand its bed capacity to meet any ordinary requirement.

(Telegram.)

NEW YORK, July 28, 1916.

Surgeon General BIRMINGHAM,

Washington, D. C.

Reply to your telegram, found sanitary condition in encampments, both of the National Guard and regular troops along border and in Mexico; on the whole, in remarkably good condition. In majority conditions excellent and only in a few camps of National Guard were there minor details capable of improvement which, however, were being rectified in some of the camps of regular troops which have been occupied in the neighborhood of a year, conditions were excellent. Water supply as being employed in all camps safe. So far as could ascertain, food of good quality and sufficient in amount. Health of troops on the whole excellent, with no prevailing infectious disease. Some of men suffering from effects of exposure to sun, but majority appear to be becoming acclimatized.

Sanitation of the various camps is being most efficiently looked after by medical officers of the Regular Army Corps, and if present measures employed are continued in force there should be no reason to fear epidemics of infectious disease among these troops. Climatic conditions also not favorable for development of epidemic disease in camps at present time. Believe that the regular Medical Corps deserving of very high praise in the manner in which they are supervising sanitary matters, and particularly so because of rapid mobilization of such large number of troops, think Medical Corps may become overtasked, however, and would recommend increase which will certainly be necessary in case of increased demand. Sanitary conditions in Pershing's encampments in Mexico and condition of men excellent.

R. P. STRONG.

FORT SAM HOUSTON, TEX., July 28, 1916.

The SURGEON GENERAL,

Washington.

No. 96. Supplementing my telegram No. 91 there are at McAllen 77 sick under canvas, of whom 40 are venereal; at Douglas, 44, and at Llano Grande, 12. No other sick under canvas known. Latest rates of sick, dated July 27 and 28, are as follows: Per thousand; San Benito, Tex., 13; McAllen, Tex., 22; Marfa, Tex., 13; Del Rio, Tex., 14 for artillery and 17 for cavalry; El Paso, Tex., 23; New Mexico, District, 2 in Twelfth Cavalry and 30 in New Mexico Regiment. Yuma, Ariz., 27; San Antonio, Tex., 17; Llano-Grande, 19; Arizona District, 27; camp Eagle Pass, Tex., 10; Camp Gaillard, Eagle Pass, 32; camp Shafter, Eagle Pass, 38; Camp Ord, Eagle Pass, 17. The prevalent diseases in these Eagle Pass camps are vaccinia, venereal diseases, and mumps. Brownsville, Tex., 24; at Laredo, Tex. the organizations have sick rates ranging from 1 to 8 per thousand except one regiment, which has 17.

CROSBY.

JULY 19, 1916.

Memorandum for the Secretary of War.

1. Returning the letter of Mr. W. G. Mahone, of Richmond, Va., and inclosure from the American Committee for the Maintenance of the Border Hospital, Brownsville, Tex., signed by Mrs. Florence J. Harriman. The sensational report inclosed herewith, upon which is based an appeal for money contribution for hospitals for troops on the border, was evidently made by one who had no information concerning the actual conditions, as it is in effect wholly without foundation. In fact, the following equipment in the way of hospital accommodations for troops on the border is now in operation, is being rapidly extended, and has easily met the requirements up to date, and will readily meet all future requirements.

2. The Medical Department has supplied every need and request from the southern department. In addition to the various small hospitals at minor posts along the border we have established base hospitals at Fort Sam Houston and Fort Bliss, Tex. Base hospitals have also been authorized and are now being completed, supplied with personnel and equipment, at Brownsville, Eagle Pass, Laredo, Nogales, and Fort Crockett. The hospital at Fort Crockett is not in process of organization. Should it be necessary to establish this hospital, it will occupy the building of the post. In addition there are hospitals at Fort Huachuca, Clark, McIntosh, Columbus, Camp Douglas, Marfa, Del Rio, and Deming. There are also seven field hospitals with the troops on the border, each with a capacity of 216 beds. This does not include the field hospitals of the Organized Militia now on the border. Field hospitals, while mobile hospitals, are always available to take care of the sick with troops until they can be evacuated to base hospitals.

3. The Government has expended large sums of money constructing new hospitals and increasing the bed capacity of the hospitals already built. The southern department has at its disposal, in addition to the money already expended on hospitals, $300,000 to be used at the discretion of the department commander.

4. In addition the department has organized and is now having completed a hospital train for the transportation of the sick and wounded from the border stations to the base hospitals mentioned above.

5. The Army at this time has established general hospitals at the Presidio of San Francisco, Cal., with a maximum capacity of 953 beds; at the Army and Navy General Hospital, Hot Springs, Ark., 600 beds; and at Walter Reed General Hospital, Takoma Park, D. C., 320 beds. The department has completed plans for the establishment of general hospitals at Fort McPherson, Ga.; Fort Sheridan, Ill.; Fort Douglas, Utah; Fort Oglethorpe, Ga.; and Fort Benjamin Harrison, Ind., should conditions warrant. These hospitals will have a capacity of from 500 to 1,000 beds.

6. Plans have been completed for disinfecting trains in case it is necessary to enter Mexico, for the purpose of disinfecting clothing of the soldiers in order that they may be protected against typhus fever. All soldiers on the border have been vaccinated against smallpox and typhoid fever. Medical supplies are on hand sufficient for the needs of the Army now in the field or under orders for the border.

7. Attention is invited to the fact that for approximately five years the greater part of the Regular Army in the United States has been upon the Mexican border; the health conditions of the troops has at all times been excellent, and they have been and are now free from the usual camp diseases.

8. I believe the best interests of the Government can be served by announcing through the press bureau that the Government is not at this time in need of such committees as the American Committee for the Maintenance of the Border Hospital, Brownsville, Tex., and that appeals such as that filed by Mrs. Harriman convey a false impression and tend to create a feeling of insecurity and distrust in the minds of the people of the Government's ability to care for its soldiers. Contributions such as requested in the letter of Mrs. Harriman are absolutely unnecessary and the activities of such organizations should, especially at this time, be discouraged by the Government.

H. P. BIRMINGHAM,

Colonel, Medical Corps, Acting Surgeon General.

FOOD SUPPLY.

WAR DEPARTMENT,

OFFICE OF THE QUARTERMASTER GENERAL OF THE ARMY,

Washington, July 22, 1916.

HON. JAMES L. SLAYDEN,

House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. SLAYDEN: In compliance with your request of to-day, I beg to submit the following regarding food and its supply to the Army in connection with the present mobilization and service on the border, for any use you may see fit to make of it, not to be quoted, however, but to embody in the substance of your remarks if deemed desirable.

It can not fail to be known that Army officers and administrators are deeply concerned with the health, contentment, and efficiency of the troops. This is their first and anxious thought. To make proper provision regarding the soldier calls for the best thought and effort of their superiors at all times; and it can well be said that everything possible is being done to deal conscientiously with all the problems that confront the administration of the Army at this time, to remedy anything that may be found wrong, and to meet every emergency, so far as it is in their power.

It must be realized, too, that in a time like the present, and because of action upon such a vast scale, it is impossible to escape some mistakes and even hardships; but, as you know, sensational and harrowing accounts of conditions that appear in the press are so often untrue, and serve no purpose other than to increase the sufferings and inflict additional cruelties upon the mothers and others who are the real burden bearers at home, who are worried and wrought up about their relatives at the front; while the troops at the front do not seem to be so much worried about themselves as they are about those at home and as to how they are getting on and what is being done for their comfort and protection, so that these stories and methods of dealing with them act and react to the disadvantage and suffering of all concerned, besides tending to cripple and bring the military administration into disrepute.

The ration of the American soldier is the most liberal of any furnished to any army in the world (inclosed is a copy of Bulletin No. 21, war Department, 1914, which gives the components of our various rations).

And, due to the passage of the pure food and drugs act of 1906, and amendments since, as to the sale, etc., of poisoned or deleterious food, and also the meat-inspection law of 1906, and amendments since, against the use of meat that is "unsound, unhealthful, unwholesome, or otherwise unfit for human food," the food supply now is most carefully safeguarded.

Meat for use of the Army is rigidly inspected at the packing houses, the inspection beginning with the animal before it is killed and all through the after process by inspectors of the Agricultural Department stationed at the various packing houses throughout the country. In addition to this, meat inspectors and experts of the Quartermaster Corps are also stationed at great packing centers like Chicago, Kansas City, Omaha, Buffalo, and elsewhere where meat is being prepared or cured for the Army, and they also watch it through the whole process, from the killing of the animal until turned over to the Government.

In addition to the above safeguards, inspectors have been ordered stationed at all places where large bodies of troops are located, to inspect meats before their acceptance and use by the troops.

With regard to other food articles or stores purchased for the Army, trained experts at depots and purchasing stations carefully inspect all supplies purchased, and at stations where troops are actually located inspections are made by the officers who procure the supplies.

There are no subsistence or food supplies purchased in this office, as was done in the system pursued in 1898; so that the method of supply is entirely decentralized, all supplies being procured, as stated, at the great supply depots, where trained officers and inspectors test and inspect all foods purchased for the Army, or at posts by officers who purchase the particular supplies.

Experience so far under the new system or conditions is very gratifying, and as an evidence of the satisfactory conditions that obtain attention is invited to the experience in the late expedition to Vera Cruz in 1914, also to the supply of troops now on the Mexican border and those in Mexico, wherein no word of complaint has been received regarding the food furnished, which is very gratifying and is even more than was hoped for.

That you may get some additional idea as to the food supply, it may be stated that the purchasing officers at the depots, so far as the food supplies are concerned, were heretofore given a course, which was established at the Bureau of Chemistry, Department of Agriculture, under Dr. Wiley, in analytical chemistry, so far as it relates to qualitative analysis of foods and the use of the microscope in making food inspections. This course took several months, after the completion of which the officers went to a depot as assistants, where they were able to apply this knowledge and also gain further experience by seeing how the officer in charge of the depot made his inspections. From these depots they were then sent to Chicago, where they were given a thorough course of several months in meat curing and canning and the method of inspection of the product during all the stages of these processes. After that these officers were sent to take a course at the bakers' and cooks' schools, and then they were eligible for assignment to one of the purchasing stations as assistant to the purchasing officer.

We still have these officers; but since 1912 have been unable to give the officers who have joined the corps the course of training above indicated, for the reason that in the consolidation bill of 1912 the law prohibited any regimental officer from being responsible for property or funds at a post, although the law of 1901 reorganizing the Army had provided a regimental quartermaster, a regimental commissary, and three battalion or squadron quartermasters and commissaries, who were to be responsible for property relating to their units. The passage of the law of 1912 (act Aug. 24, 1912) prohibiting this necessitated the assignment of a larger number of officers of the Quartermaster Corps for duty at posts, precluding the possibility of continuing this course of training.

But, as before stated, we still have these trained officers, and, in addition, have at all the principal purchasing stations expert chemists who give assistance in making the inspections of foods submitted by bidders. All of our depots are also equipped with a Koelner flour-testing apparatus, and this apparatus is also in the schools for bakers and cooks.

In addition to this instruction of officers, noncommissioned officers of the department were also given instruction in the method of canning and preserving meat, and also given a course at the school for bakers and cooks.

The methods of organization and administration have enabled the troops to be promptly and adequately supplied, no matter where they were stationed.

The department has furnished the supplies in many instances where distress or suffering have befallen some part of our people, or in foreign lands, and upon all such occasions has received high encomiums for the manner in which it operated and the celerity and efficiency with which it performed the duty imposed upon it.

In addition to the various instances of relief furnished in this country in cases of conflagrations, floods, earthquakes, etc., the following cases are cited: The relief of the citizens in Porto Rico in 1900; the relief of the citizens of the French West Indies in 1902; and the relief sent to China by the Christian Herald through this department, with the consent of the Secretary of War, in 1907. In this latter case the editor of the Herald, Dr. Louis Klopsch, expressed his admiration for the organization and the effective work done by the department and stated:

"The services which you and your department rendered could not have been improved upon."

The militia troops come from homes where they enjoy daily the surroundings, comforts, and cooking accustomed to, and the change comes somewhat as a revulsion when they go from such homes and food and cooking to the camp and to the food and diet of the soldier.

The Army has also the latest designs and devices for cooking food in the field and baking excellent bread. The field bakery will compare most favorably with the very best types of this device in any of the European armies of to-day. In addition, there are trained cooks and bakers who prepare the food and bake the bread for the Army. These trained experts are taught in the various bakers' and cooks' schools that are established at certain places in the United States, in the Hawaiian Territory, and in the Philippines, and it is hoped soon to establish a school in the Canal Zone. At present the personnel of the bakers' and cooks' schools from Washington Barracks, D. C., from Fort Riley, Kans., and from Monterey, Cal., are all ordered to the border to continue instructions in the field and also at the same time to provide food for the soldier. And in these schools officers as well as enlisted men are being instructed in the art with the happiest results, for it is very essential that the officers should be able to supervise the feeding of their men, which requires unremitting attention, just as in the case of an athletic trainer, who never relaxes vigilance or care while the crew is under his charge. It is folly to train soldiers to the highest state of efficiency and then, by lack of care or attention for a short season, prepare the way to put them out of condition at the most critical moment.

Gen. Tasker H. Bliss, who is inspecting the militia troops on the border, in various reports within recent days, in inspecting the New York division and the troops of the Minnesota, Indiana, and Nebraska Infantry, declares that officers and men interviewed state that the rations are abundant in quantity, excellent in quality, and of suitable variety, and only in a very few cases stating that more variety is desirable. Also that there is a general spirit of contentment, for it is humanly hopeless to expect that every single individual will be found contented. This statement of Gen. Bliss was testified to and confirmed by Dr. Thomas Darlington, the representative of the National Civic Federation, who is in that region investigating conditions at first hand for the National Civic Federation.

From reports of inspectors general who are making inspections on the border and also in Mexico it is learned that wherever the troops have been stationed that the food supply has been adequate and fully met requirements.

In conclusion it may be stated that Regular troops at posts, when traveling, or when campaigning have very rarely complained. This is very largely due to the years of training and experience of Regular troops in caring for themselves. Such knowledge and experience the militia and Volunteers naturally lack, but this deficiency will be largely overcome in time, especially among the men who in their youth joined or served in some boy-scout organization and have such experience or received such instruction as tended to give them self-reliance and a knowledge of how to care for oneself.

HENRY G. SHARPE.

[First indorsement.]

OFFICE OF THE QUARTERMASTER GENERAL,

July 25, 1916.

TO THE ADJUTANT GENERAL OF THE ARMY:

1. In order that method of arranging for the transportation of the troops of the Organized Militia to the Mexican border may be clearly understood, the following general outline of the plans followed is submitted:

(a) Immediately on receipt of the order for mobilization of the Organized Militia, routing schedules were prepared in the Office of the Quartermaster General and furnished to all department quartermasters. These schedules specified the routing to be used by each organization from the State mobilization camp to the Mexican border and were arranged with a view to an expeditious movement, employing all available lines, so far as practicable, so that if it had become necessary to transport all the militia at once the carriers interested could have performed the service without congestion or delay.

(b) The railroads of the country, acting through a "special committee on cooperation with the military authorities" of the American Railway Association in conjunction with the Office of the Quartermaster General of the Army (whose office is charged, amongst other functions, with the transportation of troops), immediately set in order a plan of cooperation which had been contemplated for some time. The plan included the stationing of representatives of the American Railway Association at all mobilization points to furnish railway information to local quartermasters and to assist them in every way possible in arranging details of transportation with the railroads concerned; similar representatives were stationed at the headquarters of the Eastern, Central, Southern, and Western Departments. There was also located in the city of Washington, D. C., a bureau of the American Railway Association, with the object of keeping in constant touch with the railway situation throughout the country and with the Office of the Quartermaster General in the extraordinary transportation of troops which the railroads were suddenly called upon to effect.

(c) The Pullman Co., in order to centralize the furnishing of tourist sleepers and to utilize the available supply of these cars to the best possible service, changed the supervision of the supply and movement of tourist cars from Chicago, the headquarters of the company, to Washington, where they stationed a competent force, in order that the officials engaged in making this movement could be in immediate touch with the Office of the Quartermaster General.

2. To have effected the entire movement of all the troops moving in Pullman or tourist equipment would have required the use of approximately 3,000 cars. The Pullman Co. has made available for the movement of these troops 623 tourist cars, which is approximately 80 per cent of all cars of this class that it owns in the country. Tourist equipment has been furnished troops from the beginning of the movement whenever it has been possible to do so.

3. In case tourist cars could not be furnished, day coaches were usually supplied by the railroads at the rate of one double seat for each man. In some instances day coaches were supplied at the rate of two double seats (four seats) for each three men for at least a portion of the distance, which was due to the fact that the railroads anticipated that movements would be kept up in the same intensity throughout as in the first 48 hours, in which case there was not even sufficient railroad equipment immediately available to have promptly met the requirements of all troops expected to move. In cases where it has not been possible to furnish tourist equipment for the entire movement, the troops have been met en route and transferred to tourists in every case possible, so that the tourist equipment has been constantly in use.

4. Official reports from all military departments show that no organization moved in coaches with less space than three men to two double seats (four seats), and that whenever equipment was available the railroad of their own accord furnished one double seat (two seats) for each man. The number of men transported in coaches shows an average of about 30 to each coach.

5. Particular attention is invited to the fact that the effort to furnish tourist sleepers for organizations leaving in coaches did not cease until after the organization had actually reached its destination, and that wherever tourists could be secured enroute they were placed in the train and the men transferred from coaches to these tourists up to the number that could be comfortably berthed. Taking as an example some of the New York organizations: Headquarters, band, and Battery A, First Field Artillery, left Yonkers, N. Y., for Brownsville, Tex., on July 3, requiring four tourists. There was only one available at starting point, but the organization was furnished one at Poughkeepsie, N. Y., one at Buffalo, N. Y., and one at Sapulpa, Okla. The Seventy-fourth New York Infantry leaving Buffalo, N. Y., on July 5, required 25 tourists, but none were available at Buffalo, Chicago, or Kansas City. Four were furnished at Harrington, Kans., 13 at Caldwell, Kans., 3 at El Reno, Okla., and 5 at Fort Worth, Tex. These two examples are a fair illustration of the efforts made to furnish tourists for these organizations wherever they could be secured; even though it might be only for the last night or two that was to be spent on the train.

6. The militia troops began leaving their mobilization camps for the Mexican border about midnight June 26. On July 1 there were en route to the border from various sections of the United States 122 troop trains, carrying over 2,000 freight and passenger cars, with a total strength of 36,042 men. On July 4, at a time when the demands on the railroad companies were exceptionally heavy on account of the large holiday travel, 101 troop trains were en route to the Mexican border, and 52,681 militia troops were either at the border or en route thereto. As the movement did not begin until June 27, it will be readily seen that even had tourist cars been furnished for all of the first organizations to leave this equipment could not have been returned in time to have taken care of the following movements up to July 4. From the beginning of the movement up to the evening of July 24 there have been 102,835 militia troops transported to the border. The distances traveled by these organizations vary from 608 miles, in the case of the Louisiana troops, to 2,916 miles in the case of the Connecticut troops.

7. Some idea of the task imposed upon the railroads of the country by the transportation of the National Guard may be had when it is considered that 350 trains were necessary to carry the National Guard already transported to the border. Over 3,000 passenger cars, including standard Pullman and tourist cars and coaches, were required for the troops, and in addition about 400 baggage cars, 1,300 box cars, 2,000 stock cars, and 800 flat cars were used in transporting the material and equipment of the troops. A large number of locomotives were required in these movements, as will be realized when it is remembered that at each railroad division point a different locomotive was attached to each train section, and that the number of division points at which it was necessary to change locomotives varied from three, in the case of the Louisiana troops, to 24 in the case of the Connecticut troops.

8. With all these large number of persons transported in special trains but one accident involving any injury to the men has been reported, that occurring to a train of the First Minnesota Field Artillery, at Bay City, Tex., on July 23, in which three men were injured, two of them slightly and one seriously, but not dangerously.

9. Instructions were issued by all railroads concerned that the movement of troop trains were to be given preference over other travel, and, despite reports to the contrary, it is believed that this has been done in all cases. These reports have, no doubt, arisen from the fact that many of the western roads being single-track lines it has, in some cases, been necessary for the troop train to take the siding in order to meet a train proceeding in the opposite direction, but this action is often necessary on these roads with even the fastest limited trains. The passenger traffic manager of one of the largest south-western railroads wired this office:

"Instructions have been issued to all concerned that all military trains are to be given right of way. Sunshine Limited was sidetracked last night for the first time in its history. We are doing everything possible to facilitate handling this business."

It is also known that many of the roads canceled excursion trains (for July 4) already arranged for, in order to take the proper care of troop movements. Reports have been received in this office that troop trains were delayed by officers in command of troops for the purpose of giving the men on the train opportunity to take baths; for the purpose of exercising; for the purpose of consolidating sections at the request of commanding officers; and to allow troop trains to catch up with one another, in order to effect exchanges of equipment and supplies. An investigation conducted through the various department headquarters resulted in official statements from each of the departments that no information could be secured showing that any troop trains were sidetracked or delayed while troops were traveling. While these troop trains did not make the same time as the fastest passenger trains, the reason for this can be readily understood when it is considered that these trains, as a rule, were heavy trains of from 17 to 22 cars and were composed of both freight and passenger equipment, and that it is never safe to attempt to make the same time with freight cars as can be made with an all-passenger equipment train. The fact that over 100,000 troops were transported from all parts of the country to the Mexican border with but a single accident, and that of a comparatively minor character, and the celerity with which the trains were moving, has proved that the problem of rail congestion, the bugaboo of the mobilization of 1898, has been entirely eliminated.

10. With reference to the equipment of the militia with clothing and equipage, paragraph 455 (a), Army Regulations, 1913, provides that—"Governors of States and Territories and the commanding general of the District of Columbia Militia are required at all times to keep on hand, either at the various company armories or in suitable storehouses, a sufficient supply of arms, uniforms, and equipment to completely equip for the field the minimum number of men prescribed by the President for each organization, so that on being called into the service, any organization will be completely equipped from the stores on hand in the State, Territory, or the District of Columbia without calling on the War Department for assistance."

When the militia were called into the United States service it was found that none of the militia from any State was completely equipped with quartermaster supplies, and it became necessary to provide not only the articles lacking to complete the equipment but also a full outfit for all new men.

11. Congress has heretofore appropriated funds sufficient only to accumulate a reserve that would equip enlisted men required to bring the militia in the eastern department from peace to war strength (approximately enough to equip 45,000 additional men). It will thus be seen that the demands from the central, southern, and western departments, which also had to be met, soon exhausted the available stock, necessitating emergency purchases, which were resorted to, and all available merchants, mills, and producers were exhausted in an effort to procure supplies to meet the demands. Notwithstanding these efforts the output was not sufficient to meet all requirements immediately, but with a few minor exceptions it can be stated that the militia were equipped within 30 days from the time they were called into the service.

12. It might also be stated in this connection that some criticisms of failure to promptly equip certain militia organizations resulted from the fact that department commanders listed the States in the order in which they were to be supplied, it being impossible to issue supplies to all States at one and the same time in consequence of the limited tracking facilities and the enormous labor involved in packing and handling the supplies. This particular feature apparently has not been taken into consideration in all cases. A careful analysis of the result of the mobilization of the militia in so far as same affects the supply of clothing and equipage, indicates clearly that sufficient funds should be appropriated to provide an adequate reserve; also that the number of issue points should be increased and located more advantageously, considering shipping facilities and territory covered. This latter proposition is receiving the careful consideration of the department.

13. In this connection it may be stated that there was no lack of means of transportation such as escort wagons, ambulances, and harness for the equipment of militia organizations mustered into the service. As a matter of fact there were but 387 escort wagons and 2,094 single sets of harness required to complete the allowance for all States at the time that the organizations were mustered into the service. An ample supply of wagons and harness were on hand at the Jeffersonville depot to meet any shortages, and instructions were issued by the Quartermaster Corps to provide a stock of this transportation at the Fort Sam Houston and El Paso depots to equip troops upon arrival at the border, by shipments from the Jeffersonville depot.

14. With reference to supply of animals for militia organizations, it may be stated that funds appropriated by Congress only provided for the supply of a sufficient number of animals to replace wastage in the Regular Army to the extent of 10 per cent of the authorized peace allowance. No funds have ever been available for the purpose of accumulating animals for reserve purposes. As soon as the militia was called into the service the Quartermaster Corps advertised for a sufficient number of horses and mules to equip these organizations on a war footing. Instructions were issued to advertise for the animals by wire on June 19 last, bids were opened at seven points throughout the United States, and on June 27 contracts were awarded for the number of animals required, and deliveries commenced immediately. Request was made upon The Adjutant General of the Army on June 22 whether animals required for equipment of militia organizations should be sent to mobilization camps or be forwarded to auxiliary remount depots which were established at Fort Sam Houston and El Paso, Tex., for distribution upon arrival of the organizations at the border. In response to this request, department commanders were directed to wire to the commanding general, Southern Department, any shortages in field transportation of each militia organization, so that the commanding general, Southern Department, might take steps to complete it after arrival in his department, and instructions were given this office to send the animals required to complete the equipment of militia organizations to such place or places as may be designated by the commanding general, Southern Department. Reports show that a sufficient number of animals have been shipped to equip organizations which have so far arrived on the border, and animals are being shipped daily for the purpose of equipping the organizations which are still at mobilization camps. A large number of the animals contracted for are being delivered at points in Texas. These animals are acclimated and can be placed in service a short time after being received.

15. Data as to rations and food supply was furnished Mr. SLAYDEN July 22, 1916, an additional copy of which is inclosed herewith.

HENRY G. SHARPE,
Brigadier General, Quartermaster Corps,
Acting Quartermaster General.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. STEDMAN). The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa to extend his remarks in the RECORD?

There was no objection.

AMERICAN ARMS TO MEXICO: A CHRONOLOGY OF SELF-DESTRUCTION.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, the recent history of Mexico presents many aspects, most of them extremely complex, most of them discreditable alike to Mexico and to the United States. I desire to deal as briefly as may be with but one of these aspects, namely, the part which has been played by the United States during the past three or four years in supplying arms and munitions of all kinds to any Mexican who applied and who could afford to pay. This particular aspect, unlike most of the others, is not especially complex; but I venture to say that none is more disgraceful to the United States or more deeply to be deplored for the consequences which have followed and will follow in its train.

My remarks will be largely in the form of a narrative. I shall not attempt to enlarge upon or discuss the incidents which I shall relate; I shall seek to avoid, so far as may be, any expression of personal opinion. This is a chronology; let the hearer draw his own conclusions from the facts.

The recent history of the relations of the United States with Mexico in the matter of the exportation of arms and munitions of war begins with the joint resolution of Congress approved March 14, 1912, which provided:

That whenever the President shall find that in any American country conditions of domestic violence exist which are promoted by the use of arms or munitions of war procured from the United States, and shall make proclamation thereof, it shall be unlawful to export, except under such limitations and exceptions as the President shall prescribe, any arms or munitions of war from any place in the United States to such country until otherwise ordered by the President or by Congress.

This joint resolution is still in force.

On the date of his approval of the foregoing resolution, namely, March 14, 1912, President Taft issued a proclamation declaring that he had found "that there exist in Mexico such conditions of domestic violence promoted by the use of arms or munitions of war procured from the United States as contemplated by the said joint resolution"; and he admonished all citizens of the United States and every person to abstain from every violation of the provisions of the joint resolution above set forth, thereby made applicable to Mexico.

The effect of the resolution, coupled with the proclamation, was, of course, to impose a complete embargo upon the exportation of arms and munitions of war from the United States to Mexico.

From that time throughout the remainder of the Taft administration an embargo continued; when President Wilson was inaugurated domestic conditions in Mexico were, as is well remembered, in a condition even more chaotic than usual. President Wilson therefore wisely continued the embargo imposed by President Taft. Indeed, after he had been some six months in office, he expressly and formally indorsed the policy which had then been in operation about a year and a half. In his address to the Congress delivered August 27, 1913 (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, p. 3826), he says:

For the rest, I deem it my duty to exercise the authority conferred upon me by the law of March 14, 1912, to see to it that neither side to the struggle now going on in Mexico receive any assistance from this side the border. I shall follow the best practice of nations in the matter of neutrality by forbidding the exportation of arms or munitions of war of any kind from the United States to any part of the Republic of Mexico—a policy suggested by several interesting precedents and certainly dictated by many manifest considerations of practical expediency. We can not in the circumstances be the partisans of either party to the contest that now distracts Mexico, or constitute ourselves the virtual umpire between them.

These were strong, and as I believe, unanswerable arguments. No dissent to them was expressed anywhere in this country. Yet within six months from that time the President had completely reversed himself and discarded the policy which had continued for two years. By proclamation issued February 3, 1914, President Wilson revoked the Taft proclamation of March 14, 1912. The effect of this, of course, was to permit the free and lawful exportation of arms and munitions of war of all kinds from the United States to Mexico.

An interesting sidelight upon what the issuance of this proclamation meant to sorely stricken Mexico is found in "A Diplomat's Wife in Mexico," written by Mrs. O'Shaughnessy, wife of Nelson O'Shaughnessy, who during this period was our chargé d'affaires at the Mexican capital. In her diary under date February 1, 1914 (p. 174), she says:

To-night has come the long-feared cable from Washington stating that the President intends to raise the embargo on arms and ammunition. * * * We scarcely know what to think; we are dazed and aghast. * * * This act will not establish the rebels in Mexico City or anywhere else, but will indefinitely prolong this terrible civil war and swell the tide of the blood of men and women, "and the children—oh, my brothers."

Recent history has amply justified Mrs. O'Shaughnessy's predictions of the prolongation of the "terrible civil war."

Again, her diary says on February 3 (p. 175):

The second telegram has just come, saying that the President intends, within a few hours, to raise the embargo. * * * I keep repeating to myself: "God! God! God!" A generation of rich and poor alike will be at the mercy of the hordes that will have new strength and means to fight, and eat, and pillage, and rape their way through the country. * * * It is what Mr. Lind has wanted for months. * * * Villa and Carranza will not arrive in the city together. No street is broad enough to permit the double entry of their contrary passions, violence and greed.

The newspapers of the day after the issuance of the proclamation carried the following message, signed by Gen. Villa himself at Juarez:

Raising the embargo on arms is an act of justice on the part of the American Government toward the people of Mexico and signifies the prompt pacification of the Republic. Within three months the war will have ended.

Other reports from the border carried such headlines as, "Villa waves his hat in joy"; "Carranza elated," etc. A dispatch stated that 4,000,000 rounds of cartridges and 20,000 rifles were already upon the Mexican border ready for immediate shipment to the Mexican consignees. The next day the dispatches stated that—

Arms are flowing to the border. Two million rounds are at Brownsville awaiting export. The supply will be sufficient for the revolutionists of all northeastern Mexico.

Thoughtful men in this country, whether remembering the strong words of President Wilson the previous August or reasoning simply from common sense, were astounded and aghast at this change of policy. It is not too much to say that they foresaw what has in fact happened as a direct result of the lifting of the embargo. Army officers especially, from their intimate knowledge of the situation, were able with unusual distinctness to read the handwriting on the wall.

I quote a Washington dispatch to a New York paper reading as follows:

Army officers are not pleased over the lifting of the embargo. They have taken the position all along that it would be a dangerous experiment to permit the unrestricted shipment of arms and ammunition into Mexico for the constitutional forces. Their argument is that if occasion should arise for intervention in Mexico by the United States the constitutionalists would probably join forces with the Huerta following and use against the American troops the arms that had been supplied to them through American sources.

It is not necessary to retell the story of our first Wilson war with Mexico in April, 1914. It is not necessary to do more than refer to the battle of Vera Cruz, at which some 20 American soldiers, sailors, and marines lost their lives and some 50 were more or less grievously wounded.

The country promptly demanded the restoration of the embargo. The debates of April 23, 1914, in the Senate are particularly interesting. (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, pp. 7120 to 7132.) Senator LODGE spoke, in part, as follows:

Three or four days ago 2,700 stand of arms went over the Mexican border to Villa. Some have gone since, I am told; I do not know how truly. This movement at Vera Cruz was precipitated for the military reason—which I do not question to be a sound one from a military point of view—that it was necessary to seize the arms going to Huerta, because these arms would be used against the forces of the United States and that it was the most obvious military prudence to stop them for that reason, the force of which I entirely admit. Yet they were allowed to go over the northern border at the same time. You can not do much more for any ally than that. And now we see that Mr. Carranza disapproves of what has been done at Vera Cruz. Hardly friendly in an ally whom we are arming. It will be but a short time when those men of the north are united with the rest of Mexico against us. That is not an unreasonable anticipation. Why are we not taking the ordinary military precaution there? Why are we allowing more arms to go into those parts of Mexico? They will be used against our armies within 30 days.

There is brought to my mind very strongly, sir, that verse that was written by James Russell Lowell at the time of the Civil War:

"You wonder why we're hot, John?
Your mark wuz on the guns;
The neutral guns that shot, John,
Our brothers an' our sons."

Now we are letting the guns and munitions of war go into Mexico, and by and by the mark on the guns in northern Mexico which shoot our brothers and our sons will not be neutral marks; they will have our own marks upon them.

I say, Mr. President, the time has come to stop, as we have stopped at Vera Cruz, the admission of any arms into the Mexican Republic. If war, alas, or armed intervention can not be escaped, that is the surest way to bring this war to a close. That is the method the President adopted in order to prevent Mr. Huerta from protracting resistance to our troops, and yet arms are going in freely over the border, and I do not think I am mistaken when I say we are in danger of a fight on that border at any minute. I do not want to see those people furnished with weapons.

The thing that seemed worse to me, more than anything else in the whole framing of the issue with Mexico, was this putting us in the attitude of an ally of Pancho Villa. * * * I think every military reason demands that we should put an embargo on arms everywhere, and I think the distinction that we are making is one that is utterly false, both from the military and the moral point of view.

Senator FALL, of New Mexico, pointed out that the Villa troops—are receiving constant shipments of arms, and that the shipment of arms is not being stopped, but is continuing.

Senator SMITH of Michigan stated—that protests by myself and others were made to the President last February, when he threatened to remove the embargo and give arms and ammunition more freely to Villa and Carranza, and he was urged by members of the Committee on Foreign Relations not to take such action, as it would be a backward step and the guns that he permitted to be taken across the border might later be used against our own soldiers. I told him at that time that if the revolutionists in northern Mexico were entitled to American arms they were entitled to recognition as belligerents; that it would be lawful to thus recognize a state of war, but that it would be diabolical to give them arms with which to kill one another.

The Washington Post of that morning contained an article with headlines as follows:

Arms free to rebels—President declines to renew the embargo—Urged by military men—Chief officers of both branches of the service believe it wrong to permit passage of guns, which may be turned upon United States soldiers—Secretary of State trusts Constitutionalists.

The text of the article stated that—for nearly a week the General Staff of the Army, headed by Maj. Gen. Leonard Wood, has urged repeatedly that a general embargo be declared. At first this step was desired not only to prevent the shipment of munitions of war to Gen. Huerta, but also to the Constitutionalists, on account of the possibility that the latter as well as the other might use them against United States soldiers, sailors, and marines.

Yielding to the importunities which came to him from every section of the country, the embargo was, that night or the following day, again put in force by President Wilson, though without presidential proclamation. It was stated, however, that this action—was due to the implied threat of Carranza to resent the invasion of Mexican territory by the United States as an act directed as much against the Constitutionalists as against the Huerta authorities.

In the light of the foregoing Senate debates it can hardly be urged in behalf of the administration that it had not, in February as well as in April, been aware of the powerful and unanswerable arguments against the raising of the embargo so long as conditions continued in Mexico as they then existed. As President Wilson himself had pointed out, there was no analogy whatever between the continuance of an embargo of this sort and the imposition of an embargo upon exportations to the European belligerents. To allow arms to go to Europe is, upon analysis, a measure of self-protection; to allow arms to go to Mexico is a species of self-murder.

The Vera Cruz storm blew over somewhat more quickly than might have been expected. As early as May 8 we find Villa urging the raising of the embargo, which, he said, was—protracting the struggle needlessly. Every humanitarian consideration argues for the lifting of the embargo. The sooner we can procure the arms and ammunition that we need, the sooner the country will be pacified.

And again, on May 15, in an interview, Villa said:

How can we take Mexico if we have no ammunition?

To an administration which yearned above all things to be an ally of Villa these arguments were no doubt exceedingly persuasive; they did not, perhaps, appeal to the rank and file of the American people as especially cogent.

At all events on May 16, 1914, came another somersault. The dispatches informed us that thereafter the embargo would apply only to shipments across the land frontier, but that arms and ammunition might be freely exported by sea to Mexican ports. I quote from the newspapers of that date:

The Constitutionalists (Villa and Carranza) will probably receive large shipments of arms and ammunition through Tampico. The rebels need them. Wilson has stopped shipments of guns and ammunition across the frontier, but the order of prohibition applies only to the border. The War and State Departments make it plain that it is not unlawful to ship from New York or Galveston to Mexican ports, including Tampico.

The same news article refers to the vast quantities of arms and ammunition that crossed the Mexican border destined to Villa and Carranza between the lifting of the embargo in February and its reimposition in April.

The bars having thus again been let down, the rush of exportations of explosives, and so forth, was immediately resumed.

The months of May and June, 1914, were noteworthy for the sessions of the A. B. C. mediators at Niagara Falls. The newspapers of June 4 report, apparently verbatim, an interview with Secretary of State Bryan, in the course of which he said that—

The mediators had an understanding with the United States that pending their efforts at Niagara Falls the United States would permit no arms to be shipped into Mexico either across the border or by water from American ports.

About the same time appeared the statement that the complete embargo might be reimposed, as the administration "wishes to avoid the charge that arms once within the grasp of the American officials were later turned against American soldiers." Mr. Bryan's statement proved that it was a point of honor on the part of the United States, pending the conduct of the mediation proceedings, that no arms or munitions should be sent into Mexico either by land or by sea. Yet, as we have already seen, the embargo of May 16 in nowise applied to shipments by sea from the United States to Mexican ports. On June 2 the steamship Antilla left New York for Tampico carrying 1,500 to 2,000 cases of ammunition containing some 3,000,000 cartridges and two aeroplanes. She landed her cargo safely on June 11. Not only did the United States not interfere with this procedure, although in honor bound so to do, but we actually had our Navy keep watch at the Mexican port to prevent the possibility of any interference by Huerta with the safe landing of the munitions. On June 6 another million cartridges were shipped on the steamship Sunshine from Galveston to Tampico. On June 10 still another million rounds, said to have been destined for Mexico, cleared from Baltimore on the steamship Arcadia.

All these shipments were known at the time and were freely discussed in the newspapers. There is no doubt that all of them constituted an absolute violation of the Bryan pledge to the mediators. It is said, however, that Villa had teased President Wilson that he be permitted to get his hands on these particular cargoes, and that thereafter the United States might do as it saw fit. In any event, the United States did not interpose any objection, and, as we have seen, even assisted in the safe conduct of at least one of the cargoes.

These three cargoes, and very likely many more, having thus departed for their destination, the United States on June 10 again imposed an absolute embargo by sea as well as by land.

Thereafter exportations of arms and munitions nevertheless continued with unabated activity. The schooners Sunshine, Grampus, and Susan made six trips from Galveston to Tampico, each time carrying heavy shipments of war materials. All were consigned to Habana, but "by stress of weather"—more than once it was a flat calm—they were "blown into" Tampico.

The Sunshine, for example, landed 2,050 cases of ammunition on June 29. In all there were probably not less than 6,000,000 rounds of cartridges, together with many other supplies, introduced into Mexico during the month of June. "There is more than one way to skin a goose." The dispatches of July 23 state that in spite of the embargo Villa had gotten together across the border—in addition to the sea shipments which, as we have seen, were very large—about 8,000,000 rounds of ammunition during this period.

Then on September 10, 1914, the embargo was again lifted, for what reason mortal man can not perceive. This state of affairs continued for over a year—until October 20, 1915. During this period, as I shall later show in detail, we were making constant and tremendous shipments of all kinds of war materials. During this same period American lives were being lost at the hands of Mexicans and American property was being destroyed. Late in the year 1914 occurred the so-called Naco affair, in which from 50 to 60 Americans living on or near the border were killed and wounded. Of this outrage former President Roosevelt in "Fear God and Take Your Own Part" says (pp. 254, 255):

Perhaps the most extraordinary feature of the whole Naco affair is that at that point there is an open port of entry. The arms and ammunition used to kill American women and children and American soldiers were openly purchased in the United States and openly delivered through a port of entry to the warring factions in Mexico.

During this entire year, too, peace was "raging" throughout northern Mexico. Anarchy, starvation, rapine, desolation, and chaos were the order of the day, and to that order the United States contributed mightily by furnishing in huge quantities the fuel to fan the flames.

On June 9, 1915, the New York Times, regarded as an administration paper, said:

The best course would be to prohibit, as we have a right to do, further supplying of arms and ammunition to any of the factions. If by evil chance our soldiers should be compelled to invade Mexico to restore order it would be folly to let the various bands of bandits and revolutionists be equipped to oppose the invasion. It is hardly necessary to point out that the case presents not the slightest analogy with the question raised over the export of arms to European belligerents. * * * Probably if the exportation of arms is stopped there will be no need of armed intervention.

The very next day the dispatches state that—in anticipation of a renewal of the embargo on June 15 Villa rushed 5,200 rifles and 1,000,000 rounds of ammunition south to-day on a special train.

The expected embargo against Villa, however, did not actually arrive until October, 1915. Villa, who had been in high favor with the administration during most of its tenure of office, had lately been losing ground. The administration had at length decided that the Carranza brand of desperado held out more hope than did the Villa type. Carranza had been going up in the scale as Villa descended. On October 12, 1915, what amounted to an impartial embargo on shipments of arms and ammunition into Mexico was put into rigid effect at Douglas, Ariz., supplies consigned both to the Villa and Carranza factions being held up. Villa, however, had been making hay while the sun was shining. At this time he jocosely stated that he had enough arms and ammunition to keep on fighting for at least two years.

Three months ago the Villista agents let three contracts for a great quantity of arms and ammunition and these contracts have all been delivered, the supplies having entered Mexico several weeks ago.

On October 19 President Wilson recognized Carranza.

On the same date he issued a proclamation practically identical with the Taft proclamation of 1912 reestablishing the embargo on arms and ammunition destined to Mexico. Simultaneously, however, by Executive order, he exempted Carranza and his forces from this prohibition. The net result of the prohibition, therefore, was that Carranza could get all the arms which he wished while Villa could, lawfully at least, get none.

The winter of 1915-16 was comparatively uneventful, although the clouds were gathering. The Santa Ysabel massacre, in which 19 Americans lost their lives at the hands of Villa, occurred January 12, 1916.

With the spring of 1916 came the Columbus raid, Parral, Glenn Springs, and finally Carrizal.

The Columbus raid occurred on March 9, 1916. On March 12 the United States revoked all permits held along the border for exporting explosives into Mexico. On the 15th 500,000 cartridges consigned to Gen. Calles, military governor of Sonora, were seized by United States soldiers. March 16 the Carranza consul demanded the surrender of the cartridges, but was refused. On the same day, on request of the State Department, orders were sent to our collectors of customs at seaports and along the borders to hold up all shipments of arms, ammunition, and explosives consigned to Mexico except "such as, it is clearly established, are for the Carranza government." A large consignment for Villa was then on the way south.

On March 18, consequently, Carranza was permitted to take over the half a million cartridges of which the military authorities had sought to prevent the delivery. March 24, 60 cases of cartridges were turned over to Gen. Calles, each containing 1,000 rounds.

The foregoing are among the references which I find in the newspapers to such exportations, but represent only a small fraction of the shipments actually permitted to proceed.

Indeed there is considerable evidence that arms were freely, though, of course, illicitly, passing across the border to Villa who, it was stated, "will not be hampered by lack of ammunition."

During all this time, moreover, the transit by sea was entirely uninterrupted. Nine days after the raid on Columbus the Ward Line steamer Esperanza arrived in Vera Cruz with 1,350,000 rounds of ammunition, all soft-nosed or dum-dum bullets, consigned to the Carranza government, together with other munitions of war. About this same time Gen. Pershing and his forces were marching south in Mexico in pursuit of Villa and with orders to take him dead or alive. It did not take a prophet or the son of a prophet to know that Carranza was no true friend of ours and that we might soon be engaged in hostilities with him also. Yet the instruments of self-destruction were going south in great quantities.

On March 29 the Ward Line steamer Saratoga touched at Habana with 1,243 cases of ammunition for Carranza.

On April 1 the Ward Line steamer Monterey landed at Vera Cruz another 1,350,000 rounds of soft-nosed cartridges and other munitions of war for Carranza.

On May 13, a month after the Carranzista garrison at Parral had attempted to ambush the American expeditionary troops under Maj. Tompkins and had attacked them, the Esperanza landed at Vera Cruz 300,000 rounds more ammunition for Carranza. This cargo was, I am informed, transshipped in Cuba.

Between May 13 and the 1st of June still another shipment of arms was unloaded at Vera Cruz for Carranza.

Recurring to the border exportations within a month after Columbus, on April 11, 332,000 rounds of ammunition left Laredo, Tex., for Carranza, and on April 14 a dispatch from Douglas, Ariz., stated:

The State Department has issued a permit to the de facto government of Mexico to pass 1,000,000 rounds of small-arm ammunition across the line to Agua Prieta during the next few days. The ammunition is now en route to the border.

The pursuit of Villa in March last may be regarded as the second Mexican war of the administration. Last month came the break with Carranza over the Carrizal and other outrages, the mobilization of our troops at the Mexican border, and the beginning of the third war.

On June 20 Mr. Lansing's note to the Carranza government was sent, and tucked away in it we find the last—or rather the latest—embargo on ammunition, although the language plainly shows that its removal may be expected ere long if conditions change. The language in question follows:

As long as this menace continues and there is any evidence of an intention on the part of the de facto government or its military commanders to use force against the American troops instead of cooperating with them, the Government of the United States will not permit munitions of war or machinery for their manufacture to be exported from this country to Mexico.

Mr. HILL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROGERS. I beg the gentleman's pardon, but I have but little time.

Mr. HILL. I simply wanted to ask the gentleman was not the embargo lifted and is it not now lifted from all foodstuffs to Mexico?

Mr. ROGERS. That is true.

Mr. HARRISON. Does the gentleman from Connecticut object to that?

Mr. HILL. I do object to feeding an enemy while we have 100,000 American boys on the border waiting for them to attack us.

Mr. HARRISON. The speech of the gentleman from Massachusetts carries with it, indirectly at least, a criticism of what the administration has done respecting the embargo. Is the gentleman going to point out in each particular where he objects to it and what he would have done under the same circumstances if he had had the authority to act?

Mr. ROGERS. I can tell the gentleman from Mississippi exactly what I would have done. I would have left in effect the embargo which Mr. Wilson found when he came into office and which he indorsed when he delivered his address to Congress in August, 1913, until Mexico was in fact and in every way absolutely pacified, and until all possibility had passed that our arms and munitions should be turned against the American soldiers. [Applause on the Republican side.]

There the situation now stands, although El Paso dispatches in the newspapers of July 8 indicate an attempt on the part of Mexico to secure still another removal of the embargo. No man can, in the light of the past, say just how soon the administration will, in its wisdom, do what it has so often done before.

No portrayal of what the American policy has done in Mexico could be more vivid than that which Mr. Lansing himself furnishes in the note of June 20. He says:

The Government of the United States has viewed with deep concern and increasing disappointment the progress of the revolution in Mexico. Continued bloodshed and disorders have marked its progress. For three years—

Wilson first raised the embargo two years and four months previously—the Mexican Republic has been torn with civil strife; the lives of Americans and other aliens have been sacrificed; vast properties developed by American capital and enterprise have been destroyed or rendered nonproductive; bandits have been permitted to roam at will through the territory contiguous to the United States and to seize, without punishment or without effective attempted punishment, the property of Americans, while the lives of citizens of the United States who ventured to remain in Mexican territory or to return there to protect their interests have been taken, in some cases barbarously taken, and the murderers have neither been apprehended nor brought to justice. It would be difficult to find in the annals of the history of Mexico conditions more deplorable than those which have existed there during these recent years of civil war.

It would be tedious to recount instance after instance, outrage after outrage, atrocity after atrocity, to illustrate the true nature and extent of the widespread conditions of lawlessness and violence which have prevailed during the last nine months in particular—the frontier of the United States along the lower Rio Grande has been thrown into a state of constant apprehension and turmoil because of frequent and sudden incursions into American territory and depredations and murders on American soil by Mexican bandits, who have taken the lives and destroyed the property of American citizens, sometimes carrying American citizens across the international boundary with the booty seized. American garrisons have been attacked at night; American soldiers killed and their equipment and horses stolen; American ranches have been raided, property stolen and destroyed, and American trains wrecked and plundered.

The embargo against Carranza was raised eight months before—

The attacks on Brownsville, Red House Ferry, Progreso post office, and Las Pelades, all occurring during September last, are typical. In these attacks on American territory Carranzista adherents and even Carranzista soldiers, took part in the looting, burning, and killing. Not only were these murders characterized by ruthless brutality, but uncivilized acts of mutilation were perpetrated.

Yet it is interesting to note that the recognition of Carranza occurred in October, 1915, the month following the acts of which Secretary Lansing complains. Mr. Lansing goes on with much cumulative evidence to the same effect, but perhaps enough has been quoted to indicate the administration version of the result of its policy, in which, beyond question, the permission to export arms and ammunition played a most important part.

The exact number of American lives which have been lost during the last three years is in dispute; indeed, it is, as a practical matter, probably incapable of ascertainment. In a report to the United States Senate by the President upon affairs in Mexico submitted February 17 last (S. Doc. No. 324) it appears that the number is about 112 for the years 1913, 1914, and 1915. This total, however, does not include the Vera Cruz deaths nor, of course, the outrages of the last six months. Men familiar with border and Mexican conditions generally say that the number of Americans who have lost their lives in the past three years is between 275 and 300.

I have been furnished by the Department of Commerce with figures which show officially the amount of our exportation of arms and explosives for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1914, June 30, 1915, and for the 11 months ending May 31, 1916. The table referred to is as follows:

Periods year ended June 30—	Dynamite.		Gunpowder.		Other explosives, value.	Car- tridges, value.	Fire- arms, value.	Total.
	Pounds.	Value.	Pounds.	Value.
1914.....	5,561,725	$801,212	129,182	$15,006	$63,532	$749,995	$488,274	$1,923,039
1915.....	2,395,704	280,877	36,198	25,599	116,247	2,896,244	1,280,442	4,599,379
1916 <sup>1</sup> .....	3,343,957	450,113	50,435	20,771	159,201	1,969,114	508,428	3,107,627

<sup>1</sup> 11 months to May 31.

During March, 1916, in the face of the Columbus raid, $202,774 worth of cartridges entered Mexico, and in April $51,875 worth entered Mexico. This, of course, is confined to exports of which the Department of Commerce, through the Treasury Department, has official knowledge. It does not indicate any exportations which have illegally crossed the border or which have reached Mexico from the United States via Cuba. Since July 1 last, as the foregoing figures disclose (taking cartridges at $42 per thousand), nearly 50,000,000 rounds of cartridges have been sent to Mexico through the customhouse. How much more has also been sent no one can say. Practically every one of the cartridges which has gone forward is of the soft-nosed or dum-dum type, abhorrent to civilization. The spectacle of the civilized United States acting as purveyor of these accursed things has inspired a poem which has been widely circulated in Mexico:

THE DUMDUM.

It's cursed and it's damned and it's banned by the law;
It's cruel, no end; it's satanic and raw.
No sportsman will use it, except in a pinch.
When man eaters, crouching, are ready to clinch.

But—
Our Christian country permits it to go,
Without let or hindrance, to poor Mexico.

The allies protested, when came the great war,
That Germans were outlawed barbarians, for
They shot the dread soft nose. The world stood aghast
At this savage return to the Hun-ridden past.

But—
That is the only ball patriots know
In their looting and shooting of poor Mexico.

It kills when it strikes and it flies with a moan;
It rips out the flesh and it blasts out the bone.
There's no use for first aid or hospitals where
The double-damned dum-dum drones dense in the air.

But—
Our pious President fixes it so
It goes in a stream into mad Mexico.

Are we "serving mankind" and the "eighty per cent"?
Our only excuse is, our course was well meant.
Look! now the lead points are shot back at our boys,
And tear out their lungs. So they die without noise.

But—
Supinely we sit, and we let dum-dums go
To blood-drunk, desperate, red Mexico.
Let us pray.

As I have recited in detail, one of the numerous liftings of the embargo occurred on September 10, 1914. The removal of the embargo permitted death and devastation to pour into Mexico. Yet the day before the embargo was raised President Wilson had issued a proclamation appointing a—day of prayer and supplication—

And requesting—

all God-fearing persons * * * to unite their petitions to Almighty God that, overruling the counsel of men, setting straight the things they can not govern or alter, taking pity on the nations now in the throes of conflict * * * He vouchsafe His children healing peace again and restore once more that concord among men and nations without which there can be neither happiness nor true friendship.

Is it any wonder that the friends of Mexico and the friends of mankind found it difficult to square the act with the profession? Is it truly "a service to humanity" to let the Mexicans murder each other and murder us with dumdum bullets? Is it truly the highest altruism to permit frequent and long-continued "open seasons" on American citizens in Mexico or, oftentimes, within their own borders near Mexico? When the claim is made that the administration has kept the country at peace, does the peace not resemble that of which Jeremiah, the prophet, sang:

For they have healed the hurt of the daughter of my people slightly, saying, "Peace, peace, when there is no peace."

Mr. Speaker, I have supported President Wilson by my vote and by word of mouth when the United States seemed to be standing face to face with a foreign power. I upheld the administration in the Vera Cruz incident and in the submarine controversy with Germany. I trust I shall never deviate from this course, whatever may be the politics of the man in the White House.

But I can not condone the course of the present administration in connection with munitions exportation to Mexico. Let me very concisely review what I have before given in detail. When President Wilson was inaugurated the Taft embargo against shipping arms to Mexico was in effect. February 3, 1914, President Wilson raised the embargo. April 24, 1914, at the time of the Vera Cruz affair, he restored the embargo. May 16, 1914, he raised the embargo so as to permit exportations by sea. June 10, 1914, he absolutely restored the embargo, sea and land. September 10, 1914, he raised the embargo. October 19, 1915, he restored the embargo, simultaneously excepting the forces of Carranza. June 20, 1916, he restored the general embargo. Each time the embargo was imposed the action was taken as the result of outrages upon Americans, which surpassed even the ordinary run of outrages to which we are, alas, somewhat benumbed. Each time the embargo was lifted the action was taken because of a slight improvement in the internal condition in Mexico; yet at no time during the past three years could any man truly state that the internal troubles of Mexico were at or approaching an end.

It has been plain throughout to the most casual onlooker that even when conditions were relatively improved the flames were only smoldering. It required neither prescience or omniscience to see that the arms and cartridges with which we were supplying the desperados of Mexico might at any time be turned against us as they had repeatedly been turned against us in the past. We must never forget that our dead were killed with American ammunition and that without American ammunition they would not have met their dreadful fate. Mexico herself makes little or none, and during the last two years Europe has, of course, had other uses for hers and vast quantities beside. So the United States has been practically the sole purveyor. When we think of the hideous traffic with Mexico, authorized—nay, aided and abetted by the administration—our cheeks must blush for shame. The story is one of the blackest and saddest in our entire history.

Every American should read an article in the August (1916) McClure's, by Potter Emerson Browne, entitled "Scars and Stripes," in the course of which he says:

Villa is still free. Villa is still sore. Villa still has men and guns, and munitions; munitions that we gave him!

And with these men, and guns, and the munitions that we gave him he crosses the border one night and slaughters the men and women of Columbus, N. Mex.; American men, American women, and on American soil! Yes; he kills on American soil American men and American women; and he kills them with American guns and American powder and American bullets given him by the American Government! * * *

And who is Carranza? A vain and purblind old gentleman that we ourselves helped put in power and to whom we have furnished arms and ammunition that again have been used to kill us with! * * *

And until we prepare ourselves both physically and mentally to administer that force we can make up our minds, and make 'em up now, that just so long will American men, American women, and American children be slaughtered on American soil. Pray God it won't be done any longer with American guns and American ammunition. That much, at least, we can prevent.

I have meant to tell the story fairly, without modification or enlargement. I have meant to state the facts impartially, leaving the hearer to form judgment for himself. I wonder if a single true American citizen of our hundred million can take pride in the recital.

In closing I desire to quote a poem which appeared in the Portland Oregonian on the date of the funeral of Lieut. Henry Adair, killed at Carrizal, Chihuahua, by an American bullet from an American gun:

ADAIR OF CARRIZAL.

[By Dean Collins.]

I had thought our hearts would leap, Adair,
That our hands would clutch at the sword and gun;
I had thought that our spirit of old would flare
At the tale of the deed that you have done.
But silent we walk and silent you lie,
And "Peace," says the bishop, above your pall—
But the blood you shed is red, how red!
Red on the sands of Carrizal.

I had thought we would rise on the wings of fame;
That a river of swords would southward flow,
And voices of battle would cry your name,
As they cried the name of the Alamo.
But we mutter our prayers for the rest of your soul—
And how shall rest on your spirit fall
When we bow the head, while the blood you shed
Cries from the sands of Carrizal?
I had thought—but my thoughts were lies, Adair,
For my heart was not with that art imbued
That fashions a diplomatic snare
To throttle a nation's gratitude.
The statesmen build up the forms of peace,
Where words look large and where lives look small,
While my hot cheeks flame with the blush of shame
For the cry, unanswered, from Carrizal.
The funeral honors are done, Adair,
And under the earth your body lies;
Thrilling and sweet on the vibrant air
That last long wail of the bugle dies.
Well was your duty done, Adair,
And duty to us alone may call;
And the blood you shed, how red, how red!
Cries like a bugle from Carrizal.

[Applause on the Republican side.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Sisson] is recognized. [Applause.]

THE DEMOCRATIC PARTY AND THE FARMER.

Mr. Sisson. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I want to thank my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. Rogers] for giving me a portion of the time allotted to him. Before I discuss the matters I had intended to discuss I want to say this in view of the speech just made by my friend Mr. Rogers from Massachusetts. I am at a great loss to know just exactly how it would be possible for anyone occupying the position that President Wilson now occupies to have handled the situation in Mexico any better than he has handled it, and at the same time keep the country out of war. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Can the gentleman say that if it had been managed differently we should not have had war? Can he say that he would have done better? Under Wilson's management we all know that he has avoided war. If President Wilson, Mr. Speaker, succeeds in conducting this troublesome affair to a proper solution—to which I pray, and all of us should pray, that he may bring us—a complete settlement, without bloodshed and without war, the American people, the American mothers, the American fathers, will owe him an everlasting debt of gratitude, and so will the entire world, because he will be able to demonstrate that troublesome situations between nations may be settled without war. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I ask that an all wise Providence continue to guide his head and his hand so that he may be able to settle this question without war. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. Sisson. Certainly.

Mr. ROGERS. Does not the gentleman think that a continuance of the embargo on arms would have been more likely to lead to war and bloodshed than the reverse policy?

Mr. Sisson. I can not say, because I do not have all of the facts, I do not have all of the information that the President and the diplomatic officers of the Government have; but I may say this, that it perhaps will be better if it is possible to get the people of Mexico under one head or under two and let them fight the thing out among themselves and bring the question to a final issue among themselves, just so long as they are able to conduct their affairs without doing damage to the people of the United States and to their property.

But I did not intend to discuss this question. The great question which is agitating, and ought to agitate the minds of the people not only of the United States but of the world is, What the issue will be after the European war is over? Will we be called into conflict, necessitating a great Army and a great Navy? Out of precaution with the troubled condition of the world, the administration has urged upon Congress and upon the people a reasonable condition of preparedness for whatever may happen at the close of the European war.

Mr. Speaker, while we have been considering this question of preparedness for war, should it come, it seems to me that many shortsighted men lose sight of the very best preparation. Our cities and those people interested in the profits they are making out of munitions of war and building battleships forget the true relation of things. We are taught in the sacred Scripture that "The love of money is the root of all evil." This is the national sin of America to-day. This love of money has caused too many of our people to lose sight of the very foundation of all America's greatness, strength, happiness, and prosperity, and that is the American farmer.

I maintain that the greatest preparedness in any nation is that preparedness which comes from well-cultivated farms and unlimited food supplies. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Cannon, battleships, submarines, airships, small arms all are useless unless you first feed the soldier. In addition to the amount necessary to furnish the food supply for the people at home you must have that adequate supply and have the farms producing so much more than the country itself consumes in time of peace, which may in time of peace be shipped abroad, so that this surplus will be sufficient to feed the people at home and feed the Army in time of war. When war comes the able-bodied farmer is called to the front and taken from the field, so the fields must be productive enough to feed the families left at home and feed the Army with the loss of the labor of all at the front.

A nation is no stronger than its agriculture. A nation is no stronger than the farm, which supplies that which is necessary to all prosperity. The manufacturing enterprises of our cities are based upon no stronger foundation than that foundation which is at the foundation of all institutions, the food supply, which comes absolutely from the soil.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. Sisson. Yes.

Mr. HILL. How, then, does the gentleman account for the strength of Great Britain, which has not produced its food supply, nor 25 per cent of it, for the last 60 years?

Mr. Sisson. Great Britain has colonies which supply her with food. In addition to that, she sells her manufactured products, such as clothing, shoes, and thousands of other articles, that she may get the first essential for her national existence, to wit, food, which is the product of the farm. Much of this comes from the American farmer.

Mr. HILL. All granted.

Mr. Sisson. And it has been upon that theory, and that wholly, that Great Britain is compelled by the necessities of the case to have the greatest navy on earth, in order to prevent her being starved to death in a day.

Mr. HILL. Then her strength does not consist in her agricultural production?

Mr. Sisson. But without the agricultural production it would be absolutely impossible for the Englishman to live, as it would be absolutely impossible for the gentleman to live in Connecticut. I fear the gentleman from Connecticut has been away from the soil so long, or he lives in a State where he and his people have forgotten the true relation of the human race to the productivity of God's earth, that he and his people forget that he sells his wooden nutmegs and other trinkets for bread and meat which is produced by the American farmer.

Mr. HILL. But the gentleman—

Mr. Sisson. Oh, I have but little time, and my friend knows it. You have had your industries fostered for 50 years by favoring legislation, and it has been at the expense largely of the great agricultural interests of the country.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. Sisson. I must decline to yield, because I have only 15 minutes.

Mr. STEENERSON. Would not the gentleman's logic compel him to encourage the production of sugar?

Mr. HILL. Will the gentleman concede that some 50 years—

Mr. Sisson. I will not concede anything. I can not yield. The gentleman and everyone in the House knows that when I have time I yield, and have never declined when my time will permit. But the special order for to-day will not permit the House to give me more time.

To go back to what I intended to say when I was interrupted: We find ourselves in this condition in the United States, that there are certain food supplies that are getting scarcer per capita than they were in former times, and it is necessary, in order that we may be thoroughly prepared for war, that the Federal Government take a most active interest in the development of every farm in the United States and through all proper legislative means extend to the farmers that assistance which they so much need. If you do not, the plumes of the admirals and generals, their brass buttons and glittering show, will amount to nothing.

These generals and admirals must eat, and they demand the fat of the land. The soldier may have all of the equipment that modern science has devised, but he is useless unless he has food, and food comes from the farm. Is it not strange that so many men of great intelligence fight any effort on our part—we who are real friends of the farmer—to extend relief and help to the very people who feed the world. Let the farmer quit selling the products of his farm for one year and our cities would be charnel houses, our factories would be silent, and the scream of the locomotive would no more be heard.

Now, what is Germany's principal strength to-day? Not her army. The first few days of the present war, with all her trained soldiery, it looked as if it would be an easy victory. But the allies, with their navies, quickly bottled Germany up and blockaded her coast. Her food supply from abroad was cut off. She had, and has now, to depend upon her own farms for her food supply; and while the issue is now not much longer in doubt, Germany's great resistance is caused by Germany's great aid to agriculture in directing her farmers along lines of the most efficient and scientific cultivation of the soil. Still the problem in Germany is that of a food supply. This is what she is struggling for now. She is cut off from the American farmers. She is endeavoring to sail beneath the tumbling seas in order that she may get something for her soldiers to eat.

If a cordon of ships were locked around our shores the Nation that we love so much might be in the condition that the Southern Confederacy was during the Civil War. There was a great portion of the people of that section who had devoted their energies to the production of cotton, and during the war they did all they could to transform the country from the growing of cotton into a grain-producing country and into a cattle and hog producing country. It was essential that they should eat, and they had no grain, no cattle, and no hogs to enable them to feed themselves, and at the same time feed the army. The very foundation of the food supply of the South was swept away. This caused the war to end. There is no telling just how long this war might have continued if it could have been possible for the South to have obtained plenty of food. In other words, the southern soldier was literally starved into surrender and into a victory for the Union. All students of that struggle will tell you that that was the greatest weakness of the South.

Now, let us learn the lesson from Germany; let us learn the lesson from the South in that conflict; and let the United States Government push forward the preparedness movement by helping the American farmer in the very beginning. You Republicans were in power for 50 years, and you never did one thing to aid him or to take one burden from his back.

Your whole program has been to do all that you could for the manufacturer at the farmer's expense. For 50 years he has been knocking at the door of Congress asking for recognition. For that long he has been denied recognition. He knocked and you would not open unto him. He sought but he could not find. He asked for bread; you gave him stone. He asked for fish; you gave him a serpent. What has this Congress and what has this administration done for the American farmer, you may ask?

WHAT THIS ADMINISTRATION HAS DONE.

The Democrats came into power. What has this Democratic Congress and this Democratic administration done for the American farmer? I wish I had time to go into the matters more in detail, but I can only mention them briefly. Since I have been a Member of Congress every Member of this House knows that I have consistently fought for all of the measures that tend to advance our agricultural interests. My motto is, "Make the farmer prosperous and all will prosper."

GOOD ROADS.

For years the American farmer has been asking, yea begging, that you give him Federal aid to construct farm roads, which do more, in my judgment, to build up the agricultural interests of the country and help the farmer than any one piece of legislation that the Government can pass. [Applause.] The farmers' organizations asked the Federal Government to cooperate with their States and counties and help develop our dirt roads. "Ye would not."

During all of the years of Republican rule the farmers were denied Federal aid. The Republican committees declined to report the bill. There was no good roads committee in the House. We Democrats created the Good Roads Committee. That great and good Democrat, my friend DORSEY SHACKLEFORD, of Missouri, was made its chairman, and my good friend H. D. STEPHENS, of Mississippi, resigned his position on the Banking and Currency Committee to get on this committee because he thought that he could best serve his people there. For the first time in the history of the legislation this Democratic House has taken this wise step to aid and assist the various States and counties in the building good roads for the use of the farmers. [Applause.]

RURAL CREDITS.

What next? Notwithstanding the fact that the farmers' organizations, the Grange, the Farmers' Union, and other farmer organizations have knocked at the door of Republican Congresses for years asking for rural-credit legislation, it was denied them by you Republicans when you had control of the Government. You made no effort to give them relief. But when the Democrats came into power and Wilson became President we passed a rural-credit bill for the farmers, and this bill was signed a few days ago by the President. [Applause on the Democratic side.] This bill is not perfect and is not what the American farmer wants, nor is it all that he needs or deserves, but it is a great beginning and commits the Government to the principle, and the American farmer will insist and demand that this law be extended and improved. I have advocated rural-credit legislation since I have been a Member of Congress and am glad to see this legislation go on the statute books. But I am not satisfied and will continue the fight until the farmers get real rural-credit legislation.

AGRICULTURAL EXTENSION BILL.

Mr. Speaker, soon after I was elected to Congress I began the fight for farm-demonstration work. After the first session of Congress I carried this work into every county in my district, and went in person with the men assigned me by the Department of Agriculture, and each meeting was attended by great crowds of farmers. I then saw the practical results of the work. This work was then supported by private contributions. I thought the work should be on a permanent basis and advocated that the Agricultural Department do this work in cooperation with the States and that it be made permanent work. But not until this Democratic administration came into power could the farmers get this legislation. This bill was fathered by my distinguished friend from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER]. [Applause.] And under his wise management those of us who were for this legislation made the fight with him and won. My friends, Mr. CANDLER, of Mississippi, and Mr. HEFLIN, of Alabama, were earnest and enthusiastic workers on the Agricultural Committee for this legislation, and it is proper to say that they are entitled to a great deal of credit for the effective work which they did. Not until the Democrats came into power did the farmers get this legislation. This will grow and should grow. If the Democrats continue to control the Government after the November elections, they will push this farm-demonstration work vigorously and give the American farmer the benefit of scientific soil improvement and proper cultural methods.

In some sections of the Union the soil is wearing out and needs proper treatment to bring it back to a high state of fertility, and our farmers are ready, willing, and glad to have this information, and it is the highest duty which we all owe to our people and to posterity to see that this information is given. My own section needs this information badly, because for many years we have produced nothing but cotton, but now the boll weevil is with us to stay, and our farmers will have to begin to diversify. This is difficult to do with negro labor. We face the problem with courage, but we ask the assistance of the great Agricultural Department, with all its information, to help us solve the problem. I call upon all of our colleagues of both parties to support this great work. The great German Government helped her farmers to solve the problem of soil improvement, and by the adoption of scientific methods Germany, which is naturally the poorest soil in all Europe, has become one of the most productive countries in the world. The farmers of the country should congratulate themselves that this Democratic administration has awakened to the necessity of improving the farms of our country. I have only one criticism, and that is that we ought to have gone further. But it is perhaps quite as far as we could go at this time, because the House can not settle all matters of legislation. I wish I had time to discuss this law further, but can only say that the scientific determination of what the soil needs can only be ascertained by sending experts to examine the soil. This can and will be done under this law.

BUREAU OF MARKETS.

The Bureau of Markets is in its infancy. There has been for years a bureau in all of the consulates to enable the manufacturing interests of this country to find, through these consular reports, the best markets for everything they manufacture; but there has been no effort to connect the American farmer with the best markets for his products, either at home or abroad. The middlemen have absolutely controlled the price of his products at both ends of the line—to the people in the city and the people on the farms. But, with a proper extension of the Bureau of Markets, the American farmer can be brought into contact with the best markets, and, with proper cooperation, can sell his products in the best markets and get the benefit of the profit himself, and the people in the city would be able to get the benefit of cheaper and better food. This has been done by this Democratic Congress. [Applause.] The great work is just begun; but in a few years, if Congress does its duty, the farmers will see a new day dawn and not be at the mercy of the trusts and speculators.

WAR INSURANCE.

I wish I had time to discuss the war-insurance bill. I can tell you that it affected the price of cotton immediately. Upon the passage of this bill the insurance on cotton dropped from the exorbitant high rate fixed by marine insurance companies at the outbreak of the European war to a low rate, and cotton went up one cent a pound, which was exactly the difference between the war-rate insurance and that fixed by the Government.

If we would have coupled it up with the ship-purchase bill, instantly the shipping companies would have reduced their rates to a reasonable rate fixed by the Government, and the American farmer shipping his grain, cotton, and the other products of his farm to European markets would have gotten the benefit in the price. [Applause.] This would have meant millions to the South.

INCOME TAX.

Next comes the income-tax law. This bill which has just passed the House is a Democratic administration measure. I have advocated such a law since I became a Member of the House, and so have nearly all Democrats. I am glad to have had a part in helping to pass this law, for it places the burden of taxation and the expense of running the Government where it belongs, upon the backs of the enormously rich. [Applause.] It puts some of the burden upon the wealth of the country and takes some of the burden off of the hungry and poor throughout the United States.

Mr. LEVER. Will the gentleman yield for a suggestion?

Mr. SISSON. Just for a suggestion.

Mr. LEVER. I would like to call the attention of the gentleman to the matter of the warehouse bill.

Mr. SISSON. I have the warehouse bill on the list, but I have not time to discuss it, and can only say that this Democratic House has passed this good piece of legislation for the farmers. I want to call attention to one other matter before I close.

RURAL SANITATION.

I now ask this Congress and each and every one of you to give your assistance at the next Congress and see that we get through this House and through the Senate a rural-sanitation bill to preserve the health of the people in the country and on the farms. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, there is no higher duty that we can perform as a Government than to do all in our power to protect the health and lives of our people when we can do so. The Bureau of Public Health assures me that there are certain diseases that can be controlled by proper sanitation. Among them are typhoid fever, consumption, malaria, hookworm, and so forth. These diseases take our people off by the thousands. The cities have, as a rule, good sanitary laws and can enforce them. The Federal Government always cooperates with them and sends experts when the cities ask for them. Why should not the people in the country have a like service for them? They should have, and this Democratic House has passed a bill to give them this same service, but the bill is now held up in the Senate. The Bureau of Public Health is anxious to pass this bill, but I understand that it is held up in another end of the Capitol by one man, who, by the way, is not a Democrat. Here we find again the Democratic administration anxious to advance the interest of the farmers and a Republican stands in the way.

When I see all over this fair land our loved ones languishing on beds of sickness and their frames racked with pain; when I see them touched with the cold hand of death and know that in the majority of cases this agony and pain and death could be prevented by simply removing the cause of the disease, and that cause known to the Medical Department of the Government, and that department asks for a few thousand dollars to cooperate with the State and county authorities, it makes my heart sick to see men from the cities fight these small appropriations. What better service can you render the farmers of this country than to assist in making his home healthy? What can you do that will add more to the happiness and comfort of country life than to render it free from these terrible diseases? Why do you maintain a Bureau of Public Health to study disease unless you give the people the benefit of that study? The Government exists for the people, not the people for the Government. Let not our city Members believe that they will not pay for their folly. Their food comes from the farm, and if that food is infected it will find its way into city homes, and all of the precautions as to water supply and other precautions come to naught. I appeal to them in the name of their loved ones—if my appeal to them in the name of the loved ones who live in the country can not reach them—give us this law and let us save many people and millions in money. Give us proper rural sanitation, and you not only protect the life of the man on the farm but you protect the life of the man in the city, as I have just said, because the foodstuffs and food supplies must come from the farm.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I only have a few minutes left, but before I close I want to say that every Democrat can look the farmers of American in the face and say we have tried to benefit you. You have knocked and we have opened unto you. We have passed more good legislation for the farmers during the three years of Democratic control than the Republicans have since the organization of that party [applause]. Our great Democratic leader, Woodrow Wilson, will as the Executive Head of the Nation soon put these measures into operation, and let us all hope that the American farmer will get the full benefit of these measures that have been passed by this Democratic House, and that this is the dawn of a new day for him. I am glad to have done my humble share in this great work for our people.

When the record of this Democratic administration is known, what American farmer ought to hesitate to vote the Democratic ticket in November?

There are other matters I would like to discuss, but I have promised the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox] two minutes. [Applause.]

REAR ADMIRALS IN THE NAVY.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I ask two minutes for the purpose of making a statement. I do not wish to do any man an injustice, nor do I want to make an erroneous statement on the floor of the House. On Thursday, while the Senate amendment to the naval bill was under discussion, I called attention to amendment 89. I made the statement that amendment 89 increased the number of rear admirals to 82. I made the statement upon the strength of a letter which I received from Victor Blue, in the Navy Department. In the letter which Rear Admiral Blue wrote me, dated July 25, I find the following:

Engineers Office, additional in grade, 3. Total authorized in each grade immediately upon passage of bill, 32. Total authorized in each grade when maximum of 2,988 is reached in five to six years, 45.

I received a letter from Rear Admiral Blue this morning, in which he calls my attention to the statement and says it is erroneous. I ask leave to print the letter which I received from him on the 25th day of July and the one which I received from him this morning, July 28, in the Record, and let the facts contained in these letters speak for themselves. It is a known fact that there is a naval factory here in the city of Washington turning out admirals, rear admirals, and minor commanding officers, putting them on the retired list much faster than we are able to turn out ships, guns, and so forth, to supply the officers with. This naval factory is nothing short of the Army and Navy Club, whose chief function is to work overtime in getting salaries increased, officers retired for trivial reasons, and placed upon the retired list with a good round salary.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox] asks unanimous consent to print the letters just referred to in the Record. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The following are the letters referred to:

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
BUREAU OF NAVIGATION,
Washington, D. C., July 25, 1916.

MY DEAR MR. COX: Referring to your request of yesterday for information pertaining to the grade of rear admiral in the Navy as it exists under present law and as it will exist in case the pending naval appropriation bill is passed in its present form, I have the honor to advise as follows:

In computing the total authorized number of officers on the 4 per cent basis, it is intended to use the figures 74,700 as the "authorized enlisted strength of the Navy, as contemplated under the provisions of the pending bill. Four per cent of 74,700 equals 2,988, the total number of line officers there will eventually be under the provisions of the bill. This number can not be reached, however, inside of five or six years. The present number and the number that will exist on passage of the bill is 2,126. There can not be an immediate increase of the actual number upon the passage of this provision in the bill, as the increase in the line depends upon the supply of graduates from the Naval Academy. Under the law as it exists at present the total number of line officers is unlimited. The numbers are limited only in the grades of lieutenant and above. The numbers in grades of lieutenant (junior grade) and ensign are unlimited and depend upon the number of midshipmen graduated each year and the number of warrant officers commissioned as ensigns. The Senate provision in the pending bill fixes the maximum total for the line at 2,988, and this maximum stands to be reached in about five to six years.

The following table gives the data desired by you:

Grade.	Appor- tion- ment in each grade.	Present author- ized number in each grade.	Addi- tional numbers in grade.	Engi- neer officers addi- tional in grade.	Total in each grade at present.	Total author- ized in each grade immedi- ately upon passage of bill.	Total author- ized in each grade when maxi- mum of 2,988 is reached in 5 to 6 years.
Rear admiral (senior 9).....	1.5	9	2	2	13	16	22
Rear admiral (junior 9).....		9	.....	1	10	16	23

Sincerely, yours,

VICTOR BLUE.

Hon. WILLIAM E. COX, M. C.,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, BUREAU OF NAVIGATION,
Washington, D. C., July 28, 1916.

Hon. WILLIAM E. COX, M. C.,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. COX: I have just seen in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of yesterday, July 27, top of page 13525, a statement made by you on the floor of the House that I had told you that 82 new rear admirals were provided for in the Senate amendment to the naval appropriation bill.

I am sure that you would not intentionally misquote me in the matter, and am inclosing a copy of my letter to you with the request that you will kindly read it over again carefully. You will find in my statement that we now have 18 rear admirals, regular numbers, and 5 rear admirals, additional numbers, making a total of 23 now on the list, and that the Senate amendment would authorize 32 rear admirals upon passage of the bill and 45 rear admirals after five or six years, when the line of the Navy has been recruited up to its maximum strength.

It therefore appears clear from the figures given you by me that the Senate amendment provides for an increase of only 14 rear admirals at this time, and for a further increase of 13 distributed over a period of five to six years.

The number of rear admirals provided for in the Senate amendment was estimated for by myself after a careful study of the organizations of the principal navies of the world and of our own needs. It is very moderate and reasonable, and far below what other naval powers deem necessary for a proper organization. You can, therefore, readily see that a statement understood as coming from me that the Senate amendment carries an increase of 82 rear admirals places me in a ridiculous light in the eyes of Congress and of the country.

I am confident that out of fairness to me you will now correct the statement referred to.

Very sincerely, yours,

VICTOR BLUE,
Chief of Bureau.

MEMORANDUM REGARDING REAR ADMIRALS PROVIDED FOR IN THE SENATE AMENDMENT.

This amendment authorized a total of 32 rear admirals upon passage of the bill, and an eventual total of 45 when the line of the Navy has reached its maximum after a period of five to six years. This means an immediate increase of 14, and a further increase of 13 distributed over a period of five to six years.

In order to mobilize the Navy for war at the present time we require at least 35 flag officers if our organization is to be in any way comparable to that of foreign naval powers. Forty flag officers is nearer the number we ought actually to have at this time.

Naturally the requirements in this respect will increase from year to year as ships are completed and added to the fleet.

The percentage of 1.5 flag officers to the total number of line officers is intended to care for the increased requirements due to the constantly increasing number of ships and to the constantly increasing number of officers and men to man them.

This is the minimum number that will give us an organization that can reasonably be expected to reach the degree of efficiency maintained by the organizations of the principal naval powers of the world.

The organization of the British Navy contains 2 per cent of flag officers of the line; that of Germany, 1.7 per cent; that of France, 2.1 per cent; that of Japan, 2.4 per cent; and that of Russia, 2.3 per cent. Their percentage of captains runs from 4.4 to 6.

We have asked for 4 per cent of captains and 1.5 per cent rear admirals. This is very moderate, and could hardly be expected to make our organization for war equal to theirs.

In these times the result of naval engagements largely depends upon the organization of the units of the fleet commanded by flag officers.

Should our Navy be mobilized now we would have to assign to 18 flag officers the duties of 35 at least or else place 17 untried and untrained captains in command.

The selection feature in the Senate amendment would enable our Navy to obtain flag officers at an age which would permit of their having active training in the fleet and of being available for further duty afloat before retirement.

An important point in the selection feature is that it makes for economy as well as efficiency.

It guarantees that the most efficient officers will reach the grade of rear admiral and will remain in that grade long enough to give the Navy the benefit of their experience and training in command afloat.

The economical part is that hereafter fewer officers will retire with the rank of rear admiral than is the case under existing law.

As an illustration, about 30 captains will retire for age during the next five years. Under our present system all of these will retire with the rank of rear admiral—nearly all with the pay of the senior nine—after having spent but two years, on the average, on the active list of rear admirals.

It is clear that if the selection feature will bring officers into the grade of rear admiral at an age that will permit them to serve six years before retirement, the result will be that the average number of officers retired each year as rear admirals will be reduced in the ratio of 6 to 2, or 3 to 1.

In connection with the personnel feature of the Senate amendment, it should be borne in mind that existing law provides for more rear admirals than does this amendment. The difference is that existing law provides for more on the retired list and less on the active list, while the reverse obtains under the Senate amendment.

There can therefore be no doubt that after a number of years of operation of the Senate provision the number of rear admirals on the active and retired lists combined will be much less than it would be under existing law.

This provision will have the effect in the course of time—possibly in 10 years—of cutting down the retired list of rear admirals to one-half or one-third of what it is to-day.

In other words, under the Senate provision the active list of the Navy will gain rear admirals at the expense of the retired list. In consequence, there can be no doubt that the provision will produce economy as well as increased efficiency.

VICTOR BLUE.

ZEBULON BAIRD VANCE.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the special order.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 322.

Resolved, That exercises appropriate to the reception and acceptance from the State of North Carolina of the statue of Zebulon Baird Vance, erected in Statuary Hall, in the Capitol, be made a special order for Saturday, July 29, 1916, not later than 3 o'clock p. m.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I send to the Clerk's desk the following Senate concurrent resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate concurrent resolution 24.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the statue of Zebulon Baird Vance, presented by the State of North Carolina to be placed in Statuary Hall, is accepted in the name of the United States, and that the thanks of Congress be tendered to the State of North Carolina for the contribution of the statue of one of its most eminent citizens, illustrious for the high purpose of his life and his distinguished services to the State and Nation.

Second. That a copy of these resolutions, suitably engrossed and duly authenticated, be transmitted to the governor of the State of North Carolina.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL] is recognized.

[Mr. SMALL addressed the House. See Appendix.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. HOOD] is recognized.

Mr. HOOD. Mr. Speaker, in response to legislative invitation by act of Congress of July 2, 1864, the great State of North Carolina contributes to the National Statuary Hall a bronze statue of Zebulon B. Vance.

The people of North Carolina with one accord decided that he was "illustrious for his historical renown and for distinguished civil and military service" rendered to the State and Nation, and deserved a niche in the pantheon of the Republic. Side by side with Washington, Lee, Webster, Calhoun, Morton, Ingalls, Benton, Houston, and other great statesmen and warriors of our land, the massive figure of Zebulon B. Vance towers as an inspiration to the thousands who, beholding it, studying the life and character of this great North Carolinian, will be prompted to greater service, higher ideals, and nobler living.

I shall not attempt to follow minutely the history of the "Old North State's" statesman, lawyer, orator, patriot, scholar, and friend, nor delineate with any degree of elaboration his wonderful traits, splendid characteristics, and unique personality.

Leave thee alone for a comparison.

I realize that it would be superfluous to do so in view of the fact that others have done this with marked precision and ability.

I simply desire, as one of a younger generation, to pay a feeble tribute to his memory. Although of fine parentage, he began life's struggle in an humble home under adverse circumstances, his father having died when he was quite young. During the early years of his life he supported a widowed mother, acquired an education, and with an energy and determination that knew no defeat carved his way to fame.

After attaining an education through his individual efforts and the sacrifices of his Godly mother, in 1854, soon after reaching his majority, he received his license to practice law, locating in his mountain home—Asheville.

"With new-fledged hope still fluttering in his breast" he began his memorable career.

He was elected solicitor of the county court, State legislator, twice to Congress, three times governor, and four times as United States Senator.

In addition to the service rendered in civil life, upon the breaking out of the Civil War he organized and was made captain of the "Rough and Ready Guards," which company was called to the front immediately, and soon thereafter, on account of his gallant services in battle, he was elected colonel of the Twenty-sixth North Carolina Regiment.

With a public service of nearly a half century, in peace and in war, he filled every position entrusted to him by the people with fidelity, credit, and distinction. The people loved to honor him; they knew he was their friend. He was idolized by all classes; the rank and file felt that he never failed to use his best efforts for their interests and welfare.

His hopes, aspirations, desires, and ambition seemed to be to serve his country well and faithfully. His heart seemed to throb in harmony with that of the masses, and he longed to do everything in his power for them at all times and under any conditions.

Senator Blackburn made the following statement in his eulogy of Senator Vance:

This man's character, Mr. President, is best illustrated by an instance with which I became acquainted only within the last week and but for which I would not have asked indulgence of the Senate to attest my love to his memory. The general commanding the Armies of this country told me less than a week ago that when the war ended he was left in command of the district of North Carolina. He received an order peremptory from the war office here to arrest Gov. Vance, capture all his papers and correspondence, and send them to the War Department. He said he knew full well that Vance was not seeking to flee the country or avoid arrest, but that he sent an officer up to his mountain home with instructions to capture every paper that belonged to his official or his personal correspondence and bring them there; and the officer did.

Gen. Schofield sent Gov. Vance, with those papers and records, here to the then Secretary of War. We all remember that that was Pennsylvania's great war officer, Stanton, whom some people thought was not mild, whom some thought was even savage, but who, in my judgment, in point of efficiency and ability, was the greatest war minister that the earth has known since the days of the elder Carnot of France.

Gen. Schofield sent Gov. Vance here, and among those records he sent the book which contained every particle of correspondence that Vance had ever held with the President of the dead Confederacy. All was open and Stanton examined it all. When he did and saw what this man had done, how persistent his efforts had been to ameliorate the conditions of Federal prisoners and to assuage the horrors of war, the great Secretary said to him, "Upon your own record you stand acquitted; you are at liberty to go where you will."

[Applause.]

Thus you see that notwithstanding the sufferings of his own people, under such trying conditions, he was always ready and willing to relieve the suffering of Federal prisoners. This is an index to his true character.

I can not do better than embody as part of my remarks a portion of the magnificent address delivered by Hon. Charles W. Tillet, of Charlotte, soon after the death of Senator Vance, which is as follows:

Zeb Vance is dead! Soldier, statesman, patriot, friend! In war and peace, the one of all her sons to whom his mother State looked most for succor and relief; and can it be that in the days to come, when dreaded dangers threaten all around, we nevermore can call for him, before whose matchless powers in days gone by our enemies have quailed and fled?

Zeb Vance is dead! His was a name you could confide with, and oftentimes in the past, when this loved Commonwealth of ours has been stirred to its inmost depths and men knew not which way to go nor what to say, the cry was sounded forth that "Vance is coming," and from the mountain fastness of the west and the everglades of the eastern plain the people came who never would come forth to hear another living man, and gathering around in countless multitudes they hung upon his every word with eager eye and listening ear, and all he told them they believed because "our Vance" had said it.

Zeb Vance is dead! And where shall come the man to tell the world the soul-inspiring story of his hero life; how coming forth from humble home he baffled and overcame the fates that would have crushed beneath their feet a man of meander mould: how serving faithfully and well in every trust committed unto him he soon won first place in the hearts of all his countrymen and held that place for three score years unto the end; how when his native land was plunged in throes of civil strife he went forth in the front ranks to defend and save her and fought with valor all her foes; how called to rule as chief executive in times that tried men's souls he ruled so wisely and so well; how when the war was over and the cause was lost, when down upon his bleeding, prostrate country came the hordes of vampires from the North to suck the last remaining drops of life-blood from his people, he rose with power almost divine and drove them back; and then with gentle hand he caused the wounds to heal and his loved land to prosper once again as in the years gone by; and how at last, when after years of faithful, honest toil, upon his noble form was laid the icy hand of death, he bowed his head in meek submission to His will and yielded up to God his manly soul? Who can be found to sing the praise of such a one, and who can speak the anguish of the people's hearts at his untimely death?

Zeb Vance is dead! He was the friend and tribune of the people. Though he rose to place where he held converse with the great and mighty of the earth, his sympathetic heart was open to all mankind, and his strong arm was first stretched forth to lift the lowliest of the sons of men that cried to him for help, and in the Nation's Senate halls his voice was ever lifted up to plead the cause of the down-trodden and oppressed against the favored classes and the money kings.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that the sublimest, most beautiful and grandest of God's creation is that man who loves his fellow man and observes the golden rule—

Whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them.

Ever ready to minister to their wants and necessities, dispelling the clouds of gloom and adversity, and spreading sunshine, radiance, and happiness, such a man was Zebulon B. Vance.

Thousands have been made happier, brighter, and better as a result of his noble and God-like life.

He has builded a monument in the hearts of his countrymen greater than human skill can devise or human hands construct.

The tender, affectionate memory of self-sacrifice and glorious deeds done for friends and constituents will forever linger as "an alabaster box of precious ointment."

So lives he still, in soul and heart,
Heroic and sublime.

[Applause.]

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, it was very fine that the people of North Carolina, through their Representatives, should decree the placing of the statue of Zebulon B. Vance in Statuary Hall with such unanimity. The State has given to the world many great men, but of them all North Carolina, his native State, said this son of mine by his life hath earned a place in the Nation's Hall of Fame.

And as I look upon that stately form I am strong in the faith that the virtues more than any others of the many possessed by Senator Vance which influenced our people to place his statue in this building were his rugged, unquestioned honesty, and his deep-rooted love for his people—the latter being the overruling passion of his life.

The whole world is always looking for the man who loves every other man more than he does a dollar. Thank God there are such men, and out of the agony of war poor, stricken North Carolina found such a man, used him in rebuilding her own crushed fortunes, and later on offered him to the Nation. He left behind a glorious memory. He did not live in vain.

His heart throbbed with love and sympathy to the very end. There was no gloom in his philosophy, no sting in his boundless humor, no offense in his remonstrance. He looked at things with kindly eyes. He loved us all. He felt keenly for the sorrows of his fellow man. All classes of his beloved native State will long remember him with tenderness and gratitude. He taught by his life the beautiful gospel of humanity. No king, no conqueror, no magistrate, no ruler ever bequeathed a fairer legacy to his people. He made no schisms. He inspired no conflicts save in the cause of justice. He lit no fires of hate. He despised money save when it made man happy.

And, Mr. Speaker, from the hour when he kneeled at his mother's knee to his last hour upon this earth he followed with unflinching footsteps the shining star of truth. [Applause.]

Mr. SMALL took the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

Mr. STEDMAN. Mr. Speaker, the elevation of the human race, its advancement physically, intellectually, and morally has commanded the highest and most unselfish efforts of heroic men and women in every age. It has long been an established truth that the destiny of every individual is controlled in a large degree by the ideals established in their early days. The great ideals which the youth of every land should strive to form, emulate, and cherish are the highest standards of physical, intellectual, and moral excellence in their respective spheres. To a marked extent they are interdependent. It need not be said that the last named far outweighs the former in its influence upon the life of all. Wonderful is the effect of environment on ideals so created—of association, of scenery, of paintings, of sculpture, of nature in all its wondrous and varied charms, of forest, of stream, of mountain, of ocean. The history of the people of all times verifies the statement that collectively and individually we reflect our environment.

The Greek youth of old represented the highest type of physical perfection the world has ever known. As the boy grew into manhood he witnessed the Olympic games. He rejoiced in the applause which greeted the victor. He returned home with the supreme desire in his heart that by rigid asceticism and unceasing athletic practice he might some day wear the crown of wild olive.

The child of Italy looks with rapture and delight upon the golden splendor of its skies, wanders amidst the creations of art, which everywhere adorn its public buildings, and lies down at night to dream of the happy days when his own work, chiseled in marble or painted upon canvas, shall rival that of the great masters, which has led captive his heart and his imagination.

But there is a force which fascinates and entrances the minds of all, whether in the glory of youth, in the meridian of manhood, or in the decline of age. It is more impressive and lasting than the golden splendor of the ocean when lighted up by the rays of the sun, than the silent and majestic grandeur of the mountain, than the most costly temple reared by the skill of man, than any landscape arrayed in nature's most attractive garb. It is a vision of a man who bears the temptations of victory without seduction and the ordeal of suffering without dismay—a man set apart by Providence from the mass of humanity, that by his exalted mental and moral endowments he may stand forever as a mighty rock in the ocean, as a beacon light through all ages.

Profoundly impressed with the importance of the influence which will be exerted upon the lives and fortunes of the many thousand visitors who throng to this beautiful and attractive Capitol, as well as upon the thoughts of national legislators who assemble here; by the environment of exalted thought and by reflection upon the great qualities which elevate and adorn humanity, the Thirty-eighth Congress of the United States during its first session in 1864 enacted a bill for the construction of Statuary Hall and authorized the President—to invite each and all of the States to provide and furnish statues, in marble or bronze, not exceeding two in number from each State, of deceased persons who have been citizens thereof and illustrious for their historic renown or for distinguished civil or military services, such as each State shall determine to be worthy of this national commemoration; and when so furnished the same shall be placed in the old Hall of the House of Representatives in the Capitol of the United States, which is hereby set apart, or so much thereof as may be necessary, as a national Statuary Hall.

Gladly accepting the invitation thus extended, the General Assembly of North Carolina, during the year 1907, adopted without a dissenting voice a resolution authorizing the governor and council of state to place a statue of Zebulon Baird Vance in Statuary Hall. The bill was introduced by Hon. J. C. Buxton, senator from Forsyth County. No man or woman living in North Carolina doubts that above all others he is preeminently entitled to this distinction. In pursuance of that resolution, Gov. Craig, of North Carolina, appointed a commission to see that in all respects the work was properly done. You will know how faithfully and efficiently the commission has discharged its duty when you look upon the splendid bronze statue of North Carolina's illustrious and best-beloved son, unveiled in Statuary Hall, and which it is our grateful pleasure to accept.

Statuary Hall was not constructed as a monument to preserve the memory of the illustrious dead and nothing more. It was intended as a shrine to be preserved under the fostering care of the National Government to which the youth of our land may come with ever-increasing numbers in the recurring years and gaze with awe and delight upon the greatest and best citizens of the Republic and learn from their lives the lesson of virtue in its broadest sense and all that it implies.

To what better school for reflection could a young man or woman be sent than to a great temple, where hung upon its walls are the portraits and embedded in its niches are the statues of those who by their virtues in private life or their valor in war have brought renown and glory to their native land?

The traveler from distant lands who sojourns in London will find his way to Trafalgar Square. His eyes will be fixed upon the monument to the greatest naval hero the world has ever known. He will hear the booming of Nelson's cannon, as their echo reverberates from Trafalgar to the British Channel, telling the world that the contest with Napoleon is not unequal so long as English blood maintains the fight. But with that echo comes the sound of the admiral's trumpet, more distinct, forever to linger in the memory of Nelson's countrymen—"England expects every man to do his duty." And you leave Trafalgar Square feeling and knowing that a supreme sense of duty leads to lasting renown, which remains unwithered when the garlands of military and naval glory have faded forever. And you wander to Blenheim Castle. Its walls are covered with the portraits of John Churchill, Duke of Marlborough, and paintings of the memorable fields upon which he won his glory and overthrew the armies of Louis XIV, led by his greatest commanders. And then you will think of the avarice and meanness of the man whose statues surround you and whose face looks down upon you, and all the memories of Blenheim and Ramillies can not take the stain or the tarnish from the marble and bronze. And your heart tells you that the love of money is incompatible with true greatness and unselfish patriotism.

Perhaps from England you may cross the Channel and go to the gay—I will not say the happy—capital of her ancient and inveterate foe. You will seek the Mausoleum of Napoleon. You will stand by the splendid sepulchre which contains his ashes, brought from the island of St. Helena to be deposited upon the banks of the Seine amongst the people who witnessed his glory and his crimes. With his image in your mind, you will traverse the Italian plains, the valleys of the Danube and the Rhine, stand by the banks of the Vistula, and linger upon the shores of the Neimen. Lodi, Arcola, Marengo, Austerlitz, Wagram, Eylau, and Friedland crown him with more than imperial splendor. You see his sun go down in blood and gloom upon the field of Waterloo, but the horizon of his life is still resplendent with the luster of his unrivalled military achievements. A fair and beautiful land drenched in blood and white with the bones of youthful conscripts lies before you. Your spirit cries aloud, "It is vanity of vanity; his whole life was vanity."

You joyfully turn to the monuments which everywhere mark the landscape in your own land. You find your way with eager step to its beautiful Capitol. You wander to Statuary Hall. Your eyes rest upon the statues of the mighty dead, the busts of Washington, of Jefferson, of Lincoln, of R. E. Lee.

What a story of self-denial, of truth, of beauty, of valor, of gentleness, of all the virtues which adorn and beautify humanity their lives declare to you as you stand before them, whether their images and features be portrayed by the painter's canvas or the sculptor's art.

The bronze image of Vance is before you, selected by his grateful State as worthy of the resting place where the great and good of our Republic sleep.

When you look upon his statue, will you simply contemplate the features and say that the work is well done and that the figure upon the pedestal was worthy of being so perpetuated and then pass on? Are you satisfied alone with the grandeur which lights up his manly face? Not at all. His whole character comes in review before you and fastens itself indelibly upon your mind.

This is an occasion intended rather to signify our acceptance of his statue, one worthy of the sculptor's highest art, which has been recently unveiled in Statuary Hall, than to give a biographical sketch of his life. I will not speak of the early days of his boyhood, so prophetic of the splendor of his future career, of those elements of his character, creating a personality which charmed and delighted all whose good fortune it was to meet him, which made him the center of attraction alike in the abodes of the poor and the humble as well as in the mansions of the rich and powerful, of his ready and unflinching wit, of his tender sympathies, of his unselfish charities, of his deeds of kindness extended to all in distress when the opportunity came to him to assist them.

Years ago, on the 23d of April, 1895, a few months after his death, which occurred on the 14th of April, 1894, many eulogies were delivered commemorative of his life, of his attractive personality, of his splendid achievements, now and for all time to come the pride and glory of North Carolina.

But as monuments should not only be the images of those whom they represent but are intended also to call the attention of posterity to their leading characteristics, by which they were enabled to be of service to all humanity as well as to their own country, it is proper and appropriate to mention to-day, briefly at least, some of those great qualities possessed by him which are ever essential to glorious achievements.

His life was picturesque, eventful, and elevating. The beauty and grandeur of nature in the region where he was born and reared gave a majestic character to his thoughts.

A supreme love of truth, a lofty and generous patriotism, a forgetfulness of self, moral courage, personal fearlessness, absolute sincerity in word, in thought, and in deed; these, with an intense love of humanity, constituted the basis of his character, which will ever be resplendent in the galaxy of great names which America has furnished to the world.

Nature had endowed him with a rare and wonderful gift of eloquence, the power of which seldom failed to carry every audience by storm and enabled him to impress his hearers with the truth of his own convictions. The effect of his oratory can be best illustrated by a most remarkable incident occurring during the Civil War.

The time for which the Twenty-sixth North Carolina Regiment had enlisted—one year—had expired. He was the first colonel of that famous regiment, whose name will gild with splendor the pages of history, so long as the world loves enduring courage and patriotic heroism.

The men were packing their knapsacks and preparing for their journey home. They were singing gay songs of happiness in anticipation of meeting again those so near to their hearts. The fathers of many of the young soldiers had arrived at camp to accompany them.

Vance ordered the drum to be sounded and calling the men together addressed them. He urged them to reenlist, to protect the honor and glory of North Carolina. The sweet and happy memories of their homes faded from their vision, as he appealed to their supreme sense of duty in an effort, pronounced by those who heard it, to be unequalled and unrivaled. Every man in the regiment reenlisted as they cheered for Vance, and then sang in full chorus the Old North State Forever.

His military career was full of honor and glory, but was of brief duration. He raised a company in Buncombe County, N. C.—the Rough and Ready Guards—which was organized on the 4th of May, 1861, with Vance as captain. This company was placed in the Fourteenth Regiment of North Carolina troops. In the fall of 1861, he was elected colonel of the Twenty-sixth Regiment.

On the 14th of March, 1862, the Battle of Newbern was fought. He greatly distinguished himself by his coolness, skill, and utter indifference to danger. Soon thereafter his regiment was ordered to Virginia, and was actively engaged in the seven days fight around Richmond.

At Malvern Hill, on July 3, 1862, he attracted the admiration of all who witnessed his splendid conduct.

In August, 1862, he was elected governor of North Carolina. He did not seek the office and did not desire it. He declared publicly that the only honor he coveted was to lead the brave men entrusted to his command. In obedience to their wishes and the recognized preference of the people of North Carolina for him, above all others, to conduct the affairs of the State, he yielded, and in its hour of peril was inaugurated on the 8th of September, 1862.

There has been no period of time in the history of the State when its people were so beleaguered with obstacles which threatened the destruction of their aspirations and hopes, and of all that was dear to their hearts, than during his administration.

Sustained by his unselfish and devoted love, their efforts directed by his consummate ability, their fortitude and unconquerable spirit triumphed over every misfortune, and they emerged from the chaos of ruin encircled with a halo of renown which shall live untarnished and undimmed through all the years to come. [Applause.]

His administration was illustrious for its many achievements which commanded the admiration of men in those perilous days; but its crowning glory, in the estimation of all, whether friends to the cause of the Union or adherents of the Southern Confederacy, was the untiring care, the provident wisdom, and unstinted labor given to provide every possible comfort for North Carolina soldiers and their helpless wives and children. To this object above all others Gov. Vance devoted the best energies of a great and active mind.

Of the success of his efforts I will not speak to-day, as recently, upon another occasion, I have referred to it at length in an address delivered at a Confederate camp in this city. Suffice it to say that, under his administration and due to his foresight, North Carolina not only clothed her own troops during the entire war but furnished clothing for troops from other States, and that for many months previous to Gen. Lee's surrender the army of northern Virginia had been almost entirely furnished with food from North Carolina.

It is a truth questioned by none that no troops in any corps of the Confederate Army were more thoroughly equipped and provided for in every way necessary to their efficiency and comfort, both as to arms, food, and clothing, than were the soldiers from North Carolina.

For their helpless wives and children he caused to be established depots of provisions for their subsistence, and appointed committees to see that they were not neglected. With him it was a labor of love and enthusiasm, to which he gave unceasing personal attention.

He was devotedly attached to the Union and exerted himself to prevent its dissolution. He was opposed to secession until the proclamation of President Lincoln calling for troops to coerce the Southern States left him no choice. The destiny of North Carolina was his destiny. When once the loyalty of North Carolina was pledged to her sister States of the South, his loyalty was unalterably linked with hers.

As governor of the State he manifested an especial pride in the high morale of North Carolina troops. He made many visits to them.

No period of his eventful life was marked by an incident more attractive by its glamor of romance and patriotic heroism than his visit to the North Carolina troops in Lee's army in March, 1864. This interesting episode in his wonderful career has been often alluded to and was mentioned in an address delivered by Mr. Woodward, of North Carolina, in this House when he paid a tribute to his memory in recognition of his illustrious services to his State and our Republic. The North Carolina troops whom he visited comprised 13 brigades, aggregating more than one half of the army. They were encamped along the bank of the Rapidan River. Gen. Lee, with members of his staff, captivated by the eloquence of Vance and the lofty sentiments to which he gave expression, accompanied him from brigade to brigade. The enthusiasm of the soldiers knew no bounds. It was the prelude to the campaign which soon thereafter commenced, in which they won imperishable renown. His last speech was made at a general review of Lee's army near Orange Court House. It was ordered by that great commander as a special compliment to Vance, an honor bestowed upon none other in all its history.

No orator in all the annals of time ever had an audience whose presence was more calculated to inspire heroic sentiment and high resolve. It was the remnant of the Army of Northern Virginia. Upon its banners were names which will long live during the ages to come—Manassas, Chancellorsville, Sharpsburg, Fredericksburg, Gettysburg. The greatest commander of the English-speaking race was beside him. Stonewall Jackson had gone to his final rest. Pettigrew had joined him in immortality. But A. P. Hill and D. H. Hill, Longstreet, and Ewell, Early, and Gordon were before him. They forgot the fields of their glory as they listened to him. J. E. B. Stuart was there and never so happy, unless at the head of a cavalry charge. Hoke, of North Carolina, who had established his reputation forever as one of the foremost of all the great soldiers of the Civil War, gazed upon him with mingled pride and affection.

He knew him and loved him. M. W. Ransom—illustrious in war and in peace—whose fame spans the American Continent, and whose statue should stand beside that of Vance, shared the exultation of Hoke; Pegram, of Virginia; and Haskell, of South Carolina, those unrivaled artillery officers who had discarded the ancient method of artillery fighting and carried their guns to the front line of battle—leaned forward to catch his every utterance. History has no more splendid scene to record.

Another marked feature of his administration was the maintenance of the supremacy of the civil authority of the State against the military power of the Confederate government, although he had equipped and sent to the field from North Carolina more troops, according to its military population, than were sent from any other State.

He issued an order dated the 26th of May, 1863, commanding the militia force of the State to resist the arrest of any citizens of the State who had been discharged by writ of habeas corpus tried by any judge of the superior or supreme court of the State.

He ever kept steadily in view the principles of liberty and the rights of its citizens as interpreted by our fathers. He won the fight and achieved for North Carolina the honor of maintaining the privilege of the great writ of liberty in the midst of the strife of millions of people. A memorable triumph, which came to no other State either of the United States or Confederate States, with perhaps one exception.

Nor will posterity forget the spirit of humanity ever manifested by him when, as governor of North Carolina, he rose superior to every environment amidst the horrors of war.

His efforts to relieve the necessities of the Union prisoners held in the military prison at Salisbury, N. C., will attract the admiration of the brave and generous from every civilized land.

Although the people of North Carolina were making a supreme effort to provide for their own soldiers and their wives and children left at home, at his request they gave ungrudgingly to the Federal prisoners a portion of their provisions, in many instances depriving themselves of needed comforts. [Applause.]

Union soldiers were fed from the homes of men who were sleeping upon the fields of northern Virginia, following the banner of Robert E. Lee.

When the full truth of the conditions existing in the prison at Salisbury, made inevitable by the Civil War raging at the time, shall be known to the world, as well as the unselfish conduct of the people of North Carolina, prompted in their labor of charity and humanity by the greatest of all her sons in that era of heroic names, additional luster will be given to the name of a State already illumined by the achievements of her children on the battle field.

The ties which bind together every section of our country will be made stronger and more enduring. The descendants of both Union soldiers and Confederate soldiers, as they rejoice together, over the glory of our reunited country, will rise up and with one acclaim bless the name of Zebulon B. Vance, of North Carolina.

Early in life he was intrusted with high office. He was equal to any responsibility cast upon him. He possessed the true elements of greatness which ever lead to lasting renown.

Few men in public life have ever filled the positions of honor and trust for which they have been chosen with so much credit to themselves and honor to those whom they represented.

He was three times elected governor of North Carolina, twice elected to the House of Representatives of the United States, and four times elected to the Senate of the United States.

He was one of the greatest debaters who ever appeared upon the floor of that body. His speeches showed profound thought, patriotic sentiment, lofty eloquence, and rare wit. They attracted the attention of the entire country. He commanded the respect, admiration, and affection of his associates, regardless of party ties.

The attachment of all classes of citizens of North Carolina for him has been without a parallel in the history of the State.

Unlike many great men, he never experienced the fickle tenure of popular applause nor the ingratitude of those whom he had both served and honored.

Unlike Scipio Africanus, the conqueror of Carthage, who died an exile from home and whose remains rested on a foreign shore, he was buried amidst the people he loved so well by the banks of the French Broad River, the melody of whose rippling, laughing waters gave to the happy dreams of his boyhood that joy and delight which neither gold nor place nor power can buy. [Applause.]

Unlike Themistocles, the savior of Athens, who sought refuge at the court of an alien king, he never desired, sought, or needed an appeal from the arbitrament of his own countrymen.

To-day his memory is treasured with the same love which went out to him when in the full meridian and splendor of his fame.

He died in the triumph and faith of the Christian religion and left a name without blemish and without reproach—a heritage of honor to his descendants, to his State, and to our common country.

May the high and patriotic mission for which Statuary Hall was designed by its founders be fulfilled.

Let it be made a living fountain of life and truth for all those who are inspired by example.

May it send out with ever-increasing volume and power a stream of high, pure, lofty, and patriotic thought to bless our entire land.

May the lovers of innocent pleasure as well as the lovers of truth and art assemble there together—fair women and brave men, scholars and philosophers, mechanics and lawyers, farmers and statesmen from every section of the Republic.

May they realize that it is moral grandeur alone which can permanently enchain the attention of mankind.

They will not fail to halt their steps before the splendid image of the illustrious North Carolinian. They will linger long over the entrancing story of his life. His simple habits, his absolute scorn for the vulgar love of money, his self-abnegation, his supreme devotion to the welfare and glory of his country will be fastened indelibly upon their minds. They will carry with them these thoughts and will be better citizens if they are worthy to stand in the hall where heroes sleep.

Fortunate is the nation and exalted will be its destiny which can furnish to the world such a model for emulation as portrayed in the character and life of Zebulon B. Vance.

His name and fame belong not to North Carolina alone but are the common property of the American people, and will be preserved by them in their pristine splendor when the bronze statue which we have accepted has perished by decay and crumbled into dust. [Loud applause.]

Mr. BRITT. Mr. Speaker, I come here to pay tribute to one with whom I did not politically agree, but in whose life and character I feel a pride not excelled by any other man, here or elsewhere.

Twenty-five years ago, in this Capitol, I first met Zebulon Baird Vance. I saw him occasionally thereafter until his death on April 14, 1894. He impressed me as have but few other men. He was strong in body, great in intellect, rich in humor, and eloquent in speech.

In my district, near the city of Asheville, at the foot of the great mountains, his eyes first saw the light; on the green slope of beautiful Riverside, overlooking the winding French Broad, his cherished dust reposes, and up from the heart of Asheville there rises a rugged granite shaft, tall and majestic, to tell to the passer-by the story of the people's love for him, and hard by are the scenes of his early struggles, his rising hopes, and his unfolding aspirations. It was here that he became the brilliant lawyer, the influential State legislator, and the great Representative in Congress, and where he first took captive the hearts of the people.

He came of a powerful lineage. His ancestors were makers of history. Through the sturdy Irish he went back to the hardy Norseman. In his blood there were touches of many noble strains. This it was that gave him his marvelous versatility. For he could speak with a logic that convinced, with an eloquence that charmed, and make a statement of fact that left no denial. And he could play on all the manifold chords of the human heart. There was the mild humor that provoked an unconscious smile, the telling joke that brought peals of laughter, the burning sarcasm that left anger, the wit that sparkled, and the tender pathos that touched the fountain of tears.

From yonder Senate gallery I have looked down upon him in gladiatorial debate. It was a scene not easily forgotten. Like a great master he held the stage. The subject was war, reconstruction, or the tariff. The Chamber and galleries were filled. There was the eager listening, the tense look, the pervasive interest. Such as agreed with him, shouted; such as could not, admired. His opponents were Allison and Ingalls, Morton and Sherman, Hoar and Morrill. And they were giants worthy of his steel. Whether it was a blow of the bludgeon, a thrust of the rapier, or a sweep of the broadsword, he knew when and where to strike. But he took no mean advantage. He fought an honorable fight. He observed the rules of fair debate. But he gave no quarter and asked none. He was a master polemic. As a forceful speaker he has rarely been excelled.

He possessed the greater qualities of popular leadership. He knew the way to the hearts of the people. He sounded all their depths, interpreted their feelings, took their part, and sympathized with their wants; and they showered upon him the rich plenitude of their affection. In calling so many of their sons by his name and in telling over again his stories they pay their unconscious tribute to the memory of a great friend. If I could bring to this Capitol the warm hearts of the people of my section, the generous affections of those who followed him from childhood to greatness, there would be poured out at the base of yonder bronzen image a wealth of love, deep as the fountain of the human heart and sweet as ever embalmed a Pantheon shrine.

The great and distinguishing quality of Mr. Vance's character was his superb humanity. He was intensely human. He was a man, and he knew it. He was not a saint, and did not affect to be. To him this was a plain, workaday world, filled with good and bad, joy and sorrow, hope and fear. He believed in the great essential virtues. He had no patience with shams and pretensions. With him life was an open book. His door was always open, his words were frank, and his manner firm. But his heart was warm and responsive. His handclasp was magnetic. No one ever forgot its thrill. His voice was deep and rich and never failed to charm. His stories were fresh, original, and telling. His wit and humor were easy, natural, and unstudied, but delicious and wholesome. When he told a story it was always just the story for that time and place.

I shall never forget the day the news of his death came. I was at a distant place in the country. The news had in some way reached the community. Two plain men called to tell me the sad intelligence. One of them, a great, stout man, broke down and cried like a child. The other, with a pale face, repeated several times the words, "Our great friend is gone." You will thus see how he had swept the hearts of the plain people. He was of them, with them, and for them.

We do not understand the laws that fix the different orders of men. Thinking as babes, we can not see how one man can be so far above or below another. Children of the same Father, nourished by the same earth-mother, living under the same kindly heavens, our statures ought not to be so unequal. Yet it is not so. Like the stars, we differ one from another. Some of us come and go, leaving no trace of our hurried stay. Others, a little stronger and a trifle higher, linger for a while only to go and be forgotten. But some there are that move so powerfully among the forces of the world and the affairs of men that they abide through the generations. Vance was one of these.

His name is an institution in North Carolina. He has touched every phase of the life of our State. His achievements are our inspiration. We trusted him and we honored him. We gave him the best we had. He was a county attorney, a member of the general assembly, twice a Representative in Congress, a captain and a colonel in the Confederate Army, three times governor of the State, and four times elected to the Senate of the United States. All these trusts he filled with the highest fidelity. He did more than this. He led the people upward and onward.

He impressed upon them the force of a great and towering personality. He quickened their lives, steadied their course, and directed their progress. He moved them by moral force and intellectual greatness. Our State will probably not again see his like, but there is left to us the example of his matchless life and character and the splendor of his glorious achievements.

There is no night; the stars go down
To rise upon some other shore;
And bright in Heaven's jeweled crown,
They shine forevermore.

[Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. STEDMAN). The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. PAGE] is recognized next.

[Mr. PAGE of North Carolina addressed the House. See Appendix.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON] is recognized.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, others, by reason of a personal acquaintance and intimate association with the late Senator Vance, have been far better fitted than I to pay tribute to his memory, and it would seem that all that can be said now must be repetition. Yet the beautiful story of the life and character of North Carolina's most beloved son and his noble and unselfish service to his State and the Nation can not be told too often, and never may be told so fully as his wonderful career justifies. His life has been and ever will be a source of pride and inspiration to every patriotic citizen of North Carolina and a favored topic around the firesides from the mountains to the sea. Countless will be the patriots of that State whose hearts will swell with pride when they look upon this statue which our State has so appropriately presented to our country, and which stands among those of the Nation's great men, none of whom was the superior of our Vance. It is the first statue of a North Carolinian to be thus placed in this Hall of Fame of the National Capitol, and it represents our State nobly, for he interpreted and exemplified by his life the true spirit, patriotism, and worth of our people.

When a great man dies, one whose greatness has come through genuine service to his country, the Nation mourns and its sorrow is deep and solemn. But there is always a circle where this sorrow goes far beyond the deep and solemn sorrow of a nation. It is the sorrow that wrings the heart and brings bitter tears from those who knew him as he was, his faults as well as his virtues, those who feel a great personal loss at his taking away. From the number of people who thus mourn on such an occasion we may judge the esteem in which a great man is held.

When on the 14th day of April, 1894, Senator Zebulon B. Vance breathed his last in Washington City and the sad news was flashed back to the State and passed solemnly from town to town and from home to home, the sorrow of our people was keener and more general than was ever evidenced in the State before. In many places strong men wept as children, unashamed, and as the funeral train passed through the State on its way to his mountain home, the land of his birth, great sorrow was manifest at every place where the train halted. In the towns where the people gathered to pay tribute, the most eloquent and touching that has yet been uttered, such sorrow was evidenced as never before and may never be again. It was so all over the State, for he was known and loved by a greater percentage of its population than any other man, and none who ever saw him failed to remember and admire him, for his masterful personality at once grasped and forever held the people.

May we know the cause of this universal sorrow? We can account for the solemn sorrow that pervades the Nation when such a man is called away, but why does the stalwart, brave-souled veteran who has faced death on many battle fields weep when he is told that "Zeb Vance is dead"?

If we can answer truly, we have the secret of the greatness of this truly great man. Vance had rendered to every man, woman, and child in his State a personal service. Did not the sturdy hero of many bloody battles know that his wife and little children had been kept from grim want during the terrible days of war by the great Gov. Vance? Did not he remember that when he was held fast in the relentless grasp of that awful struggle and suffering agonies, not because of his own condition or the fear of death, but because a dependent wife and children whom he had sworn to protect were starving and he was helpless to prevent it, that the glad news came to camp that Vance had found a way to feed and clothe them? What greater service could one render under such circumstances than to find a way under such difficulties to perform the first great duty of a father—to keep the wolf from the door? This service Vance performed for every patriotic son of North Carolina who followed Lee and Jackson and Johnston and brought glory to southern arms. Against what difficulties this service was performed history may sometime tell. Thus he bound the people to him inseparably, and in turn they loved and honored him and gave him prestige and power, and when he died they knew that as a people their best friend was gone.

Ten years after the war had closed Vance was again called to be governor of his State. He had guided its destinies through the dark and stormy night of a terrible war, and by his unselfish and patriotic devotion to the cause of the people had made his name famous and his memory forever cherished. Now, another burden was pressing down upon his people. They had tried for 10 years to bear this burden in their great desire for peace and righteousness after they had fought so valiantly for a lost cause, but their patience was rewarded only by cruelty and oppression. The hand of the tyrant was clutching at their throats and the demon of anarchy was intrenching himself around their homes. The proud head of southern chivalry was bowed low before the unearned power of a horde of vampires, the slum of northern society, that had swooped down on the vanquished South like vultures following the trail of an army. Heathen ignorance had been exalted to power by the incidents of war and was incited to deeds of atrocity too terrible to relate. Thus it became necessary for the South to fight again, to fight a great battle of peace.

She fought and won. Though she had been crushed in war, she could bear it because honors won would compensate, but now it seemed she would forever be put to shame by a cruel hand that could feel no sympathy for her suffering. The germ of civilization and liberty was smoldering in the ruins of a vanquished land, and a great spirit must come to fan it into flame—a flame of emancipation of the dominant race of the South and of the world. A great victory must be won, not with sword and saber, not in the spilling of blood, but by sheer force of courage and intelligence directed against the arrogant power of anarchy, ignorance, and prejudice. This required leadership, wisdom, patience, and statesmanship of the highest order. Fortunately such men still lived in the South, and in North Carolina Vance heard the call and responded.

The gubernatorial campaign of 1876 will ever be remembered as a vital part of the State's history. Vance was opposed by Judge Settle, a man of high character and exceptional ability, but lacking in the traits of leadership that characterized his opponent. A sweeping joint campaign was made of the entire State, and notwithstanding the opposite party had been in complete control of every branch of both the National and State Governments since the war, Vance was elected by a large majority. Thus his people called him to render the second great service to his State, to emancipate them from a political bondage.

Previous to this he had been elected to the United States Senate, but was denied his seat, though he was elected again in 1879 and admitted. His career as a Senator was a fitting climax to his great services to his State and the Nation. He at once took rank among the foremost orators and statesmen of the time, and his work was marked for close study and untiring industry, which undoubtedly hastened his death. His last great speech in the Senate, delivered during the famous debate on the repeal of the Sherman law, and which is considered by many as the ablest defense of bimetalism ever presented, so completely exhausted him that he never was able to enter the Senate Chamber again. His utterances were classic, and he was authority on the subjects he investigated, and he was the leader of his party in the Senate on the important questions of the tariff and finance for several years prior to his death.

In conclusion, I wish to speak briefly of another great service Vance rendered to the country at this time. When he entered the Senate prejudice was still rife both in the North and in the South, though it was slowly waning. But it was evident that bitterness and misunderstanding must obtain for generations if a better understanding were not brought about. Even though the issues had been settled so far as the sword can settle issues, there remained the bitterness of sectional feeling. Of the few southern men of the day who were able to bring to the North the true spirit of the South, Zebulon B. Vance, of North Carolina, and Henry W. Grady, of Georgia, stand out as shining lights. Grady showed the North that the spirit of Lee's army, which they had learned to respect in battle, was the spirit that still lived in the South, and that when these brave men laid down their arms to Grant at Appomattox the war was forever over so far as the true South was concerned. Vance by his good-natured humor, sound logic, and magic personality, and abundant knowledge of political history showed the intelligent audiences of New York and Boston that if "secession and slavery" were crimes, they must have been none the less crimes when advocated in Hartford and Boston—and they applauded him when he told them these things.

Before the unanswerable appeals of Vance and Grady the wall of sectional prejudice melted away like a mist before the morning sun, and they were glad to carry a message back to the South, for they saw that the North and the South would soon clasp hands over the graves of the noble men of the "Blue and the Gray," who died that we as a Nation might live and understand.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from North Carolina is recognized.

[Mr. KITCHIN addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that any Member of the House shall have the right to extend his remarks in the Record on the subject for an indefinite time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. KITCHIN. I move, Mr. Speaker, the adoption of the resolution which has been reported at the desk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the Senate concurrent resolution.

The question was taken, and the Senate concurrent resolution was agreed to.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I do not know that it is exactly in order at the present time, but I ask unanimous consent for the passage of the resolution for printing. It will have to be passed at sometime this session, and we may as well consider and pass it now.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 25) to authorize the printing of the proceedings in Congress and in Statuary Hall relative to unveiling of the statue of Zebulon Baird Vance, and so forth.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed and bound, under the direction of the Joint Committee on Printing, the proceedings in Congress, together with the proceedings at the unveiling in Statuary Hall, upon the acceptance of the statue of Zebulon Baird Vance presented by the State of North Carolina, 10,500 copies, with suitable illustration, of which 5,000 shall be for the use of the Senate and 10,000 for the use of the House of Representatives, and the remaining 1,500 copies shall be for the use and distribution of the Senators and Representatives in Congress from the State of North Carolina.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the discharge of the Committee on Printing, and ask that the resolution be considered now.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that the Committee on Printing be discharged from further consideration of the resolution just read, and that the resolution be considered now. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KITCHIN. I move the adoption of the concurrent resolution, Mr. Speaker.

The Senate concurrent resolution was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bills:

H. R. 9525. An act to establish a national park in the Territory of Hawaii;

H. R. 17053. An act making additional appropriations for the Public Health Service for the fiscal year 1917; and

H. R. 17172. An act further extending appropriations for the necessary operations of the Government and of the District of Columbia under certain contingencies.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 9525. An act to establish a national park in the Territory of Hawaii;

H. R. 17053. An act making additional appropriations for the Public Health Service for the fiscal year 1917; and

H. R. 17172. An act further extending appropriations for the necessary operations of the Government and of the District of Columbia under certain contingencies.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned, pursuant to the order previously made, until Wednesday, August 2, 1916, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of communication from the Secretary of War, submitting an estimate of appropriation for the service of the fiscal year 1917 (H. Doc. No. 1309); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copies of communications from the Secretary of the Interior, submitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation for the Columbia Hospital for Women and Lying-in Asylum for the fiscal year, 1917 (H. Doc. No. 1310); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

3. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in response to House resolution 292, information regarding the transportation of troops to the Mexican border (H. Doc. No. 1311); to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed.

4. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting tentative draft of an item of legislation, with the recommendation that the same be incorporated in the general deficiency bill (H. Doc. No. 1312); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and a joint resolution were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. SHALLENBERGER, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 1159) authorizing the Secretary of War to grant the use of Coos Head Military Reservation, in the State of Oregon, to the cities of Marshfield and North Bend, both being municipal corporations, for park purposes, reported the same without amendment accompanied by a report (No. 1057), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (S. 3699) to donate to the city of St. Augustine, Fla., for park purposes the tract of land known as the powder-house lot, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1058), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. VINSON, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 10926) to amend the act approved June 8, 1906, entitled "An act to amend section 1 of an act entitled 'An act relating to the Metropolitan police of the District of Columbia,' approved February 28, 1901," reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1061), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. HAYDEN, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 6901) authorizing a report upon the feasibility of constructing the Colorado River Indian Irrigation project, reported the same with an amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1062), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. CARY, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 7621) prohibiting the interment of the body of any person in the cemetery known as the Cemetery of the White's Tabernacle, No. 39, of the Ancient United Order of Sons and Daughters, Brethren and Sisters of Moses, in the District of Columbia, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1063), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 7587) to require the recital of the real consideration in deeds of property in the District of Columbia, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1064), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. OAKLEY, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 14816) to provide for the use of public school buildings in the District of Columbia as community forums, and for other purposes, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1066), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. MCKINLEY, from the Committee on the Library, to which was referred the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 230) authorizing the National Society United States Daughters of Eighteen Hundred and Twelve to file its historical material in the Smithsonian Institution and to make annual reports to the secretary thereof, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1067), which said joint resolution and report were referred to the House Calendar.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. SHALLENBERGER, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 2212) to correct the military record of George F. Reid and to pay to his widow, Isabella Reid, a pension, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1059), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and a memorial were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. HULL of Iowa: A bill (H. R. 17232) regulating the rental to be charged for post-office boxes in post offices where there is no free delivery; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. HUGHES: A bill (H. R. 17233) to provide for the publication of textbooks for the use of State school systems; to the Committee on Education.

By Mr. BENNET: A bill (H. R. 17234) to punish discrimination by common carriers engaged in either interstate or foreign commerce on land or by water; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. SMITH of New York: A bill (H. R. 17235) granting the consent of Congress to W. H. Crosby; W. H. Andrews, E. G. Connette; Daniel Good; Henry May; Robert C. Gaupp; Edward Kener, jr.; William F. MacGlashan; and William A. Morgan to construct a bridge across Niagara River within or near the city limits of Buffalo, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. SCHALL: A bill (H. R. 17236) to authorize James D. Markham and Chauncey A. Kelsey and others to construct a dam across the St. Croix River between Minnesota and Wisconsin; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. PARK: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 284) authorizing the Secretary of War to loan, issue, or use and to purchase quartermaster's and medical supplies for the relief of destitute persons in the districts overflowed by the Flint and Chattahoochee Rivers and their tributaries; to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 285) authorizing the Secretary of War to use such means as he has or may be furnished him for the relief of distress and need among the people of Mississippi occasioned by the recent storm; to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. RAGSDALE: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 286) authorizing the Secretary of War to loan, issue, or use and to purchase quartermaster's and medical supplies for the relief of destitute persons in the districts overflowed in South Carolina, and to purchase and use tools and to employ such persons as may be necessary to perform labor upon the highways, roads, and bridges of said flooded districts; to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. HAYDEN (by request): Resolution (H. Res. 331) directing the Federal Trade Commission to investigate and report to the House of Representatives the facts relating to violations of the antitrust laws of the United States, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. WATKINS: Memorial from the Legislature of the State of Louisiana favoring an amendment to the Constitution of the United States prohibiting polygamy; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and a resolution were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ALLEN: A bill (H. R. 17237) granting an increase of pension to Zachariah Holland; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CARY: A bill (H. R. 17238) granting an increase of pension to William Newman; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CLARK of Missouri: A bill (H. R. 17239) granting an increase of pension to William Kingston; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FREEMAN: A bill (H. R. 17240) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Julia M. Dodd, Mansfield Center, Conn.; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GANDY: A bill (H. R. 17241) granting an increase of pension to Josiah H. Gordon; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HUGHES: A bill (H. R. 17242) granting an increase of pension to Carrie E. Sutton; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. KAHN: A bill (H. R. 17243) for the relief of Weldon B. Page; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. KREIDER: A bill (H. R. 17244) granting an increase of pension to Emanuel Lash; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LAFEAN: A bill (H. R. 17245) granting an increase of pension to John C. D. Lower; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. NEELY: A bill (H. R. 17246) granting an increase of pension to John C. Lazier; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17247) granting an increase of pension to Levi Morris; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17248) granting an increase of pension to Erasmus Bucy; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17249) granting an increase of pension to Benjamin Aplin; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17250) granting a pension to Eliza Peel; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17251) granting a pension to Elizabeth Barnhart; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17252) granting a pension to Sturgis G. Grim; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. REILLY: A bill (H. R. 17253) granting an increase of pension to Christina Althen; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. RICKETTS: A bill (H. R. 17254) granting a pension to Mary E. Little; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17255) granting an increase of pension to David Fultz; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also a bill (H. R. 17256) granting an increase of pension to Jesse S. Miller; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also a bill (H. R. 17257) granting an increase of pension to Joshua Griffith; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also a bill (H. R. 17258) granting a pension to Elizabeth A. Carrell; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also a bill (H. R. 17259) granting a pension to Margaret J. Cutright; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also a bill (H. R. 17260) granting an increase of pension to Edwin H. H. McKnight; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also a bill (H. R. 17261) to correct the military record of Francis M. S. Pursell; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri: A bill (H. R. 17262) granting an increase of pension to Jesse C. D. Laney; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. RUSSELL of Ohio: A bill (H. R. 17263) granting an increase of pension to Francis M. Dick; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SABATH: A bill (H. R. 17264) for the relief of the victims of the Eastland disaster; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. SCULLY: A bill (H. R. 17265) for the relief of John Harding; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. SHERWOOD: A bill (H. R. 17266) granting an increase of pension to James E. McCracken; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LITTLEPAGE: Resolution (H. Res. 332) to pay George H. Boske; to the Committee on Accounts.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. BRUCKNER: Petition of German-American Button Co., favoring House bill 14666, relative to copyrighting designs; to the Committee on Patents.

Also, memorial of Association to Resist British Domination of American Commerce, relative to rights of American citizens; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Also, petition of Herman Nessel, the Bronx, N. Y., favoring passage of House bill 6915; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Also, petition of J. P. Edward, favoring House bill 10845, relative to military training in civil educational institutions; to the Committee on Education.

By Mr. DALE of New York: Memorial of National Association Union Volunteer Officers, relative to House bill 386, volunteer officers retired list; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, petition of Oakrest Association, Brooklyn, N. Y., relative to investigating the price of anthracite coal; to the Committee on Rules.

Also, petitions of sundry women of the State of Massachusetts, relative to woman suffrage amendment; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. DOOLING: Memorial of Association to Resist British Domination of American Commerce, relative to rights of American citizens; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. ELSTON: Petition of Charlotte O. Whiting, against preparedness; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. FARR: Memorial of Members of the United Garment Workers of America, favoring the pure food and dairy products resolution; to the Committee on Rules.

Also, petition of William F. Kiesel & Son, of Scranton, Pa., against unlawful seizures by the British Government of the United States mails; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Also, petition of David A. Cotner and David Boies, of Scranton, Pa., against taxation on certain munitions of war; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. FLYNN: Memorial of Oakrest Association, Brooklyn, N. Y., relative to investigating price of anthracite coal; to the Committee on Rules.

Also, memorial of executive committee National Association Union Volunteer Officers, relative to House bill 386, Volunteer officers' retired list; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. KETTNER: Petition of George Fuller; Ernest Riall; A. W. Woods; Charles E. Summer, president Home Telephone Co.; John F. Forward, sr., president Union Title Co.; Alfred D. Lamotte, president Merchants' Association; George E. Bridgeford, Wankowski-Osborn Co.; F. C. Spaulding, president United States National Bank; John Shearer, president Colorado State Society; W. E. Sterne; Ed. F. Stahle, executive secretary Chamber of Commerce; Merchants' National Bank; Mrs. Martha Ingersoll Robinson; H. N. McKie, Parker-Boutelle Hardware Co.; Sam Ferry Smith; E. S. Babcock, proprietor Western Salt Co.; Benard H. Fitzwilliams, Charles Engebretson, Moses Taylor, Leo M. Hickley, C. D. Selsh, Oscar Dennhardt, William Frederick Niedfelt, J. H. Rivers, A. A. Samson, R. G. Reid, Hercules Powder Co., all of San Diego, Cal., protesting against tax on gross receipts of manufacture of munitions in House bill 16763; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of Mammoth Copper Mining Co., the Mountain Copper Co., Selby Smelting & Lead Co., and J. H. Harbour, president Home Industry League of California, all of San Francisco, Cal., protesting against further tax on copper and copper industry in revenue bill; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of J. H. Lubkin, president Inyo Live Stock Association, Lone Pine, Cal., and Boyce, Gates & Johnson, Van Nuys Building, Los Angeles, Cal., favoring Borland resolution No. 148; to the Committee on Labor.

Also, petition of John B. and Helen D. Johnstone, North San Diego; Mrs. Helen H. Landis, Palm City; S. H. Gaines, Palm City; and Fred G. Rew, North San Diego, Cal., protesting against income-tax bill, favoring amendment to double supertax rates, and providing for full publicity of returns; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of George M. Whitney, National City, Cal., favoring passage of House bill 3457, bonus for ex-employees of Panama Canal; to the Committee on Appropriations.

Also, petition of W. W. Workman and 25 other residents of Riverside, Cal., protesting against House bills 6468 and 491, to amend postal laws; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Also, petition of Fred G. Rew, North San Diego, Cal., protesting against inheritance-tax bill; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petitions of M. F. Harlin and 152 other residents of San Diego, and Mrs. Anna Whitelock and 57 others, of San Diego, Cal., protesting against House bill 13778, authorizing the Postmaster General to exclude from the mails certain publications; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Also, petition of J. E. Johnson and 173 others, of San Diego, Cal., protesting against Senate bill 5677, Sunday closing; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Also, petition of Mrs. C. C. Clay, president California Division, United Daughters of the Confederacy, and 26 others, of Los Angeles, Cal., favoring House bill 478, to use cotton money in pensioning Confederate soldiers and widows; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. PRATT: Petition of H. H. Wing, professor of animal industry, New York State College of Agriculture at Cornell University, Ithaca, N. Y., opposing House bill 16307, to authorize the registration of pure-bred live stock; to the Committee on Agriculture.

SENATE.

MONDAY, July 31, 1916.

The Senate met at 10 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, the light of Thy truth shines fair and beautiful on the pathway of man. Thou dost invite us to walk in the light as Thou art in the light, that we may have the fellowship of God. We come before Thee to ask Thy guidance in the duties that are before us for this day, as the thoughts of this Chamber shall be transmuted into the acts of a great Nation. We pray that we may feel the weight of responsibility to our fellow men and to God; and as we think and out of our thinking project plans and make policies for a great Nation, above all may there come only the loving peace of God and the continued blessing and prosperity of the people. For Christ's sake. Amen.

THE JOURNAL.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last, when, on request of Mr. NELSON and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

CALLING OF THE ROLL.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Husting	Norris	Smith, Ga.
Bryan	James	Overman	Smith, S. C.
Chamberlain	Johnson, S. Dak.	Owen	Sterling
Chilton	Jones	Page	Stone
Clapp	Kenyon	Penrose	Swanson
Cullerson	Kern	Pittman	Taggart
Curtis	La Follette	Polindexter	Thomas
Dillingham	Lane	Pomerene	Tillman
Fletcher	McLean	Ransdell	Townsend
Gallinger	Martin, Va.	Reed	Vardaman
Gronna	Martine, N. J.	Sheppard	Walsh
Hardwick	Myers	Sherman	Works
Hollis	Nelson	Simmons

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-one Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 24) accepting from the State of North Carolina the statue of Zebulon Baird Vance and tendering the thanks of Congress for the contribution.

The message also announced that the House had passed the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 25) to authorize the printing of the proceedings in Congress and in Statuary Hall relative to the unveiling of the statue of Zebulon Baird Vance, etc.

The message further announced that the House agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4767) authorizing the Director of the Census to collect and publish statistics of cotton seed and cottonseed products, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House disagrees to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15957) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors, asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. KEATING, Mr. VINSON, and Mr. SELLS managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 13224. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department," approved September 2, 1914; and

H. R. 16912. An act granting the consent of Congress to Trumbull County, Ohio, to construct a bridge across the Mahoning River in the State of Ohio.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. GRONNA presented a memorial of the North Dakota Conference of the Seventh-day Adventists, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to limit the freedom of the press, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. GALLINGER presented petitions of Emma J. Brazier and Martha Foote Crow, of New York City, N. Y., and of Mrs. Frank A. Tapon, of Kansas City, Mo., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit interstate commerce in the products of child labor, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. McLEAN presented a petition of the Central Labor Union of Norwich, Conn., praying for the establishment of a national employment bureau in the Department of Labor, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a memorial of Local Division No. 205, International Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, of Hartford, Conn., remonstrating against the compulsory arbitration of railroad matters, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. TOWNSEND presented a memorial of the East Michigan Conference of the Seventh-day Adventists, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to limit the freedom of the press, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. PHELAN presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Los Angeles County, Cal., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation for compulsory Sunday observance in the District of Columbia, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. THOMPSON presented a petition of sundry citizens of Baldwin, Kans., praying for the enactment of legislation to provide pensions for veterans of the Indian wars, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Hutchinson, Kans., praying for the enactment of legislation to increase the pensions of widows of veterans of the Civil War, which was ordered to lie on the table.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. RANDELL, from the Committee on Public Health and National Quarantine, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 204) to promote the efficiency of the Public Health Service, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 745) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 5885) to provide Federal aid in caring for indigent tuberculous persons, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 746) thereon.

Mr. OVERMAN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the amendment submitted by Mr. JONES on the 10th instant to the bill (H. R. 3690) repealing certain sections contained in the urgent deficiency act, approved December 22, 1911, asked to be discharged from its further consideration and that it be referred to the Committee on Claims, which was agreed to.

Mr. HUGHES, from the Committee on Patents, to which was referred the bill (S. 4857) granting an extension of patent to Thomas A. Dicks, reported it without amendment.

Mr. BROUSSARD, from the Committee on the Library, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 143) granting permission for the erection of a monument in the Arlington National Cemetery, Va., to the memory and in honor of the members of the various orders of sisters who gave their services as nurses on battle fields, in hospitals, and on floating hospitals during the Civil War, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 747) thereon.

Mr. CHILTON, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. 2512) to provide for the appointment of an additional district judge for the southern district of West Virginia, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 748) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the resolution (S. Res. 168) submitted by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] on April 11, 1916, requesting the Attorney General to examine into the facts concerning the illegal killing of seals, etc., reported it without amendment.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED.

Bills and joint resolutions were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. SIMMONS:

A bill (S. 6727) granting a pension to Victoria Gore Owen (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota:

A bill (S. 6728) granting an increase of pension to Samuel Holiday (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. McLEAN:

A bill (S. 6729) granting an increase of pension to Corinth A. Root (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. GRONNA:

A bill (S. 6730) revoking authority to lease Sibley Island, in the Missouri River, to the city of Bismarck, N. Dak.; to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. CHILTON:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 158) proposing an amendment to the Constitution; and

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 159) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. STERLING submitted an amendment providing that moneys and credits, etc., of any person, firm, association, or corporation within the District of Columbia, shall be assessed at their fair cash value and on which taxes shall be collected at the rate of one-half of 1-per cent thereof, intended to be proposed by him to the District of Columbia appropriation bill (H. R. 15774), which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. LEE of Maryland submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $475.45 to pay John A. Warfield for injuries received while in the discharge of his duties as assistant engineer, United States Treasury Department, intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

THE REVENUE.

Mr. PHELAN submitted amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 16763) to increase the revenue, and for other purposes, which were referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed.

TABLES OF IMPORTS.

Mr. GAILLINGER. Mr. President, I have a brief table showing the imports of merchandise and agricultural products in March, 1916 and 1915, as compared with March, 1913, also a table giving a comparison between April, 1916 and 1915, and April, 1913, which I ask to have inserted in the Record without reading.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered. The tables referred to are as follows:

Imports of merchandise and agricultural products in March, 1916 and 1915, under the Underwood law, and March, 1913, under the Payne law, using for comparison products having the most extreme foreign competition.

Products.	Values, 1916.	Values, 1915.	Difference.	Payne law, 1913.
			Increase.
Automobiles and parts.....	$121,023	$101,407	$19,616	$119,950
Breadstuffs.....	1,534,701	1,340,194	194,507	1,314,298
Cloths (cotton).....	1,101,237	928,566	172,671	721,902
Films and plates.....	125,834	97,842	28,292	145,019
Fish.....	1,163,229	1,010,480	152,749	969,993
Fruit and nuts.....	3,604,387	3,215,684	388,723	3,088,108
Handkerchiefs (linen).....	182,579	158,975	23,604	101,474
Hides and skins.....	14,252,917	9,205,815	5,047,102	8,891,428
Lace and lace articles.....	880,678	860,407	20,271	1,370,713
Laths and shingles.....	366,782	342,785	24,017	127,123
Leather and tanned skins.....	1,287,923	831,969	455,954	635,669
Nets and nettings.....	246,926	88,638	158,288	104,091
Paper and manufactures.....	2,268,803	2,109,826	158,977	1,783,404
Perfumery, etc.....	266,348	221,659	44,689	177,529
Seeds.....	2,437,164	1,775,208	661,956	1,194,231
Silk manufactures.....	3,675,949	2,332,822	1,343,127	2,437,253
Vegetables.....	1,115,631	1,062,969	52,662	960,857
Watches.....	304,669	261,080	43,589	205,280
Wool.....	19,014,608	13,674,121	5,340,484	4,262,694
Yarns.....	171,918	79,620	92,298	55,958
Totals 20 products.....	54,131,300	39,399,127	14,732,173	28,666,618
			Decrease.
Aluminum crude.....	105,452	129,759	24,307	305,451
Aluminum manufactures.....	6,303	18,618	12,315	60,767
Clocks.....	19,975	56,639	36,664	55,827
Cutlery.....	47,363	153,990	106,197	146,979
Eggs.....	15,417	24,746	11,329	807,350
Embroideries (cotton).....	456,632	489,470	32,838	64,362
Enameled ware.....	37,582	46,232	8,650	27,735
Glass (plate).....	160	1,476	1,316	470,939
Other glassware.....	179,664	412,815	233,151	755,242
Gloves (leather).....	364,559	711,965	347,406	44,675
Knit goods less stockings.....	140,110	348,905	208,795	157,430
Meat and dairy products.....	1,860,204	2,931,545	1,071,341	1,121,931
Oilcloth and linoleum.....	44,882	100,879	55,997	257,355
Silk artificial.....	261,944	328,877	61,933	241,455
Stockings (cotton).....	22,754	172,575	149,821	23,293
Tin plate.....	7,535	8,575	1,040	1,268,567
Wood pulp.....	1,062,922	1,519,121	456,199	1,127,488
Wool manufactures.....	1,419,913	2,020,791	600,878	1,437,488
Totals 18 products.....	6,071,401	9,471,006	3,399,605	28,666,618
Increase list.....	54,131,300	39,399,127	14,732,173	28,666,618
Totals 38 products.....	60,202,701	48,870,133	11,332,568	35,633,469

C. H. Brown, chairman of the hosiery manufacturers' legislative committee, in presenting the import comparison for March, 1916, 1915, and 1913, shows that there was an increase in the imports of 20 products in March, 1916, compared with an increase of 3 products in March, 1915.

Automobiles and parts, breadstuffs, cotton cloth, films and plates, fish, fruit and nuts, handkerchiefs (linen), hides and skins, lace and lace articles, leather and tanned skins, nets and nettings, paper and manufactures, perfumery, seeds, silk manufactures, vegetables, watches, wool, and yarns increase from $39,399,127 in March, 1915, to $54,131,300 in March, 1916, compared with $28,666,618 in March, 1913, under the Payne law.

Aluminum scrap, aluminum manufactures, clocks, cutlery, eggs, embroideries, enameled ware, plate glass, other glassware, leather gloves, knit goods (less stockings), meat and dairy products, oilcloth and linoleum, artificial silk, cotton stockings, tin plate, wood pulp, and wool manufactures show a slight decrease in imports of $3,399,605 from $9,471,006 in March, 1915, to $6,071,401 in March, 1916, compared with $6,966,851 in March, 1913, under the Payne law.

Total imports of the 38 products in March, 1916, were $60,202,701; in March, 1915, $48,870,133; in March, 1913, $35,633,469, which shows that imports of the 38 products in March, 1916, increased almost 100 per cent over the imports of the same products in March, 1913, under the Payne law.

The total imports of all merchandise in March, 1916, were $213,589,785; in March, 1915, $157,982,016, showing an increase of $55,607,769, while the ad valorem rate of duty, based on imports for consumption, falls from 12.66 per cent in 1915 to 9.97 per cent in March, 1916, compared with 15.84 per cent for the nine months ending March, 1914.

Statements are made by public speakers and in the press that much of our present prosperity is due to the decrease in imports since the beginning of the foreign war, but official customs figures show a very heavy increase in imports of leading competitive products, and, furthermore, imports of these products have been much heavier under the Underwood law than they were under the Payne law; consequently American producers of these products are justified in demanding additional protection now as well as after the close of the foreign war.

Imports of stockings are at present, and have been for some time, very small, but stocking manufacturers know that this is caused entirely by the foreign war, and also, that if the foreign war had not occurred and imports had increased as rapidly as they did from March, 1914, up to the beginning of the war, they would find it very difficult to run mills on anything near full time, and no stocking manufacturer in American can compete with the price at which stockings of foreign make have entered this market since the Underwood law became operative, and, while not being positive, think this same condition no doubt applies to many other products having strong foreign competition; and it can be stated that quite recently knit goods have entered the United States in considerable quantities from Japan, causing knit-goods manufacturers to believe that the long-threatened invasion of cheap knit goods from Japan has finally become a reality.

Imports of merchandise and agricultural products in April, 1916 and 1915, under the Underwood law, and April, 1913, under the Payne law, using for comparison products having the most severe foreign competition.

Products.	Values, 1916.	Values, 1915.	Difference.	Paynelaw, 1913.
			Increase.
Aluminum scrap.....	$206,548	$50,139	$156,409	$586,837
Automobiles and parts.....	145,728	123,649	22,079	131,065
Watches and parts.....	302,587	224,202	78,385	225,165
Cotton cloths.....	831,837	433,367	398,470	690,083
Lace and lace articles.....	835,141	833,225	1,916	1,027,181
Nets or nettings.....	278,147	85,874	192,273	97,793
Yarns (linen).....	68,350	62,744	5,606	62,216
Fruits and nuts.....	3,677,163	3,567,753	109,410	3,851,220
Hides and skins.....	16,453,552	10,937,002	5,516,550	10,407,873
Enameled ware.....	25,429	23,566	1,863	60,731
Tin plate.....	31,224	5,947	25,277	30,092
Leather and tanned skins.....	1,353,186	764,075	589,111	759,737
Leather gloves.....	375,735	353,250	22,476	427,036
Paper and manufactures.....	2,191,679	1,832,541	359,138	1,795,320
Perfumery, etc.....	275,157	191,801	83,356	194,984
Seeds.....	2,164,767	1,585,012	579,755	558,754
Silk manufactures.....	3,250,210	1,783,979	1,466,231	2,008,567
Lath and shingles.....	464,000	436,294	27,706	228,146
Wood pulp.....	1,701,985	833,004	871,981	1,189,688
Wool and angora hair.....	13,797,063	12,978,767	818,296	2,843,112
Total, 20 products.....	48,432,488	37,126,200	11,306,288	27,174,627
			Decrease.
Aluminum manufactures.....	3,774	8,317	4,543	102,472
Breadstuffs.....	1,915,186	2,000,526	85,340	1,443,851
Clocks and parts.....	6,965	20,421	13,456	62,601
Embroideries.....	284,671	476,549	191,878	841,801
Stockings (cotton).....	6,232	70,999	64,767	239,674
Knit goods (cotton).....	33,131	144,335	111,204	41,690
Eggs.....	5,856	28,113	22,257	807,350
Handkerchiefs (linen).....	86,731	123,176	36,445	76,532
Fish.....	843,307	906,386	63,079	746,895
Plate glass.....	528	538	10	33,863
Other glass.....	177,911	226,037	48,126	544,336
Cutlery.....	27,857	83,431	55,574	136,157
Meat and dairy products.....	1,975,979	2,594,047	618,068	1,179,020
Oil cloth and linoleum.....	25,139	82,761	57,622	138,871
Films and plates.....	106,682	150,122	43,440	184,132
Silk, artificial.....	166,051	207,782	41,731	204,374
Vegetables.....	778,991	937,375	158,384	738,414
Wool manufactures.....	1,100,829	1,367,136	266,307	991,382
Total, 18 products.....	7,545,820	9,428,051	1,882,231	7,706,067
From increase list.....	48,432,488	37,126,200	11,306,288	27,174,627
Total, 38 products.....	55,978,308	46,554,251	9,424,057	34,880,694

Very little can be added to the story told by the above figures, which show a rapid increase in imports. Twenty products increase heavily, as against 5 products in April, 1915, and the decrease in imports of 18 products is very small; but the totals, covering the entire 38 products, have increased nearly 100 per cent over imports under the Payne law in April, 1913, or April, 1915, and is a very decided warning to manufacturers as to what they can expect after the close of the foreign war.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were each read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Commerce:

H. R. 13224. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department," approved September 2, 1914; and H. R. 16912. An act granting the consent of Congress to Trumbull County, Ohio, to construct a bridge across the Mahoning River in the State of Ohio.

AMENDMENT OF FEDERAL RESERVE ACT.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed.

Mr. OWEN and Mr. POINDEXTER addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. OWEN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 13391, the amendment of the Federal reserve act.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Oklahoma.

The motion was agreed to.

And the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13391) to amend the act approved December 23, 1913, known as the Federal reserve act, by adding a new section.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry. What becomes of the calendar?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The calendar is taken out of the way by the adoption of the motion to proceed to the consideration of this bill.

JUDGES AS CANDIDATES FOR OFFICE.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, in the nomination by the national convention of the Republican Party at Chicago, on June 10, 1916, of Charles Evans Hughes, then an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court, as its candidate for the office of President of the United States, a tradition was broken which had acquired, as it was supposed, the force and vigor almost of a constitutional mandate. No political party contemplating a successful campaign, whatever the exigencies confronting it, had ever theretofore ventured to offer as its choice for the suffrages of the American people for the office of Chief Magistrate one who had assumed the duties of a judge of the highest tribunal of the Republic.

One Chief Justice sullied his fame by intriguing to secure a nomination for the Presidency first from one political party and then from another. His successor added to the esteem in which his country held him by dignifiedly rejecting the suggestion that he become a candidate. Roscoe Conkling was offered the place of Chief Justice by President Grant but declined, as it was popularly understood at the time, because he cherished the ambition to become President himself and felt that acceptance would imply the surrender of any chance which the unrevealed future might bring to realize it.

There seems to be historical foundation for the story that the talented and spirited daughter of Salmon P. Chase, then the wife of Gov. Sprague, of Rhode Island, on being told by Senator Sumner that her father had been nominated for Chief Justice, shook her pretty finger angrily in his face and accused him of being in a conspiracy to defeat her ambition to see him President.

These incidents, occurring over 40 years ago, have served to intensify the conviction that has prevailed since our Government was established that a citizen who is elevated to the position of a Justice of the Supreme Court should, and that he may as well, dismiss every ambition to rise, if it be to rise, to the office of President. In a general way the reasons underlying this heretofore hallowed sentiment are well understood.

The Federal judiciary system has been extolled by discriminating students of government as ideal in respect to the manner of the selection of the judges and in the provisions intended to secure their independence, particularly that under which they enjoy a life tenure. It has, on the other hand, been attacked by men eminent in learning and public service as fundamentally wrong, a solecism in a republic, under which it is charged the national courts have become the refuge of arrogant and defiant wealth, and all questions having a social aspect are viewed from the standpoint of suitors of that class. The struggle between these two contending forces has gone on since our Government began. Jefferson was a particularly bitter assailant of the Federal system. The Dred Scott decision gave rise to renewed attacks upon it at a period about midway between his time and ours. The modern muckrakers have found it a shining mark.

Having in mind their virulent, if not vicious, criticisms, and particularly their demand that the judges of the Federal courts be elected for a limited term, a writer who exhibits a deep veneration for the system they seek to supplant notes that organized labor favors the change and despairingly asserts that it is bound to come, quoting an eminent British economist of the last century, who asserted that the great problems of the future will be industrial in character. This was the belief of Judge Seymour D. Thompson, one of the foremost of the modern American law writers, who, in arguing for an appointive as against an elective judiciary, said:

If the proposition to amend our judicial institutions so as to make the Federal judiciary elective instead of appointive is once seriously discussed before the people nothing can stay the growth of that sentiment.

A commentator, who recognizes the weaknesses of both systems, has the following to say:

An elective court is to a certain extent a demagogic court, especially if its judges are candidates for renomination and reelection. On the other hand, an appointive court is tyrannical. * * * Moreover, an appointive judiciary does most of its thinking on the side of money and power. An appointive judge has no more sympathy with what is called popular right than a professional soldier, and for the same reason. (25 Am. Law Review, p. 290.)

I am not enamored of the Federal system so generously eulogized, but I am not unmindful of the force of the arguments advanced in vindication of it nor of the excellencies which may be justly claimed for it. Whether they are offset by vices which inhere in it and flame forth from time to time is another question. The agitation to which reference has been made was so rife in his day that Story, in his commentaries on the Constitution, entered upon an elaborate justification of the method of selecting Federal judges and the tenure under which they hold, which dissertation, however it may have been excelled in respect to diction, has never been surpassed in the strength and fullness of its reasoning.

The whole burden of the argument is that the necessary tendency of the elective system is to impair the independence of the judges, who, in consequence of the ordinary frailty of human nature, would be influenced to a greater or lesser degree in their official action by the risk of retirement as a penalty for decisions bringing them into popular disfavor. It assumes that the judge who must go before the people at intervals, if he would remain in office, would be altogether likely to accommodate his views in respect to questions submitted to him to those prevalent among those whose suffrages he must seek or to yield to the desires of those whose power and influence are potent in the election. The learned author betrays some uneasiness lest popular opinion may not be without influence upon the minds of the judges, even with the safeguards which the Constitution, as he views it, so wisely provides. He says:

The truth is, that even with the most secure tenure of office during good behavior, the danger is not that the judges will be too firm in resisting public opinion, and in defense of private rights or public liberties, but that they will be too ready to yield themselves to the passions and politics and prejudices of the day. * * * Few men possess the firmness to resist the torrent of popular opinion or are content to sacrifice present ease and public favor in order to earn the slow rewards of a conscientious discharge of duty; the sure but distant gratitude of the people; and the severe but enlightened award of posterity. (2 Story on the Constitution, sec. 1619.)

To support the views for which he contends, Story appends a note, being an extract from the appendix to Tucker's Blackstone, in which the very erudite author, one of the earliest writers on the Constitution, says:

Judges ought not only to be incapable of holding any other office at the same time, but even of appointment to any but a judicial office. For the hope of favor is always more alluring, and generally more dangerous, than the fear of offending. (2 Story on the Constitution, p. 433.)

He would have judges ineligible to appointment even to any but a judicial office lest they should court the favor of the appointing power by conforming their decisions to its wishes actual or conjectural.

It is of no consequence whether the preferment to which the judge looks comes by appointment by the President or by election by the people. If there is just cause for believing that the effect of his ambition would be evil in the one case, it must be malign in the other.

The argument against the elective system is thus put by Prof. Leonard Jones, a law writer of renown, in an article in the American Law Review:

"The worst thing, however, about the elective system is not the fact that it affords unworthy men the chance to obtain judicial office by purchase or other corrupt practices, but that it necessarily to a greater or less extent destroys the independence of the judges. What chance," he adds, "is there that a judge who is shortly to seek a reelection by the people will uphold the law and justice in a case where the popular clamor is against law and justice?"

Obviously, if there is no chance to secure justice against popular clamor before a judge seeking reelection, there is no chance to secure justice under such conditions before the same judge contemplating becoming a candidate before the people for any other office.

I would not have it understood that I indorse altogether the views thus expressed. I refer to them in order to make it clear that the claim of superior excellency in the Federal judiciary system rests upon the fact that under it the judges are subject to no temptation to consult the popular will or the popular whim in their official acts. But if one of those same judges may voluntarily become a candidate for public office, if he may resign and enter the arena of politics to solicit the suffrages of the people for a place more to his liking, or more to be coveted than the honorable station to which he has been appointed for life, without incurring the penalty of public disfavor and consequent defeat, all, or practically all, the advantages claimed for the Federal system are gone.

In all solemnity I warn the defenders of that system and those who believe it the bulwark of vested rights, the safeguard of liberty under the Constitution, that it can not endure if a justice of the Supreme Court of the United States shall ever, except under the most extraordinary circumstances of national peril, difficult to conceive, become a successful candidate for President of the United States.

Such a precedent would be abundant warrant for Federal judges generally to become candidates for governor, for United States Senator, for Representative in Congress, or other elective offices eagerly sought for and giving promise of a more eventful career or offering other attractions beyond those of the bench. Indeed, it may be expected that whenever the factional spirit runs high within a party the eyes of the managers would be turned to the bench for a candidate who, temporarily withdrawn from the arena of politics, had no part in the contentions that created or threatened to create a schism, and who is consequently acceptable to all those professing allegiance to the party to which he belongs. The very aloofness of the judge will often add to his availability as a candidate.

I am disposed to believe that the danger is not so much that a judge harboring ambitions for further political preferment will actually be influenced by his hopes as it is that becoming a candidate or being known to cherish a desire to fill an elective office, or being suspected of entertaining such a desire, those whose wishes concerning litigation upon which he may have been called upon to pass have been defeated, will attribute to him a purpose in connection therewith to improve his political prospects. A proneness to assign to others, and particularly to political antagonists, unworthy motives is a vice that is quite too common. The deplorable consequence of criticism of that character must be recognized by all. He who undermines the just confidence of the people in the courts sets the torch to the temple of liberty, but he is scarcely more reprehensible than the man or set of men who, for partisan advantage or in the hope of party success, gives occasion for such criticism.

The considerations which have been advanced apply with redoubled force to the Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States. Indeed, they lose in weight almost in direct proportion as the court to which they are applied suffers in dignity by comparison with that great tribunal.

No one would esteem it particularly reprehensible in a justice of the peace, though he held by appointment for life, to aspire to some elective office generally regarded as higher in grade. It is perhaps because only petty cases come before such magistrates that they are rarely appointed for life. And so with a judge of a State court of first instance. In the case of a justice of the highest court of a State the evil would be limited not only geographically and in the number of people affected, but in respect to the gravity of the questions touching which an unappealable judgment may be rendered.

A great gap lies between even the inferior Federal courts and the Supreme Court of the Nation—the errors of the former may be corrected by the latter. It is the last resource of the wronged citizen, the final arbiter of all controversies involving—the Constitution, the laws of the United States, and treaties made or which shall be made under their authority.

It is given a special dignity by the Constitution itself beyond that arising from its appellate powers, by which it is provided that the President—shall, with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint ambassadors, other public ministers and consuls, judges of the Supreme Court—

Not of inferior courts—and all other officers of the United States whose appointments are not herein otherwise provided for and which shall be established by law.

The section quoted continues to the effect that—

Congress may by law vest the appointment of such inferior officers as they think proper in the President alone, in the courts of law, or in the heads of departments.

Judges of the inferior courts are not specifically named in the section at all, and it is even plausibly argued that the law might authorize their appointment without the concurrent action of the Senate. But the functions of the Supreme Court, its vast powers, and its magnificent history set it apart, so that what might be tolerated in a member of a court invested with less majesty might be an offense in one whose talents and the favor of the constituted authorities had raised him to a place in the greatest court on earth. Its eulogists have been many. Martin Van Buren, speaking of it, and borrowing from Madison, once said:

There exists not upon this earth, and there never did exist, a judicial tribunal clothed with powers so various and so important.

The following epigrammatic expressions from De Tocqueville evidence the profound impression which a study of its jurisdiction and its work made upon that philosophical writer. He says:

A more imposing judicial power was never constituted by any people.

It may be affirmed that, although its constitution is essentially judicial, its prerogatives are almost entirely political.

In the nations of Europe the courts of justice are only called upon to try the controversies of private individuals, but the Supreme Court of the United States summons sovereign powers to its bar. When the clerk of the court advances on the steps of the tribunal and simply says,

"The State of New York versus the State of Ohio," it is impossible not to feel that the court which he addresses is no ordinary body; and when it is recollected that one of these parties represents one million and the other two millions of men, one is struck by the responsibility of the seven [nine] judges whose decision is about to satisfy or to disappoint so large a number of their fellow citizens.

The peace, the prosperity, and the very existence of the Union are vested in the hands of the seven [now nine] judges.

Without their active cooperation the Constitution would be a dead letter.

It is because of the tremendous responsibilities which they assume that an enlightened public opinion has until now frowned upon any movement to take from among the members of that court a candidate for the office of President or to countenance any ambition by which any of them might be stirred for the chair of the Executive. When Chief Justice Waite was tempted, he wrote the beautiful letter quoted in the following press notice appearing in the New York Times of November 27, 1875:

CHIEF JUSTICE WAITE IS ASKED TO RUN FOR PRESIDENT AND DECLINES, GIVING HIS REASONS.

TOLEDO, November 26.

The Commercial of to-morrow morning will contain an article on Chief Justice Waite and the Presidency, embracing an extract from a private letter from that gentleman in answer to one from a friend urging his assent to a movement in his behalf in that connection. The judge positively refuses such assent, and in giving his reasons therefor, says:

"Of course, I am always grateful to my friends for any effort in my behalf, and no one ever had those more faithful or indulgent. But do you think it quite right for one occupying the first judicial position in the land to permit the use of his name for a political position? The office came to me covered with honor, and when I accepted it my chief duty was not to make it a stepping-stone to something else, but to preserve its purity, and, if possible, make my name as honorable as that of my predecessors. No man ought to accept this place unless he shall take a vow to leave it as honorable as he found it. There ought never to be any necessity for rebuilding from below. All additions should be above. In my judgment, the Constitution might wisely have prohibited the election of a Chief Justice to the Presidency. Entertaining such a view, could I properly or consistently permit my name to be used for the promotion of a political combination as now suggested? If I should do so, could I at all times and in all cases remain an unbiased judge in the estimation of the people?"

Justice Hughes felt impelled to take the same view when ardent and impulsive friends would have him become a candidate in 1912. The story of his refusal to entertain the idea is told in an article over the signature of Rabbi Stephen S. Wise, appearing in the same journal, referred to heretofore, under date of June 21, 1912, which I ask may be printed in full in the RECORD as an appendix to my remarks.

THE VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

[The article referred to will be found in the appendix to Mr. WALSH'S remarks.]

MR. WALSH. Mr. President, in this article, in which the distinguished divine repeats the substance of an interview just had with the then Justice Hughes, the latter is represented as saying:

The Supreme Court must not be dragged into politics. A judge of the Supreme Court should not be available, though he be nominally eligible for elective offices. The moment he assumes the judicial office he ceases to be a partisan and knows, or should know, no partisan obligation. The moment he accepts a party nomination one or more things happen and happen explicable.

First, a political party may undertake to capitalize the judicial decisions of its candidate, than which nothing could be more deeply violative of the spirit of the judicial institution. His decisions would, moreover, become subject to the partisan and passionate review of partisan strife. Worst of all, it is not inconceivable that, if men are to step from the bench to elective office, decisions may ultimately be rendered with a view to the contingency of such public and necessarily partisan review.

Such a situation would be certain to lessen the independence of the judiciary, as it would inevitably impair the Nation's confidence in the unswerving integrity of the court. Of what real and permanent value were the decisions of a judge to-day who on the morrow may choose or be chosen to sue for the favor and suffrage of the electorate?

More important than the outcome of the present political contest, however large it looms at the present, is the perpetuating of the organic institutions or sovereignty of the Republic. One such institution coordinate with the executive and legislative is the judicial. The people rightly believe in the integrity and the incorruptibility of the Supreme Bench. The Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States are privileged by virtue of their office to render service of the highest order to the Nation.

The performance of that service and the maintenance of the dignity of that office depends in largest part upon the will of the members of that court to suffer no personal ambition for elective office, however great their gifts, and though their fitness be in every other respect beyond question, to influence their judgment or to affect the attitude of the Nation to the Supreme Court as a tribunal, which, without personal aims and above private ambition, seeks to interpret the law upon the basis of the Constitution of the United States.

I hope that as a Justice of the Supreme Court, I am rendering public service, and may continue to do so for some years, but the Supreme Court must not be dragged into politics, and no man is as essential to his country's well-being as is the unstained integrity of the courts.

Among the encomiums pronounced upon the determination which the eminent justice then formed, none attracted more widespread attention than that delivered by ex-President Taft, who appointed him, in the course of an address before the American Bar Association at its annual meeting in the city of Montreal, Canada, on September 1, 1913. It was an occasion of exceptional brilliancy in the history of the American bar. There was assembled the brightest and brainiest lawyers of the Republic and of the Dominion. They had congregated there to listen to an address by Viscount Haldane, Lord High Chancellor of Great Britain, who was introduced by the Chief Justice of the United States, temporarily presiding. He was followed by the distinguished ex-President, then, as now, a professor of law in Yale College. The latter dwelt upon his favorite theme, the excellence of the Federal judiciary, and particularly the supreme wisdom of the life tenure and of the appointive as against the elective system. He restated and amplified with great skill the arguments outlined heretofore, saying in the midst of his discourse:

Other benefits from the life tenure in its effect upon the judges who enjoy it are that it makes the incumbents give their whole mind to their work, to order their household with a view to always being judges, and to take vows, so to speak, as to their future conduct. They must put aside all political ambitions. One of the great debts which the American people owe to Mr. Justice Hughes is the example that he set in the last presidential election, when the most serious consideration was being given to making him the candidate of the Republican Party. He announced his irrevocable determination not to enter the political field because he had assumed the judicial ermine.

This was in accordance with the common sense of the proprieties expressed, at the time of his appointment to the Supreme Bench, by the Washington Star, thus:

Public sentiment is opposed to going to the Supreme Court for a presidential candidate, and all political aspirations are expected to die under the folds of the black silk gown.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, if it will not interrupt the continuity of the Senator's remarks, I venture to inquire whether the ex-President, Mr. Taft, has not, since the nomination of Mr. Hughes, expressed his entire satisfaction both with his nomination and with his acceptance?

Mr. WALSH. That is my understanding.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, will the Senator cite the time and circumstance?

Mr. THOMAS. The time was a very few days after the nomination, the occasion being the meeting of the two gentlemen, the ex-President and the presidential candidate, I think at the Astor Hotel in New York, a few days after the candidate went there. My authority is derived from the reports in the New York press.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; some newspaper reports.

Mr. THOMAS. Well, Mr. President, I have not seen that statement denied or challenged by anyone, and least of all by either of the parties to the reputed conversation.

Mr. WALSH. It appears that another distinguished justice held similar views as to the propriety of his entering the race for the Presidency, as is to be gathered from the following from the Washington Chronicle of August 28, 1874:

When the name of Justice Miller was urged in certain Republican journals he very promptly authorized a publication in the New York Times that under no circumstances would he allow himself to be a candidate for any political office; that when he accepted his judicial position he abandoned political aspirations, and that he believed it inconsistent with the dignity or purity of the bench for judges to allow themselves to become possible or probable candidates for any political office, however distinguished or honorable.

Justice Miller is said to have written more opinions interpreting the Constitution while on the Supreme Court than any other member save Marshall.

The late Senator John T. Morgan, of Alabama, a profound lawyer, thought an amendment to the fundamental law should enforce the virtue exhibited by the justices to whose views reference has just been made. In an article contributed to the North American Review for February, 1887, he said:

The Constitution should provide and public opinion should earnestly support the provision that a judge appointed for life should be consecrated for life to the service of the country only in a judicial calling.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, will the Senator permit a question?

Mr. WALSH. I shall be glad to do so.

Mr. GALLINGER. As to the inferior courts provided for by the Constitution, it is provided that the judges shall be appointed for life. Does the Senator extend his criticisms to the justices of those courts, or does he simply include the Supreme Court of the United States?

Mr. WALSH. My criticism is a matter of no great consequence. I have laid before the Senate the criticism of men whose word before the country goes very much further than anything I can submit. As the Senator asks me, however, for my own view, I answer yes. If there is any reason whatever for giving a life tenure to judges of the inferior Federal courts, that same reason demands that they never become candidates for any political office.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit another question. In certain States judges are appointed for life by the governor. Would the Senator extend his criticism to those cases?

Mr. WALSH. I do; and I am just going to call attention to a large number of constitutional provisions recognizing the evil, and forbidding any such judges to become candidates for office.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator answers my question very frankly. I simply wanted to get his view of the case. I did not know whether the Senator was simply arguing that the principle should apply to the justices of the Supreme Court or whether he would extend it as he has extended it, and I am very much obliged to the Senator for answering.

Mr. WALSH. The Senator will understand that I have argued that it extends to all of them, but applies with especial force to the justices of the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. WALSH. I do.

Mr. OWEN. I call the attention of the Senator to the fact that in every case where a State judge is appointed for life the constitution of the State provides for his recall by act of the legislature.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think not, Mr. President.

Mr. OWEN. I state that as a fact.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator has not acquainted himself with the constitution of the State of New Hampshire, where a few years ago the Democratic Party undertook to nominate a member of the supreme court of our State for the office of governor, and there is no recall in our constitution.

Mr. OWEN. The constitution of New Hampshire provides for the recall, by act of the legislature, of the judges of the supreme bench of New Hampshire.

Mr. WALSH. The universality of the belief in America that judges, in the language of Judge Taft, "must put aside all political ambition," finds expression in the constitutions of many of the States. California has preserved, through various mutations, the following from its constitution of 1849:

The justices of the supreme court and district judges shall be ineligible to any other office during the term for which they shall have been elected.

The people of Illinois attempted to assure themselves against the evils of ambitious judges by inserting the following provision in their constitution, adopted in 1848:

The judges of the supreme and circuit courts shall not be eligible to any other office or public trust in this State or the United States during the term for which they are elected, nor for one year thereafter. All votes for either of them for any elective office (except that of judge of the supreme or circuit courts), given by the general assembly, or the people, shall be void.

This became the model for a like inhibition of the Nevada constitution of 1864, as follows:

The justices of the supreme court and the district judges shall be ineligible to any office, other than a judicial office, during the term for which they shall have been elected; and all elections or appointments of any such judges by the people, legislature, or otherwise, during said period, to any office other than judicial, shall be void.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. WALSH. I do.

Mr. THOMAS. I merely wish to remind the Senator that notwithstanding that very just inhibition, two judges of the Supreme Court of Nevada—one a Republican and the other a Democrat—are defying the restraints placed upon them by that provision, and I think by their oaths of office, and are candidates, respectively, for the Senate of the United States. I have no doubt they have received some stimulus in their respective campaigns from the action of the Republican national convention in taking a justice of the Supreme Court for their candidate.

Mr. WALSH. The constitution of Wisconsin, adopted in 1848, provides that:

Judges of the supreme and circuit courts shall hold no office of public trust, except a judicial office, during the term for which they are respectively elected, and all votes for either of them for any office, except a judicial office, given by the legislature or the people shall be void.

The Michigan constitution of 1850 provides that:

Judges of the circuit court shall be ineligible to any other than a judicial office during the term for which they are elected, and for one year thereafter. All votes for any person elected such judge for any office other than judicial, given either by the legislature or the people, shall be void.

That of New York, adopted in 1894, has the following provision:

The judges of the court of appeals and the justices of the supreme court shall not hold any other office or public trust. All votes for any of them, for any other than a judicial office, given by the legislature or the people, shall be void.

Many of the States, notably Indiana and Iowa, provided in terms like those employed in the constitution of California, that a judicial officer shall not be eligible to hold any other office during the term for which he was elected, evidently to disqualify a judge who might otherwise resign to become a candidate.

These provisions were not inserted on the suggestion of the theorists and doctrinaires speculating upon evils which might ensue, but which had never been felt. They originated with practical men who thus provided against the recurrence of abuses and scandals of which their experience afforded them abundant knowledge.

The resolution to which I address myself, introduced by the senior Senator from Colorado on June 13, 1916, looks to embodying in the National Constitution the principle which finds expression in the clauses heretofore quoted from the various State constitutions, by proposing the following amendment:

No judge of the Supreme Court or any inferior court now or hereafter ordained or established shall, during his continuance in office or for a period of two years after such continuance, be qualified for or eligible to any elective office under the Constitution and laws of the United States.

The disposition of that resolution may well be postponed until calmer counsel may be looked for and the spirit of party is less rampant. It may be that the people ought not, by express provision of the Constitution, to preclude themselves from calling to the chief magistracy of the Republic some towering genius or superlatively wise and sagacious patriot among the members of the Supreme Court, who in some great national emergency might be looked to with practical unanimity as the savior of his country. It must be confessed that such occasions will be rare and that no such occasion ever has arisen in our history. Judging by the past there must be general acquiescence in the view of Justice Hughes that "no man is as necessary to his country's well-being as is the unstained integrity of the courts."

A departure from the salutary rule in consequence of which no justice of the Supreme Court has ever until now contended as the candidate of any party for the office of President can be justified only in some crisis involving the national life, or when possibly the state of public morals should become so corrupt that, as a brilliant writer puts it, "a Papinian or an Ulpian at the helm of State may be the only choice as against a Nero or a Caracalla." What condition calls for a disregard of the rule in the present exigency? What radical change is demanded in order to preserve the country or its institutions from impending collapse or ruthless destruction? From what quarter is our independence threatened? Must we wage war upon any enemies across the water instead of composing such differences as have arisen or are likely to arise through peaceful diplomatic negotiation as we have fortunately succeeded in doing until now? Does national honor or true national interest, if it have an existence separate from national honor, require that we invade and conquer Mexico either to annex it or to train its people for true self-government with a purpose to withdraw when they shall have learned the lesson to our satisfaction?

With respect to transoceanic countries, no individual commanding in any degree the respect or the confidence of the country is counseling any radical change in policy, however some may think that more skillful negotiators might be assigned to the task of carrying it out. With respect to Mexico, no policy of intervention is proclaimed by any party, notwithstanding the vociferous demands and insinuating suggestions of adventurers who, allured by the rich resources of that country but in the full knowledge of the unstable character of its government, have become financially interested in it.

The present administration is determined to protect our border and allow the Mexicans to work out their own salvation, albeit in blood, extending such kindly aid as may be toward the pacification of the country. What better plan is to be substituted?

Much clamor was made within recent months over "preparedness," but the present Congress has passed an Army reorganization bill increasing the standing Army to considerably more than double the strength it ever before had in time of peace, federalizing the militia and making other changes in the arm of the service with which it deals, an act said by competent critics to place the Army on a better footing as a fighting force than could be secured under any law any Congress since the Revolution could be induced to pass. A naval appropriation bill has just secured the concurrence of both Houses making provision for a program of construction greater than was ever undertaken by any nation. It is not seriously proposed in any quarter to augment the provision already made for the public defense.

There is no crisis in the Nation's affairs demanding that we forget the lessons of the past. The crisis is in a political party, not in the Nation. Justice Hughes was nominated to save his party, not to save the country. I should hesitate to say so had it not been charged on the floor of the Senate by a distinguished Republican, the senior Senator from California, who in the course of debate in this body on April 12, 1916, said:

Partisan politics is ruthless in its demands, and invades the most sacred precincts of the National Government. It is seeking place and pelf and power wherever and whenever it can find entrance. Just now it is attempting to invade the Supreme Court of the United States. It is presenting to a member of that body the greatest temptation that could be offered to an American citizen—to surrender his place on the bench and become a candidate for a political office. This attempt to bring the highest judicial tribunal of the country, or any member of it, into politics should be resented not only by the member to whom the tempting offer is made but by the whole country. To my mind it is of the gravest importance that that great tribunal should be separated absolutely and forever from politics, candidacy for office, or any interest in elections beyond that of the disinterested and patriotic private citizen. If any member of the Supreme Court is tempted by an offer of a nomination as a candidate for the Presidency of the United States, and refuses the offer because he is a justice of the Supreme Court, and for that reason can not conscientiously accept a nomination to a political office or engage in politics, he will have rendered his country a great and lasting service. If he does that one act of unselfish patriotism and devotion to the best interests of his country that has so signally honored him, it will keep his memory green in the minds of his countrymen long after the politicians who thus tempted him are forgotten. The use of his name as a candidate is an offense to him and to the country.

Mr. President, it is appropriate to defer action on the resolution of the Senator from Colorado for another reason. The election in November will be in some measure a referendum on the principle it announces. If Justice Hughes is defeated, no political party is likely to have the hardihood again to name as its candidate for President a member of the Supreme Court, and there will be a lesson of prudence in the result so forcible in character as to chill and check any rising ambition that may vex future justices. In that event there will be little need of the amendment. The unwritten law, efficacious until now, will be renewed in vigor. If, on the other hand, he should be elected and his party emerge triumphantly from the contest, it could not stultify itself by submitting or consenting to the submission of the amendment, though the evil against which it is aimed would obviously be intensified in that event. There would no longer be any check whatever upon the ambitious judge who looked with longing eye upon the White House.

Instances beside the conspicuous one to which reference has been made in which such an ambition has been cherished by members of the Supreme Court have been rare, and, as stated, uniformly unfortunate. Stephen J. Field was disappointed in his expectation of becoming the Democratic candidate for President in 1880. David Davis accepted, in a way, the nomination of the Labor Reform Party in 1872, and was among those for whom ballots were cast at the convention of the Liberal Republican Party, from which it was understood he was willing to accept a nomination. Justice John McLean was mentioned before the convention of the Free Soil Party in 1848, and he competed in the balloting in the Republican national convention for the nomination for the Presidency in 1856 and again in 1860.

Mr. President, just before I came to the Senate this morning I received a most interesting communication from an estimable lady related by marriage to Justice McLean, to whom I have just made reference—a letter so pertinent to the present discussion that I ask the Secretary to read it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

A reference of the position of Justice John McLean relative to the Republican nomination for President.

My attention has been called to recent communications of the press in reference to the custom of Justices of the United States Supreme Court seeking the nomination for the Presidency.

It has been stated that Justice McLean was the most pronounced in his activity of any Justice of that court relative to presidential aspirations.

This statement is positively incorrect. Justice McLean's name was very prominent for some years for the nomination by the Republican Party.

Like Justice Hughes of the Supreme Court, he always declined to be interviewed on the subject, but, unlike Justice Hughes, had decided in his own mind he would never accept a nomination for the Presidency.

In the famous Dred Scott decision Justice McLean and Justice Curtis dissented from the opinion of the court.

This was just previous to the Republican convention. Justice McLean asked the Chief Justice as a favor to him not to announce the decision of the court until after the Republican convention. The Chief Justice granted his request.

Justice McLean feared if his dissent from the opinion was known, it might stampede the convention in his name, and subject him to the embarrassment of declining the nomination, which he certainly would have done.

There was much favorable comment at this time of this man's noble character.

It seems strange he should now be so misrepresented.

Alas! How soon we do forget!

S. K. MC. (SARAH K. MCLEAN).

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I deem it highly significant that the relatives and friends of this distinguished Associate Justice of the Supreme Court 50 years after his death should be solicitous about clearing his memory from the suspicion that he was willing to accept a nomination for the office of President of the United States.

Mr. PHELAN. May I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. WALSH. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. PHELAN. The Senator from Montana has just referred to the candidacy of Justice Stephen J. Field, of California. It may be pertinent to inform the Senate, in connection with the Senator's remarks, that Justice Field's candidacy for the Presidency was condemned by the Democratic convention which met in California for the purpose of nominating presidential electors, and during the discussions of that body his entire judicial career was the subject of much bitter criticism and comment, which practically destroyed the usefulness of the justice when, after his political canvass, he resumed his position upon the Supreme Bench.

Mr. WALSH. It is only just to assume that the nomination which made Justice Hughes the candidate of his party for the Presidency came to him unsought, and that he had no hand in the well-ordered preconvention campaign that was conducted in his behalf. That is quite beside the question. His success in the election would excite hopes in the breasts of men less rigidly scrupulous, and it would, as a practical matter, be impossible to differentiate between the man who had remained discreetly but expectantly silent and the man who had actively connived at efforts to secure his nomination.

The historical incidents to which reference has been made gave rise to no little comment on the general subject during the decade following the Civil War. In its issue of August, 1874, Harper's Weekly, said:

The absolute independence of the judiciary is indispensable, and patriotism and good sense alike warn us to avoid any practice which tends to compromise it. Yet if the bench is to be considered as a stepping stone to purely political offices, if, indeed, it is not to be regarded as a bar to such positions, its independence is necessarily imperiled. . . . The disposition to disregard this peril and to consider judges as not practically debarred from the seductions of caucuses and conventions ought to be imperatively checked. . . . Party managers and judges should be taught that political candidates are not to be taken from the bench, for judicial deliberations must be guarded, as far as possible, from that most insidious of influences in a free government—party spirit.

The Central Law Journal, in the course of some editorial comment in its number of September 3, 1874, remarked:

It is not improbable that the popular confidence in the integrity of the highest court of the Nation may have been, to some extent, impaired within the last few years by the knowledge that some of its members were possible, or even probable, candidates for the Presidency.

And thereupon observed:

Whenever the integrity of the bench is subject, in any considerable degree, to the misgivings of intelligent hope, it is a public misfortune. The repose of society requires that the popular judgment should rest with confidence in the impartiality of the bench, and this can not be if the bench comes to be looked upon as a stepping stone to political preferment. Judges, however, are but men, and as long as the people will bring them forward as candidates for high political offices there are very few that will have the self-denial to resist the temptation.

No more deadly blow at the Federal judicial system has ever been directed against it than the nomination of Justice Hughes by the Republican convention. Polemics innumerable have been written in denunciation of that system without any appreciable effect upon the public mind. Let one of the justices of the Supreme Court, however, resign to wage a successful campaign for the Presidency, and it will never again determine a case like Lawlor against Lowe, for instance, without calling out speculation as to how far the result was due to ambition, "the last infirmity of noble minds," on the part of some dominant member of the court. It can not maintain the high place it has achieved before the world under criticism of such a character. It can not hold the confidence of the people which it now, happily, enjoys in such generous measure under conditions that afford room even for detraction upon such ground. The very basis upon which the life tenure and the appointive system in the case of Federal judges rests would be undermined, and a constitutional amendment such as the resolution of the Senator from Colorado contemplates alone could, if anything could, arrest the rising demand that would certainly ensue for a radical change in those provisions of the Constitution through which the fathers believed they had secured the independence of the national judiciary.

APPENDIX.

HUGHES WILL DECLINE IF HE IS NOMINATED—HIS DECISION NOT TO BE A CANDIDATE IS IRREVOCABLE, HE TELLS RABBI WISE—WON'T SULLY THE COURT—MUST NEVER BE DRAGGED INTO PARTY POLITICS, THE ASSOCIATE JUSTICE SAYS.

LAKE PLACID, N. Y., June 20, 1912.

Basing what he had to say upon a personal interview he had had with United States Supreme Court Justice Charles E. Hughes, Rabbi Stephen S. Wise, of New York, who is a close personal friend of the justice, and whose summer camp here is near the Hughes's camp, issued to-day to a representative of the Associated Press a signed statement setting forth the real reasons, he says, why Justice Hughes can not allow his name to be considered by the Republican convention at Chicago. The statement follows:

"I have just come from a visit to Justice Hughes, at Camp Abenaki, Lake Placid, and deem it of importance to set forth the reasons, as I understand them, which have led him to refuse to permit his name to be considered in connection with the nomination for President at the convention of the Republican Party in Chicago.

"Of these reasons it may be said that they prove his own position to be unassailable, and at the same time serve to explain why Justice Hughes has, within less than a decade of public service, attained to a unique place in the respect and confidence of the American people.

"It appears to one who is not unacquainted with men and motives that Justice Hughes has succeeded in doing the extraordinary thing of viewing the whole question in a nonpersonal and detached way. He seems to have asked, and to his own satisfaction to have answered, one question: 'Is it right that I should permit my name to be used?' His answer has been, 'No,' and as far as another may judge that answer has been reached without regret and repining. This 'no' is the reasoned and unalterable decision of an unbending conscience, a decision as honoring to him as has been every hour of his noteworthy public career.

WOULD DECLINE IF NAMED.

"The decision is not to be recalled if extraordinary circumstances arise or unforeseen contingencies come to pass. But it will be reaffirmed as final and irrevocable even in the event of the Chicago convention now assembled nominating Justice Hughes for the Presidency. It is no little thing to say, but I may say that he would decline the nomination if tendered him.

"Why? The Supreme Court must not be dragged into politics. A judge of the Supreme Court should not be available though he be nominally eligible for elective office. The moment he assumes the judicial office he ceases to be a partisan and knows, or should know, no partisan obligation. The moment he accepts a party nomination one or more things happen and happen explicable.

"First, a political party may undertake to capitalize the judicial decisions of its candidate, than which nothing could be more deeply violative of the spirit of the judicial institution. His decisions would, moreover, become subject to the partisan and passionate review of partisan strife. Worst of all, it is not inconceivable that if men are to step from the bench to elective office, decisions may ultimately be rendered with a view to the contingency of such public and necessarily partisan review.

"Such a situation would be certain to lessen the independence of the judiciary, as it would inevitably impair the Nation's confidence in the unswerving integrity of the courts. Of what real and permanent value were the decisions of a judge to-day who on the morrow may choose or be chosen to sue for the favor and suffrage of the electorate?

"More important than the outcome of the present political contest, however large it looms at the present, is the perpetuating of the organic institutions or sovereignty of the Republic. One such institution co-ordinate with the executive and legislative is the judicial. The people rightly believe in the integrity and incorruptibility of the supreme bench. The justices of the Supreme Court of the United States are privileged by virtue of their office to render service of the highest order to the Nation.

"The performance of that service and the maintenance of the dignity of that office depends in largest part upon the will of the members of that court to suffer no personal ambition for elective office, however great their gifts and though their fitness be in every other respect beyond question, to influence their judgment or to affect the attitude of the Nation to the Supreme Court as a tribunal, which, without personal aim and above private ambition, seeks to interpret the law upon the basis of the Constitution of the United States.

"In all this I have studiously refrained from exact quotation of Justice Hughes's words, though perhaps it has been possible to reproduce his thought with measurable accuracy. As we parted I turned to him and asked the final question:

"Do you not conceive that an extraordinary crisis might make it your duty to accept the nomination for President in order to render a great public service?"

"Unhesitating and unequivocal was the answer:

"I hope that, as a judge of the Supreme Court, I am rendering public service, and may continue to do so for some years, but the Supreme Court must not be dragged into politics, and no man is as essential to his country's well-being as is the unstained integrity of the courts."

"The answer was the measure of the man. What though he declined to be considered for the Presidency by the Republican Party, Justice Hughes remains a moral asset of the Republic.

"STEPHEN S. WISE."

Mr. OWEN and Mr. TOWNSEND addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I want to call attention to the New Hampshire case in regard to the recall of judges. The constitution of New Hampshire not only provides for the recall of judges but the New Hampshire Legislature has four times in its history recalled its supreme bench. I thought it would be interesting to have that observation go into the Record.

Now, Mr. President, I ask for the regular order, and for some action upon the proposed amendment of the Federal reserve act.

AMENDMENT OF FEDERAL RESERVE ACT.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13391) to amend the act approved December 23, 1913, known as the Federal reserve act, by adding a new section.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JAMES in the chair). The Secretary will state the pending question.

The SECRETARY. The pending question is the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS]. He has offered an amendment as follows:

On page 18, beginning at line 21, strike out the paragraph following, as amended by the Senate, down to and including line 10, on page 19.

Mr. OWEN. I move to lay the proposed amendment on the table.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, in view of the absence of the Senator who offered the amendment, I hope the Senator from Oklahoma will let it go over until to-morrow morning.

Mr. OWEN. I have for two months and a half been trying to get action on the part of the Senate. I am myself compelled to leave the city to-morrow.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I make the point of no quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Hardwick	Overman	Smith, Ariz.
Bankhead	Hughes	Owen	Smith, Ga.
Beckham	Husting	Page	Smith, Md.
Broussard	James	Phelan	Stone
Bryan	Jones	Pittman	Taggart
Chamberlain	Kern	POINDEXTER	Thomas
Chilton	La Follette	Ransdell	Thompson
Clapp	Lane	Reed	Townsend
Clarke, Ark.	Lewis	Saulsbury	Underwood
Culberson	Martin, Va.	Sheppard	Vardaman
Curtis	Martine, N. J.	Sherman	Walsh
Fletcher	Newlands	Shields	Williams
Gallinger	Norris	Simmons

Mr. THOMAS. I desire to announce the necessary absence of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH] and also the necessary temporary absence of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE].

Mr. TOWNSEND. I announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. SMITH of Michigan] and his pair with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]. This announcement may stand for the day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-one Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I moved that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] be laid on the table. If, however, any Senator desires for a reasonable time to express an opinion upon it, I shall be willing to withhold that motion; but I am perfectly willing to state exactly what the amendment is and the purpose of it, and I think I can do it in a way that will be entirely satisfactory to any friend of the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts.

The proposed amendment simply permits banks to establish branches not more than 25 miles away from the parent bank, under the conditions named in the amendment, and then only in such States as expressly authorize the State banks to establish branch banks. The Senator from Massachusetts does not think that that is a judicious method. I am not attached to it in such a way that I should care whether it stays in or goes out.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. OWEN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. CURTIS. As one Senator, I will state that I have received letters from a very large number—I will not try to state the exact number—of State banks in Kansas protesting against that provision, and the small banks over the country are more or less opposed to it. I hope the Senator will not insist upon the amendment.

Mr. OWEN. I am willing to have it go out, so far as I am concerned; but if it does go out, then the first paragraph of section 25a should have an amendment providing that it should not be in force in any State whose statutes do not specifically authorize branches for banks having State charters.

Mr. CURTIS. That would be satisfactory.

Mr. OWEN. Then, I move that the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that the Senator from Oklahoma has withdrawn his motion to lay the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts on the table.

Mr. OWEN. I withdraw my motion to lay the amendment on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question, then, is on the adoption of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. OWEN. I move to amend, in line 18, on page 20, by inserting the words:

Provided, That no such branch shall be established in any State whose statutes do not specifically authorize branches for banks having State charters.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Oklahoma will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On line 18, page 20, after the word "located," it is proposed to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That no such branch shall be established in any State whose statutes do not specifically authorize branches for banks having State charters.

Mr. CURTIS. I would like to have the amendment read as it will read as proposed to be amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will now read the provision as proposed to be amended.

The SECRETARY. As proposed to be amended, the provision would read:

SEC. 25a. That any member bank located in a city or incorporated town or village of more than 100,000 inhabitants and possessing a capital and surplus of $1,000,000 or more may, under such rules and regulations as the Federal Reserve Board may prescribe, establish branches, not to exceed 10 in number, within the corporate limits of the city, town, or village in which it is located: Provided, That no such branch shall be established in any State whose statutes do not specifically authorize branches for banks having State charters.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Oklahoma what need there is for that provision?

Mr. OWEN. The need is that in some States they permit branch banks in State institutions within cities having more than 100,000 inhabitants, and the intention is to put the national banks upon an equal footing with those in the city of New York.

Mr. POINDEXTER. It would seem to give an opportunity to certain banks to monopolize the business of an entire community.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, the banks in New York City, which is the only place where this is supposed to apply, could not possibly exercise any monopoly, because there is a very large number of large State banks in New York City. The Corn Exchange Bank, for instance, has an advantage over the national banks, and the intention is only to put the national banks upon a like basis of competition with the State banks.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Why does the Senator say that it will apply only to as large a city as New York? According to its terms it applies to any city of a hundred thousand inhabitants or more.

Mr. OWEN. The proviso is so framed that it will not apply except in a State which specifically provides for this right to the State banks.

Mr. POINDEXTER. In any such State that has any city having the population mentioned it would apply.

Mr. OWEN. The city of New York is the only place of which I know to which it does apply. There may be others, however, with which I am not acquainted.

Mr. POINDEXTER. It would apply in any State which authorized State banks to establish branches in any city of a hundred thousand inhabitants, would it not?

Mr. OWEN. Yes, it would; but I do not recall any case, except that of New York, though there may be some others.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator may intend that it shall apply only to New York City, but there is no way of confining it to that city.

Mr. OWEN. If in future any State should pass a law providing for branch banks in such cities, then this would take care of it and put the national banks upon an equal basis with the State banks. That is all there is of it.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I think I may say that there is very general opposition to it from banks in my section of the country.

Mr. OWEN. That is because they do not understand that it will apply only to States which specifically authorize it. They do not want to have it apply in States which do not provide for it by State law.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Does the Senator know of any case where national banks have suffered any hardship from the competition of State banks?

Mr. OWEN. They think they have in New York.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The national banks of New York seem to be in a flourishing condition; they are not anemic in any way at all.

Mr. OWEN. Oh, I think that is entirely true. If the Senator objects to putting the national banks of New York on a parity with the State banks, he is within his rights in taking that position. I have merely stated the case.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I object to this amendment on account of the very general opposition that has manifested itself to it, and on the further account that, so far as I know, there is no demand for it. There is no hardship being suffered by any national bank that would be remedied by this provision.

Mr. OWEN. I repeat that the opposition is due to a misconception. It was believed that this provision would apply regardless of State law.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The antagonism of which I am speaking is due to the general opposition to the consolidation of banks and to a departure from the principle of small local independent banks. The Federal Reserve System in itself has provided ample means, to say the least, for the strengthening of the banking system of the country by affording a degree of cooperation and opportunity to unite the banks in large areas of the country, and there is no reason that I know of why we should go any further at this time to interfere with the local banking institutions of the country.

Mr. OWEN. I think that both sides of the matter are fairly well understood, and I am content with whatever the Senate wishes to do about it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma. [Putting the question.] The "ayes" seem to have it.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I ask for a division.

The amendment was agreed to after a division.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I rise immediately at the conclusion of the carefully prepared speech of the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], not for the purpose of making any extended reply to what he has said, because I had not anticipated such a speech, and I do not think, so far as that is concerned, that it is necessary to make any extended reply, but I do not care to have it go unprotected.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Yes.

Mr. OWEN. Will the Senator excuse me just a moment? I am compelled to leave the city to-morrow. Will not the Senator permit this matter to be disposed of? It will take only a few moments, and there is now no opposition to it whatever, so far as I know, on either side of the Chamber.

Mr. TOWNSEND. As I understand, this legislation has been opposed in some respects by the Senator from North Dakota and by the Senator from Massachusetts, the latter of whom is not present.

Mr. OWEN. Their opposition was to the branch-bank item, which has been stricken out of the bill.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I do not know what other items the bill may contain to which there may be objection, but I intend only to speak briefly, and I propose to occupy the time now, because it seems to me that the injection of the political speech of the Senator from Montana—and it was nothing more nor less than that—into the proceedings this morning at least warrants a passing notice.

As I understand it, the Senator from Montana is opposed to the selection of Presidents by the people from the Federal Bench, and particularly the selection of Mr. Hughes, because of its political effect upon the bench and, through the bench, upon the country. His soul does not seem to have been disturbed by the fact that almost from the beginning of the Government, and especially during the last three years, appointments to the bench have been made many times for political reasons; and if this be an offense the Democratic Party has been a great offender.

It is somewhat surprising that an incorruptible judge, with an unblemished record for exalted character and ability, should be criticized for accepting an unsolicited call to the Presidency, while the critics raise no voice of protest against the too-frequent practice indulged by Presidents of nominating men for Federal judges whose chief qualification is partisan political service rendered. It would be better for the country to have a great judge for President than a time-serving politician for judge. I think there is more danger to be apprehended to popular government from the nomination of men who are unfit and who are not on the bench but who are selected for partisan political reasons only than there is to come from the practically spontaneous choice of a great majority of the people in favor of one man for President, even though the call comes to him on the bench.

It is a compliment to Mr. Hughes that no man has raised his voice against him for any other reason than that he was a justice of the Supreme Court. Words, and partisan political words, alone are the only arguments that can be presented against him. Not a single thing in his official career has been pointed to as indicating that he has swerved a hair's breadth from what he considered to be his sworn duty. He has never pandered to classes or to transitory public sentiment, but has adhered to the duties that were imposed upon him under the Constitution as he has seen those duties.

The history of the selection of Mr. Hughes stands alone in the annals of the American Republic. I think no one, unless he be a partisan who is urged beyond reason to take advantage of politics, will claim that Mr. Hughes has ever done or said a thing to induce his selection by his party as its candidate for President. He was chosen against the opposition of so-called practical politicians; and when he was nominated the first thing he did was to resign from the bench, and he did that even though it was known that the strongest member of the Progressive Party had been nominated by that organization, and that under such conditions his hope of political success was not good. Under such circumstances could his action in resigning from the bench and in accepting the nomination for President have been the desire for political power and preferment, solely or even largely? He accepted that nomination because he believed that the people had called him, and that he had no right to disobey that call. He believed that there was an emergency in the American Republic.

At a later time I am going into this subject more in detail, unless some other Senator shall precede me in the matter. I think a supreme emergency does exist in this country and has existed for the last three years. I believe that our domestic and foreign policies have been vacillating, weak, and dangerous. I believe that, whatever may be said about our President as to whether he is intellectually honest or not—and I need not express an opinion upon that at this time—everybody must admit that he is certainly unstable and uncertain and an opportunist without a peer. No one knows how he is going to meet the problems which are now pressing for solution, but everyone knows that he is not well fitted to grapple with conditions which exist now and which will be more complex at the close of the European war. Everybody must know that in spite of the President we are not in actual war, and not because of any act of his. I believe that every thoughtful man understands that if we had had a President who had meant what he said and had spoken the meaningful doctrines of American traditions we would not have been so involved in difficulties growing out of the European war as we are now. Every thoughtful, unbiased person knows that the President has interfered in Mexico, and largely because of his interference we are in the deplorable plight of the present. He has not kept us out of war with Mexico. Twice we have been at war with that country, and no one knows what our real present status is. To me it is clearly political, in a most offensive manner. He assumed to make war on Huerta and to use the armed forces of his Government to drive the Mexican President from his Republic. After the President did this he loudly proclaimed that Mexico had a right to such government, or lack of it, as she pleased. It was none of our business. He was right in this statement, but he almost immediately again repudiated his own words by acts of interference.

But as I said, Mr. President, I do not wish to detain the Senate by an answer to the political speech of the Senator from Montana. The Democratic necessities of the hour evidently seemed to him to require that such a speech should be made now. I have no doubt that the Senator supported with great vigor and loyalty the candidate of 1904 on the Democratic ticket for President. He was selected from the bench in New York to take that position. I will go with the Senator from Montana as far as he likes in his efforts to maintain incorruptible the integrity of the Supreme Bench. I maintain that Mr. Justice Hughes was an incorruptible and incorruptible Justice of the Supreme Court. He is a patriotic citizen of this Republic which is ruled by the people, and he had no right to disobey their mandate to serve them in the highest and most responsible position in the world. I believe that a majority of the people called Mr. Hughes for service. The people make and they can remake precedents, yea—even constitutions. He did not seek the nomination. The nomination sought him as it has sought no other since Washington. He gave no man encouragement that he would accept, even. They called him and under such circumstances he had no right to refuse. He will answer his critics for himself, as indeed he has already answered them.

The frantic efforts of political orators to detract from a man who is universally admitted to be supremely fitted for President in these critical times is distinctly complimentary to the Republican candidate for President. He is attacked, not for anything that he has done, not for any decision that he has rendered, not for swerving a particle from the direct path of duty, not because he is lacking in courage, ability, and uncompromising patriotism, but because he is a most formidable candidate for President, selected by the people without political influence, but accepting only after he had resigned his position on the Supreme Bench, which was not exactly following the Democratic precedent of 1904.

So, Mr. President, I repeat that later on, but at the proper time, I shall discuss the political questions that have been raised by the Senator at this time, although Mr. Hughes needs no defense from any Member of this body, or from any citizen of the United States.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I ask for action now on the amendment.

Mr. SHERMAN. Is the Senator asking for a vote?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not wish to offer any amendment; but if the Senator from Oklahoma will permit me a moment, I wish to submit, for a very few minutes, some remarks on the amendment that has been offered.

Mr. OWEN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SHERMAN. This bill, with the amendment that has been adopted this morning, that no such branch shall be established in any State whose statutes do not specifically authorize branches for the banks organized under State charters, apparently limits the provision to States where branch banking is authorized by State charters.

Mr. OWEN. That was the intention.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no personal interest in this as it applies to my own State, with this limitation. The only reason why I shall vote against the bill, even as amended, is that it opens the way, in whatever State, to create practically a banking monopoly, as I see it. Without this amendment, in my own State there are, say, two cities, possibly three, if the school census were allowed to be the measure of population, where its provisions would apply. I am talking now without reference to the original amendment. In the city of Peoria, the city of East St. Louis, and in the city of Chicago, without this amendment it would apply so that a national bank of $1,000,000 capital stock would be permitted to establish branches. With the amendment it would not do so.

I oppose the bill in its present form because of the precedent created. All that would be necessary to apply it to such cities in my own State would be to remove this limitation, which can be done with a very short amendment. At some future time, after this measure shall have been enacted, it will be easy enough to take out this restriction and apply it to all States. With this amendment taken out, it gives the banks in the downtown district, inside of the loop in the city of Chicago, the power to destroy every small bank in the city of Chicago, State bank and national bank.

I can conceive of no scheme that would so expeditiously create a monopoly in the banking business and destroy every small competitor in the suburban districts of the city. With the limitation applied by the amendment it does not at present do so, but the amendment, once made, will leave it open for the amendment to be stricken out in some subsequent session of Congress. Then the section will be unlimited in its character.

Because of the evil precedent that is set and the untoward conditions of competition that will be instituted, even in a State that comes within the limitations of this amendment, I feel constrained to vote against the measure. I oppose the system of branch banks in domestic banking on principle, and I do not want it extended even to a State that would be within the limits of this amendment. I think the banks have ample power, have ample business, and a sufficient field for the exercise of their activities, with the present limitations upon them; and with the large banks in the cities to which this would apply, even with this amendment, and especially with the easy process by which the amendment can be removed in subsequent sessions of Congress, it would create in the city of Chicago a condition that I could not tolerate by any vote of mine. I shall not even vote to create a precedent that could be made hereafter the means of enabling the banks of the downtown district of $1,000,000 or more capital, some two, at least—the Continental-Commercial National Bank and the First National Bank of Chicago, with the means at their command, with their very large deposits of a commercial character, with some depositors maintaining very large accounts—I can not even create a precedent that would open the way, by an amendment that may be in some future session, as I suggested, very easily expedited in its passage, to turn these large banks loose, with at least 10 branches in the city of Chicago, to compete with and ruthlessly destroy the smaller banks that have built up a legitimate business.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oklahoma, the chairman of the committee, allow me to give some information to my colleague?

Mr. OWEN. Certainly.

Mr. LEWIS. May I inform my colleague that the amendment to which he alludes was to a degree shaped after information had been imparted to the chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee as to the wishes and the interests of the Cook County (Ill.) Bankers' Club and the representatives of the State banks of the State of Illinois? I am pleased to inform my colleague that much of the spirit of this amendment to which he alludes, and which he says at present rescues this bill from the ills he fears, was accepted after being first disclosed to us who were shaping these amendments. The eminent chairman of the committee was, in my presence, conferred with by the representatives of the Illinois State banks who were down here, and but for the information brought to us by the State bankers I, too, would have opposed this amendment. It is only because the State that we both represent, I may say to my colleague, has expressed satisfaction, through the representatives of its State banks and Federal banks, with the amendment that I aided in its latter construction and now give my approval to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question on agreeing to the amendment as amended.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, may I inquire what the amendment is that is now pending?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is the entire amendment.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, may I ask the chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee to explain the provision on page 3, line 19, which reads as follows:

(1) To carry in the Federal reserve banks of their respective districts any portion of their reserves now required by section 19 of this act to be held in their own vaults.

As I understand it, Mr. President, that would permit taking all of the reserves of any member bank and depositing them in some reserve bank. In other words, the member banks would be, if I may use the expression, at the mercy of the Federal Reserve Board. I think one can very easily imagine that the Federal Reserve Board is interested in building up the Federal reserve banks, and that all the reserves of the little banks would have to be deposited in these large centers.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, the provision referred to by the Senator was inserted in the bill at the request of two classes of banks—one class the members of which were on the frontier, and did not want to be compelled to carry a large amount of cash in their vaults, because they did not have adequate protection against highway robbery; and another class of banks in the centers which found it more convenient to keep their gold in the Federal reserve bank treasury. Now, I do not care whether it stays in or goes out. This is the purpose of the amendment. It is only permissive. It is not controlling at all; and I call the attention of the Senator to the fact that in England, for instance, they leave entirely with the banks the care of their own reserves, and without any imposition by act of Parliament they keep their reserves, and most of them keep a very large part of their reserves, in the Bank of England, which in that way concentrates there a very powerful amount of gold available for the service of the Empire.

Mr. GRONNA. But the Senator will remember that in 1907, when the little country banks were loaded with money—I know of banks in my own State that had 50 and 60 per cent reserve—the most of that reserve, of course, was deposited with other banks in the reserve cities, and because they could not get their own money we had the panic. At that time we were compelled to have a certain percentage of our reserves, and the banks would be penalized if they did not have a certain amount. Now you are practically compelling these same banks to take their reserves and deposit them in some central reserve city.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, in the case to which the Senator refers, in 1907, these reserves were within the control of private persons.

Mr. GRONNA. I know that.

Mr. OWEN. In the case proposed in this bill they are in the control of the Federal reserve banks, which are under the control of the Government of the United States through the Federal Reserve Board, and these reserves could not be denied if the exigency should ever arise. It is the exact reverse of what took place in 1907, when payment of the reserves was refused.

Mr. GRONNA. But I want to remind the Senator that these central reserve banks are authorized to discount paper in accordance with the amount of money they have on hand, and there is no protection to the country district. The Senator must not overlook the fact that these central reserve banks, in order to make profits, are compelled to invest the money deposited with them. They are permitted to invest this money, and it is no excuse for passing this bill to say that they are under the control of the Federal Reserve Board. This board is permitted to and must discount paper whenever it is called upon to do so. Whenever it has paper which is in accordance with the law it is authorized, and not only authorized but compelled, under the law, to discount that paper; and so they part with this reserve just the same as in the case of private banking institutions.

Mr. OWEN. The Senator surely does not intend to say that they are compelled to discount paper, because that really is not the case under the Federal reserve act.

Mr. GRONNA. The Senator does intend to say that they are compelled to do so if they are going to live up to the spirit of the law. The Federal reserve act was enacted for the purpose of taking care of honest, legitimate business; was it not?

Mr. OWEN. No, sir; it was not. It was intended to safeguard the reserves of the banks of this country, to perform the very function which we found so necessary in 1907, when the reserves were in the hands of private parties. We took those reserves out of the hands of private parties and put them where they should be always, at the command of the banks of the country.

Mr. GRONNA. Does the Senator from Oklahoma maintain that all money deposited with the reserve banks must remain there as money?

Mr. OWEN. No; certainly not.

Mr. GRONNA. My contention was, Mr. President, that the Federal Reserve Board is permitted under the law to discount mercantile paper.

Mr. OWEN. Quite right.

Mr. GRONNA. Now, then, if all the money is taken out of the vaults of the little banks, will not the Federal Reserve Board be compelled to take this money and to invest it in mercantile paper?

Mr. OWEN. No, sir.

Mr. GRONNA. May I ask the Senator how it will be invested, then?

Mr. OWEN. It is invested now only to a limited degree in commercial bills, and those commercial bills are available to be turned into currency in the form of United States notes, and it gives an extraordinary opportunity to the little banks not only to use their own reserves but to take their commercial bills and turn them into money.

Mr. GRONNA. The only difference between my argument and that of the Senator from Oklahoma is that I said "mercantile paper," and he uses the term "commercial bills." That is the only difference so far as I can see.

I will say to the Senator from Oklahoma that I am very much opposed to this provision. I for one shall oppose it, and I do not propose that it shall go into this bill if I can help it. It is fundamentally wrong. It is an injustice to the outlying agricultural parts of the country. Every Senator knows that the member banks would be under the influence of this board, and that the reserves of these little country banks would have to be deposited in the main in the Federal reserve banks. It is simply another scheme to eliminate the little State banks. It is simply another scheme to eliminate the small national banks. Unless they comply with this law, if this ever becomes a law, they would not be permitted to do business in their orderly way.

Mr. President, has the Senator from Oklahoma yielded the floor?

Mr. OWEN. I was yielding to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. GRONNA. Of course, if the Senator has not yielded, very well; but I expected to debate this question.

Mr. OWEN. I was going to ask action on the bill unless the Senator wants to continue his remarks. Of course he understands that the morning hour expires at 12 o'clock.

Mr. GRONNA. I do not propose to have action on this bill and let this provision go in. I will say to the Senator from Oklahoma that if he is willing to strike this out of the bill, I shall have no objection to it, with the amendments proposed.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I yield the point that it be struck out of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The way to do it, I assume, is for the Senator from North Dakota to move to strike out lines 19, 20, and 21 on page 3.

Mr. GRONNA. I make that motion.

Mr. OWEN. I accept the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the vote whereby the amendment was agreed to will be reconsidered. The Senator from North Dakota moves to strike out certain words. Does the Senator from North Dakota desire these words stricken out?

(1) To carry in the Federal reserve banks of their respective districts any portion of their reserves now required by section 19 of this act to be held at their own vaults.

Mr. GRONNA. Those are the words.

Mr. OWEN. I have agreed to have them stricken out.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is as in Committee of the Whole and open to further amendment.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I wish to inquire of the Senator from Oklahoma if there is a provision in the bill with regard to interlocking directorates.

Mr. OWEN. That is provided for in the Clayton Antitrust Act.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Is there some provision in this bill touching that subject?

Mr. OWEN. Yes; there is a provision.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. On what page?

Mr. OWEN. I shall have to find it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning hour having expired, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 15774) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes.

Mr. OWEN. May I ask the Senator in charge of the appropriation bill to lay it aside until we can get this adjusted?

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I will agree to do that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. By unanimous consent, the appropriation bill is temporarily laid aside while the Senate continues the consideration of this bill.

Mr. OWEN. The interlocking directorate feature was on another bill that passed the Senate some time ago. I will get it for the Senator from Wisconsin. That provision is not in this bill. I thought it was when the Senator first spoke, but it passed the Senate some time ago on another bill, introduced by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN].

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I understood from the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA], who is a member of the committee, that there is such a provision in the bill. I have been making diligent search to find it, but I have not been able to do so.

Mr. OWEN. I will state for the information of the Senator that the bill to which I refer was disposed of a month or so ago.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I do not refer to that bill, but I was advised by a member of the Committee on Banking and Currency that there is such a provision in this bill.

Mr. OWEN. The Senator from Indiana advises me that that bill was passed by both Houses and has been signed by the President.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I understand such a bill did pass, but I was informed by the Senator from North Dakota, who is a member of this committee, that there was a further provision on that subject in this bill.

Mr. OWEN. If so, I do not know it.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. If so, I want to move to strike it out.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is found on page 19.

Mr. OWEN. The Senator does not refer to the branch-bank provision on page 19, I suppose.

Mr. GRONNA. That will be found on page 19, beginning at line 5.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. On page 19 I find it.

Mr. OWEN. On page 19 there is a provision for branch banking. Where the State laws permits branch banks in the State it puts the national banks on the same basis with the State banks.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I move to strike out of the bill, on page 19, beginning with line 5, all of that paragraph down to and including line 14. I understood the Senator to say that he would accept that.

Mr. OWEN. Beginning where?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Beginning on line 5, page 19, of the copy I have.

Mr. OWEN. Does the Senator understand that that relates only to foreign banks?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask to have those lines read and then the Senate can see what is their scope.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The SECRETARY. In the original bill, commencing with page 17, line 23, it reads as follows:

Any director or other officer, agent, or employee of any member bank may, with the approval of the Federal Reserve Board, be a director or other officer, agent, or employee of any such bank or corporation above mentioned in the capital stock of which such member bank shall have invested as hereinbefore provided, without being subject to the provisions of section 8 of the act approved October 15, 1914, entitled "An act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes."

Mr. OWEN. I call the attention of the Senator to line 8, "of any such bank or corporation above mentioned." That is an organization intended to do foreign business only.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Does that refer only to foreign business?

Mr. OWEN. To foreign business only.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. With that understanding I do not press the amendment.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "An act to amend the act approved December 23, 1913, known as the Federal reserve act."

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 15774) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The amendment offered by the Senator from California [Mr. WORKS] in lieu of that offered by the committee, so far as the insertion of matter is concerned, from line 11 to line 17 on page 2.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I desire to say a few words regarding an amendment which I have offered to the pending bill. On page 25 there appears an item providing—

For completing the construction of market buildings on the site of the present municipal fish wharf and market, including refrigerating and cold-storage plant, which shall be equipped for the accommodation of such retail business as may obtain at that point and shall serve as the wholesale receiving and distributing point for marine and other products to be retailed elsewhere in the District, within the authorized limit of cost, $60,000.

This market building is to be on the commercial water front of Washington, a stretch of about a mile or a mile and a quarter, from the Bureau of Engraving and Printing to the War College. Upon that water front the Government has provided for two important structures—one a steam heat and power plant, at a cost of several hundred thousand dollars, and the other a market place for fish and other products, at a cost of $185,000; and for this latter purpose all the money has been appropriated, except the $60,000 provided for by this bill.

To this provision I have offered an amendment, as follows:

And provided further, That the Chief of Engineers of the Army is hereby directed to appoint a board of engineer officers, of which the local district engineer officer in charge of river work at Washington and the officer in charge of public buildings and grounds shall be members, and of which the latter shall be executive and disbursing officer, to collaborate with the Commission of Fine Arts in preparing and reporting a plan for the artistic and utilitarian development of the commercial water front of Washington, on which the said market buildings are to be constructed; that the board be authorized to employ such engineers, experts, and other assistants as they deem necessary; that $10,000, or as much thereof as may be necessary, is appropriated, out of any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to defray the expenses of the board.

With reference to this water front, I wish to say that it has recently been determined by judicial decree that it belongs to the Government or to the District of Columbia, and it has come under the control of the Government. Hitherto I believe the impression prevailed that it was in private ownership.

That water front is now under divided control, a part of it near the War College being under the control of the engineer officer in charge of public buildings and grounds and the other part being under the control of the District commissioners, though, I believe, without any special legislation relating to the subject. It is the only part of the water front with reference to which the Government has not made definite and conclusive plans.

The Senate will realize that all the way from Georgetown down to the end of the so-called island park opposite the War College, which is represented by a map in this Chamber, the engineer officers of the Government have absolute control and are now, in connection with the park development, making a very beautiful water front which is a part of the park system.

So also with reference to that portion of the water front on this island park looking toward the commercial front. That is under the control of the engineers. The War College itself is under the control of the engineers. So there remains only the space of about a mile and a quarter which has not been provided for, and that for the reasons—its ownership by the public was in doubt.

Now, the Government is about to put these two very important buildings upon this water front, arrangements are being made for their construction, and it is of the highest importance that the water front itself should be planned not only from engineering but also from the artistic point of view, so that these buildings will properly fit into the surroundings, so that they will be convenient of access with reference to wharves and piers, so that they will not obstruct the contemplated wharves and piers, and so that the entire surroundings of these costly buildings will be attractive to the eye.

This matter of water-front construction from the artistic point of view has received very little attention in the United States thus far. It has received great attention in Europe and in the Orient. There you will find every water front in a state of high development, both from the engineering and artistic standpoint, and the commercial water fronts are the most attractive parts of the cities. We are all familiar with the water-front development of the Seine and the water-front development of the Thames and the water-front development of the cities of the Rhine and the Danube and the Volga. All these water fronts are being developed to the very highest degree, with a view to commercial facilities, with a view to promoting easy and economical transfer from car to ship and from ship to car, and at the same time with a view to preserving the water scenery of the cities in such a way as to make the whole effect attractive to the eye.

I have had a number of photographs of water fronts of the various cities of Europe placed upon the wall, and I invite the attention of Senators to them as indicating the great care and solicitude which have been shown elsewhere throughout the world regarding the development of water fronts.

I imagine that America will take up this development actively and energetically as it has other phases of internal development and will eventually surpass the rest of the world in creations of this kind. But the fact remains that upon both our ocean water front and our river fronts there has been almost entire neglect of the artistic features and in many cases neglect of the engineering and mechanical features.

I undertake to say that there are few water fronts in this country that are as highly developed from the engineering and economic point of view as those of Europe and those of Asia.

Now, I am aware that it may be claimed that this amendment opens up the old heat, light, and water contest regarding the contemplated building. I wish to address myself particularly to the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] upon that subject, and to say that there is no purpose so far as this amendment is concerned of interfering at all with the construction of the heat, light, and power building which has been ordered by Congress. Any legislation upon that subject will have to be enacted in another way and at another time.

The whole purpose of this amendment is to provide that in case that building does go up the water front will be planned with reference to its foundation, to its site, to its wharves, and to the general conveniences of the water front and in such a way as to promote the uses of that building as well as the general uses of the water front itself.

I regard it as just as unwise to commence the construction of these buildings upon that water front until the water-front plan is made as it would be to put up a costly building without properly planning the foundation.

Now, the appropriation asked for is a small appropriation of $10,000, and the instrumentality for this plan is the Board of Engineers, of which Col. Harts, Superintendent of Public Buildings and Grounds, will be the executive official. He is now in charge of all the park development and water-front development in Washington. We all realize the energy and the skill and the judgment which he has shown in perfecting this work.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am afraid, Mr. President, that the Senator from Nevada has rather slept on his rights. Two years ago there was an appropriation in the District of Columbia appropriation bill for the reconstruction of the wharves at the fish market. I will parenthetically suggest that the fish market is almost as much a reproach to the District of Columbia as the municipal hospital; and it became evident that we had in self-defense, so far as the health interests of the District of Columbia are concerned, to have a new fish wharf. We made an appropriation two years ago for the rebuilding of the wharves and last year for the construction of the building, and I apprehend the plans and specifications are all prepared for that building.

So I suggest the Senator is not quite as diligent as he usually is in watching these appropriations of the District of Columbia or he would have interposed the objection he interposes now before we made those appropriations.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I must say that the matter slipped my attention. My attention was only recently called to the fact that a fish market was contemplated there, but I will say that I am inclined to think that the engineer commissioner of the District of Columbia will be one of this board, for the act names only two members of the board, and the third can be appointed by the Chief of Engineers. They will be glad, I have no doubt, to receive the assistance and advice of the art commission, which is composed not only of the most eminent architects and artists in the country, but men of great constructive capacity, who have been in charge of great undertakings and whose experience and advice on the practical side of the question would be of great value. I am glad to say that the Engineer Corps of the Army is showing a disposition to collaborate with this art commission, and that whereas in the past years the engineers and the artists seem to have been in opposition, of late years they are showing the greatest disposition to unite in the perfection of great engineering and constructive work.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. As the Senator from Nevada has made a personal reference to me, I want to ask him to yield to me for a moment.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Certainly.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I will not occupy three minutes. I wish to say for his information and for the information of the Senate that I am in no sense antagonistic to his ideas of inaugurating a plan for the development and the beautification of the water front in Washington. It is a very important matter, and it ought to be taken up, and something ought to be done, and the fewer things put in front of it the better. The fish markets and the power plant have both gotten a long way in progress of construction. I am not at all disturbed about any interference with those great public utilities, and it is not on that account that I hesitate about the Senator's plan of development and improvement of the water front.

The only question in my mind is as to the time and manner of taking up these very important matters. I am in full accord with the Senator as to the importance of it. It ought to be done, and it ought to be done at an early day, and done in a thorough and exhaustive and systematic manner, and the talent of the country ought to be devoted to the development and improvement of this water front.

But I have not been able to get my mind to see as the Senator does that the wise way to do it is without the consideration that it ought to have in advance by a committee bringing it before the Senate on an appropriation bill.

It is the time and manner of doing what the Senator is advocating that makes me hesitate, but I do not wish him to think that I am antagonistic at all, nor do I wish the Senate to think that I am antagonistic at all. On the contrary, I am ready to cooperate with the Senator from Nevada and with others in putting on foot just such a scheme as he advocates, after a thorough investigation of our water front for development in a manner consistent with the beauty of this city.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I am very glad to have that statement from the Senator from Virginia. It is what I had expected from him, knowing his breadth of view with reference to national legislation. As I understand the Senator, he hesitates about putting this amendment on this bill. He is not opposed to a full consideration of the question of a plan for this water front by competent authority.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Just one word further, if the Senator will permit me. If he would bring in an independent bill for these purposes I would support it.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Let me state to the Senator, however, that, in the first place, I think this is entirely germane, because the bill itself provides for an additional installment for the fish market. The fish market is on the water front, and it seems to me it is entirely proper in that connection, as the matter has been brought up in legislation in the District of Columbia appropriation bill. There is a proviso that a scientific plan shall be made not only for that part of the water front on which this building rests, but the entire water front of which its foundation is a part. It seems to me that opens up the question of legislation.

I wish to say to the Senator from Virginia also that this matter is not simply a matter of individual action on my part. The Committee on the Library, which is charged with jurisdiction regarding matters of art, has had under consideration for a long time legislation relating to the power plant, and in that connection as an entirely separate matter from the mere construction of the power plant the committee became convinced that it was of the highest importance that this particular water front should receive the careful planning that the rest of the water front is receiving, and they authorized me to report a measure which contained a provision for the planning of that water front such as I have offered as an amendment here. That bill contained other matter, but it contains this, and I have selected this particular matter from that bill which received the favorable report of the Library Committee as an amendment to this bill.

Let me say that almost all the provisions relating to the putting of parks under the jurisdiction of the engineer officer as a part of the park plan have been adopted by amendments upon appropriation bills.

The Senator realizes, of course, that it is almost impossible now to get up any individual bill for action. Congress is eager to adjourn and has a legislative program before it which it must finish. It is almost impossible to go to the calendar and take up a particular bill and secure its consideration and pass it.

So it seems to me this matter ought especially to appeal to the Senator from Virginia as one worthy of immediate consideration. I have not the slightest doubt as to its being germane to the bill by reason of the appropriation for the finishing of the fish market. It is just as much a part of the fish-market development to see to it that its foundation, its wharves, its exterior surroundings are suitable as it is to provide for the building itself, and I trust when this amendment comes before the Senate it will receive the cooperation of the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia and Mr. JONES addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LEWIS in the chair). Will the Senator from Washington indulge the Chair to ask did the Senator from Georgia address the Chair, he having risen before the Senator from Washington?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes; I understood it would be probably desirable to temporarily lay aside the appropriation bill, and I rose for the purpose of asking, if that was done, that the Senate take up the bill known as the vocational educational bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will ask the Senator from Washington if he desires to address himself to the subject under discussion?

Mr. JONES. I do.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I shall not make the suggestion at this time if the Senator from Washington desires to address the Senate on the District of Columbia appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Washington.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I know that the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] is very anxious to dispose of the District appropriation bill, yet I see no special disposition on the other side of the Chamber to bring the discussion to a close or to hasten the disposition of the business in order that the session of the Senate might come to an early conclusion. I have thus far refrained from taking any of the time of the Senate in connection with this bill in the hope that the business of the Senate might be expedited. I have concluded, however, that the majority does not desire to get through with the business of the Senate; at least that they have no anxiety to get through very soon. In fact, I have about come to the conclusion that they do not want to get through for some time; and when the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] the other day expressed the view that the end of the session was near at hand, and for that reason a consideration of certain legislation should be postponed, I wondered what basis he had for any such supposition as that. It occurs to me as though the session is just about begun, and that it will probably continue for about four months longer, anyway. In that time we ought to be able to take care of all the important measures that have been suggested, including immigration, as the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] suggests.

Of course if we are going to be here during all of the hot weather, as it is certain now that we are, so far as I am concerned I do not see why we should not go on and take care of the legislation that the country would like to see passed and of which Senators are in favor. So I have concluded to take a little bit of the time on this bill, in consideration of it and of other matters that seem to be of some little interest to the Senate.

As I understand, the real proposition that is before the Senate is an appeal from the decision of the Chair holding that an appeal from the decision of the Chair came too late, because business of the Senate had intervened. So far as the appeal from the last decision of the Chair is concerned, it seems to me there can be no difference of opinion as to its merit and that the decision of the Chair was entirely right.

The facts are that a decision had been made by the Vice President; then a discussion had followed of two or three hours in extent; one bill, at any rate, had been passed by the Senate and sent to the other House; and two or three reports had been submitted from committees and placed on the calendar. Then an appeal was attempted to be made from the previous ruling of the Vice President. To that it was objected that it came too late. The Chair held that that point of order was well taken. From that decision the appeal that is now pending was taken, and is the first matter that is to be decided upon by the Senate.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. JONES. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Does the Senator from Washington recall what Senator took the appeal to which he has referred?

Mr. JONES. I do not; but I have understood that it was the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. LEE]. I have looked through the RECORD rather hastily, but I could not find where that Senator took an appeal. It was stated, however, that the appeal was taken.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator from Washington will permit the Chair, the Chair desires to inform him that the Chair is informed that there was no appeal registered and that there is none now pending. The Chair would like to know if such is true; because, if such is true, the Chair has misstated the pending question, having stated to the Senate the question was on the amendment of the Senator from California [Mr. WORKS]. If the question is on the appeal from the decision of the Chair, then the present occupant of the Chair has misstated the proposition now before the Senate.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, my recollection is that the Vice President stated that the appeal from the decision of the then Presiding Officer [Mr. HOLLIS] was taken after the Vice President assumed the chair. What the Journal and the RECORD really show with reference to the matter I do not know. I know, however, that several Senators have stated that the Senator from Maryland did appeal. That, however, is not very material anyway. If no appeal was taken, then the question comes back, of course, on the amendment of the Senator from California. If the appeal was in fact taken, that is the pending proposition.

Mr. LEE of Maryland entered the Chamber.

Mr. JONES. The Senator from Maryland [Mr. LEE] is now present, and can say for himself as to whether or not he did take an appeal from the decision of the Senator from New Hampshire, who was then Presiding Officer, that his appeal from the original decision of the Vice President came too late. If the Senator from Maryland desires to make a statement with reference to that matter, I shall yield for him to make any statement with reference to it which he may desire to make.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. I did not hear what the Senator said.

Mr. JONES. It was stated the other day that the Senator from Maryland—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator from Washington will permit the Chair, the Chair desires to ask the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH], the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, whether he will inform the Senator from Washington whether there is a question pending before the Senate upon his appeal from the decision of the Chair?

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. It was my colleague, the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. LEE], to whom the Senator from Washington referred.

Mr. JONES. I referred to the junior Senator from Maryland. It was stated that the Senator from Maryland took an appeal from the decision of the Presiding Officer, being then the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS], that his appeal from the decision of the Vice President came too late. I will ask the Senator from Maryland whether or not he did take an appeal from that decision?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will recognize the Senator from Maryland, with the permission of the Senator from Washington, at this time.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Mr. President, I just came into the Chamber and heard the Senator from Washington refer to the Senator from Maryland. The fact is that I did take an appeal from the decision of the Senator from New Hampshire, who was then the Presiding Officer, but I did not press it, and, under the rules, I presume that appeal is naturally lost.

Mr. JONES. Under the rules that appeal, if it were taken, is still pending, and has never been reached for decision.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Under the rules, Mr. President, an appeal can be taken at any time, unless business has intervened; but, when taken, the appeal must be pressed; otherwise it is lost. That is the distinct statement of the rules.

Mr. JONES. It is debatable, and we have been discussing that appeal here for two days.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary of the Senate informs the Chair that there is nothing in either the Journal or the RECORD disclosing the entry of an appeal.

Mr. JONES. Then, I understand the Senator from Maryland does not desire to insist that his appeal is pending. If so, that leaves the amendment of the Senator from California as the pending question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Then the RECORD will stand that the Senate is now discussing the amendment of the Senator from California, as the Senator from Washington understands?

Mr. JONES. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington is recognized.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, there was considerable discussion the other day with reference to the offering of the immigration bill as an amendment to the child-labor bill. I want to refer to that for just a moment. I am earnestly in favor of both those measures. I have voted, I think twice, to pass the immigration bill over the President's veto. I am prepared to do so again.

I have long been in favor of a child-labor bill and of the exercise of any power that the National Government has with reference to child labor. I was glad when the committee submitted a report to the Senate recommending a bill along those lines.

It was charged the other day that it was a matter of politics in offering the immigration bill as an amendment to the child-labor bill. I, of course, do not know what the motives of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] were in offering it; but, so far as I am concerned, in supporting the amendment I am not animated by political motives at all. It is not a political question; it is entirely nonpartisan. The large majority of the Members of both parties have heretofore voted for the immigration bill; a large majority of both parties have heretofore voted to override the veto of a Republican President and a large majority of both parties have voted to override the veto of a Democratic President. There is no partisan difference upon the bill, and my support of it as an amendment to the child-labor bill is based entirely and solely upon my feeling in favor of legislation of that character and has no political significance whatever.

I believe that there is no measure that the country better understands and is more earnestly in favor of than the immigration bill. It has been pending, as we all know, for a great many years. It has been acted upon by Congress several different times. The sentiment of the country has been growing in favor of such legislation. The support in Congress of such legislation has been increasing; and, in my judgment, there are more votes to-day in Congress in behalf of immigration legislation than there ever were before.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. JONES. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator from Washington will permit me, he called attention to the proposed amendment by the Senator from Idaho to the child-labor bill, attaching the immigration bill to it. If that should not be done, I assume that the Senator from Washington would join with me in the express hope that the majority side of the Senate, who have the responsibility for the program of legislation, should favor action upon both the child-labor bill and the immigration bill as separate measures.

Mr. JONES. I certainly would.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. JONES. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BORAH. If it should turn out that the purpose of the Senator from Idaho in offering this immigration amendment to the child-labor bill was not to play politics, but was for the purpose of resuscitating and putting renewed life into the dying immigration bill, I think it will be conceded that that purpose has been attained.

Mr. JONES. I think that is right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Did the Senator from Idaho state that if it should turn out that the purpose in offering it is politics?

Mr. BORAH. The Senator from Idaho said if it should transpire that it was not for the purpose of playing politics, but for the purpose of resuscitating and putting life into the immigration bill, that that purpose has been well attained.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I hope, that purpose having been attained, it will not lead the Senator from Idaho to withdraw his proposition as to offering the immigration bill as an amendment to the child-labor bill.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator from Idaho will endeavor to do anything and everything that is proper and reasonable in order to keep life in the immigration bill, to the end that it may be passed at this session.

Mr. JONES. I shall cooperate with the Senator to the utmost in his efforts in that direction, and I think we may express some hope of success.

I am satisfied that it was because of the activity of the minority that the child-labor bill has the advantageous position that it now has. I know it is not always safe to rely, or we can not always rely, entirely upon the reports that we see in the newspapers, and yet it has been my experience that while they may get a good many things into their reports that are not just exactly right, they generally get the truth there along with other things. So I am satisfied that the reports in the newspapers a short time ago with reference to the action of the Democratic caucus, or conference, or whatever they see fit to call it, were about correct.

It was reported that our Democratic friends had held a caucus, or a conference, and had laid out a program for the session as to the measures that should be disposed of, and then the list of measures was given, including appropriation bills, the shipping bill, the revenue bill, the workmen's compensation bill, the corrupt-practices bill, and so on. Nowhere in the list was the child-labor bill; and it was reported that it was decided, on account of the opposition of some of our friends on the other side of the Chamber, that that bill would be postponed until the next session.

Then the Republicans began to make inquiry with reference to the situation, and began to express their hope that this bill would be included in the program of the majority. We did this several times. Very suddenly a messenger came down from the White House to the Senate, and apparently conferred with some of the majority leaders, and then it was reported that a conference would be held again to consider whether or not the child-labor bill should be taken up.

As a result of that conference, brought about very largely by the prodding of this side of the Chamber, the inquiries on this side of the Chamber, and the expressions of hope on this side of the Chamber that that bill would be taken up, it seems that our Democratic friends in caucus decided to make the child-labor bill one of the legislative articles on their program. So we have that bill now on the program, and, as I understand, it is to be called up at the conclusion of the District of Columbia appropriation bill. It might not be proper for me to suggest that the majority is playing politics. I think it is, but I am glad that something will lead to action on this desirable bill. Even if politics is animating them, I am glad of it.

We are very hopeful that the immigration bill will be made a part of this program, and we think that it ought to be. We can see no reason why it should not be. Everybody in the country knows the attitude of Congress with reference to it, and the country will know, too, why it is postponed, if it is postponed. While I am not anxious for Democratic success this fall, and while I hope and believe that they will be defeated, I do not think that the consideration of a measure like this, which has been acted on so many times heretofore, ought to be postponed or affected by any possible political effect it might have, whether for or against any political party. As I have said, it is not a party question at all; it has never been considered as a party question; it has never been voted upon in a party way, and therefore it rests with the majority itself as to whether or not any party tinge shall be attached to this measure. If it is postponed, it will be postponed by the action of the majority of the Senate, and the Democratic majority will be held responsible for such postponement before the people of the country, and I will have a right to say in the campaign, if this legislation is not enacted, that the sole reason why it was not enacted was because of the action of the Democratic majority in the Senate, which would not permit it to be considered.

Then we may inquire as to what the reasons were that actuated the Democratic majority in postponing the consideration of this legislation. I would have to state that, in my judgment, the great majority of the Democrats of the Senate, as well as of the House of Representatives, are in favor of the immigration bill and that they did not let it come up simply because they were told not to do so by the President of the United States; in other words, that their candidate for the Presidency is so unalterably opposed to immigration legislation that he not only heretofore vetoed it officially but that now he absolutely throttled the majority and prevented their taking action upon it. If you want to get yourselves in an attitude of that character, of course I am not responsible; it is "not my funeral"; but I do not like to see legislation of this character dealt with in that way. If it brings political benefit to you to pass it, well and good; I care not for that. I should like to see the legislation enacted into law, and I should like to see it enacted now, because I believe that it is most important that it should be enacted now.

I am in favor of attaching it to the child-labor bill as an amendment. It was urged last Saturday that that would probably insure the defeat of both measures. If I believed that, if I thought that, I would not be in favor of attaching it, because I am not in favor of attaching it in order to defeat the child-labor bill; but I am in favor of putting it on in order to secure its enactment into law, and, in my judgment, if we will put it on the child-labor bill it will become a law. I do not believe that the President will veto the child-labor bill and the immigration bill together. Nobody on this floor has stated that the President has assured him or advised him or suggested to him that he would veto the two bills put together; and, judging the future by the past, I believe that we have more reason to think and more reason to expect that the President would sign these bills under these circumstances than that he would stand by his former opinion to the extent of vetoing both of them because of his opposition to the immigration bill.

The President has been known to change his mind, and he has changed his mind upon matters as important and upon matters of less importance than the immigration bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. Including the child-labor bill.

Mr. JONES. I was going to refer to that in a moment. The President would have more reason to change his mind or to allow the immigration bill to become a law without his veto, if Congress should again act, than he has ever had for changing his mind upon any legislative proposition.

The President of the United States was in favor of permitting American ships to go through the Panama Canal without the payment of tolls. His party platform declared for that, and four years ago he made his campaign upon it. He very soon changed his mind with reference to that proposition after he became President. He not only changed his mind but he came to Congress with a message, and without giving the reasons for the change of his mind forced his party to change its mind and to repeal the legislation that we had solemnly placed upon our statute books.

The President came to Congress and in a message declared most solemnly and emphatically that he was opposed to any further or additional preparedness. He said we did not need it; he said we were adequately prepared, and urged our people not to get nervous and excited. Within a year from that time—

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Then the war broke out.

Mr. JONES. Oh, no; the war was going on when he delivered the first message, as the Senator well knows, and it had been going on for months. Then, within a year from the time of delivering that message he joined the ranks of the "nervous and excited," and again came to Congress and said, "I have changed my mind. We want and need and must have additional preparedness."

The President and the Democratic Party have always opposed the creation of a tariff commission. The Republican Party provided for a tariff commission, but when our Democratic friends secured control of the House of Representatives they absolutely refused to appropriate for it and insisted that it be wiped out of existence. The President did not recommend any tariff commission in connection with the Simmons-Underwood tariff law. There was not any commission provided for in that law or in connection with it.

We passed what is known as the Federal Trade Commission act, but there was not any talk of a tariff commission in connection with that; there was not any suggestion that that covered the tariff commission situation when it was under consideration.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. JONES. I do.

Mr. WORKS. Before the Senator leaves that subject—

Mr. JONES. I am not through with the tariff commission.

Mr. WORKS. I am glad the Senator is not, but I merely want to say what the Senator probably never knew, or, if he did, has forgotten, that I introduced a bill in the last Congress providing for a tariff commission and introduced a similar bill again during the present Congress. It has been pending in committee during all of that time and has not been reported.

Mr. JONES. Oh, yes; I knew that, and I knew that action had not been taken. As I have said, we provided for a Federal Trade Commission. Nobody suggested that that took the place of a tariff commission; no suggestion was made on the floor of the Senate that it covered a tariff commission; and yet, when apparently the sentiment of the country was getting pretty strong for a tariff commission, when the business interests of the country were insisting upon a tariff commission, the President, apparently feeling a sort of a change coming on, went out to Indianapolis and said, "We slipped something over on the Republicans; we have it covered in the Federal Trade Commission, and that commission can perform the duties and the powers of a tariff commission." That was news to the Senate and it was news to the country; but apparently the President, getting more firmly of the opinion that we ought to have a tariff commission, and beginning to feel probably that the Federal Trade Commission would not take the place of a tariff commission, finally changed his mind entirely with reference to a tariff commission and now says, "We must have one," and he tells our Democratic friends, "You must pass this measure that the Republicans have been advocating for a long time and that you have been denouncing and opposing all the time. You must pass it." It has passed the House of Representatives in some form, and we are expected to pass it here—another change of mind.

Mr. GALLINGER and Mr. SMITH of Georgia addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield, and to whom?

Mr. JONES. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire, because I think he rose first.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator calls attention to the fact that the President, in his Indianapolis speech, said that they had "put something over" on the Republicans in the Federal Trade Commission bill. The Senator will recall the fact that in that same speech the President very kindly referred to the Senate as being composed largely of ignorant men.

Mr. JONES. Oh, yes. I did not want to call up such an unpleasant thing as that, however. I have a very vivid recollection with reference to it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington now yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That part of the speech I overlooked; but what I wanted to ask the Senator was this: If the Republicans have been in favor of a tariff commission all this time, and have been in power nearly all the time, why did they not create one and establish it permanently?

Mr. JONES. Why, Mr. President, we did provide for a tariff commission. To be sure, we called it a tariff board, but it amounted to the same thing. Its powers may not have been quite so broad as those outlined in the pending bill or as some of us desired, but those powers would have been widened and broadened and the scope would have been made greater, and so on. We provided it. The record will show that. I do not care what any Senator may say about it; the legislative records will show that we provided it, and they will also show that the Democratic House of the last two years of President Taft's term absolutely refused to make appropriations to carry it on, and forced its abolition. Now, if our Democratic friends can get any consolation out of that they are certainly welcome to it. Before it was abolished it made some very important investigations and valuable reports, which were used very extensively and profitably in connection with the "pop-gun" tariff bills which our Democratic friends passed the last of President Taft's term.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington further yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. JONES. Oh, yes.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The Senator calls that a tariff commission. That was the only kind of tariff commission you wanted, I suppose?

Mr. JONES. Oh, no.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That was what suited you.

Mr. JONES. Oh, no, Mr. President. Does the Senator always get the legislation that suits him here, that he votes for? Is it not generally true that when important legislation comes up and is passed the Senator would like to have something a little better, and would be pleased to have something better? But he takes the best he can get at the time, in the hope that thereafter it will be improved.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President—

Mr. JONES. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. But the Republican Party were in power for nearly 50 years, and they certainly had the opportunity of creating the kind of tariff commission they believed in; and as that was the thing they left as a tariff commission, have not we the right to presume that it was all they wanted on that subject?

Mr. JONES. Oh, Mr. President, the Senator is certainly mistaken in saying that we were in power for 50 years.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Most of the time.

Mr. JONES. Oh, no; not in control of all branches of the legislative department and the executive department of the Government. We had the Executive most of the time, but a good part of the time when we had the Executive you had one House or the other.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President—

Mr. JONES. That was the condition at the latter part of our last administration. You had the House, and you undid what we had been trying to do. Of course, everybody concedes that the idea of a tariff commission was of slow growth, and that the Republicans as a party from the beginning were not in favor of it. It was just like it is with reference to a great many matters. Support for them comes gradually. That is true of the tariff commission idea; but it has been, since it originated, a Republican idea and a Republican doctrine, and it is necessarily Republican. If you are going to stand by your "tariff-for-revenue" doctrine, you do not need any tariff commission.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President—

Mr. JONES. And you are perfectly consistent in opposing a tariff commission; but I assume that you are getting ready and your President is getting ready to abandon your "tariff-for-revenue" doctrine and take up the principle of protection, possibly under some other name.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. JONES. Yes; now I yield to the Senator.

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator has been in public life longer than I have and can enlighten me if I am mistaken; but is it not true that President Taft in 1909 recommended, and used his influence in endeavoring to secure a tariff commission, which was not embodied in any tariff bill, but which culminated in the board to which the Senator refers, I think, in 1910?

Mr. JONES. I am not sure now as to just what attitude President Taft took, but I do know that there were a good many Republicans here in the Senate who were urging a tariff commission of very broad powers, and I was with those Senators in that, so far as I was concerned. But it is true that the majority of the Senate—probably the majority of the majority—were not in favor of a commission as broad as that, and the result was the tariff board, which seemed as far as we could go at that time.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I think it is quite true that the idea of a tariff commission has been of slow growth, and I think there have been times when both parties have opposed it, as now they seem, in common, to favor it.

Mr. JONES. As I have said, I have always thought with reference to a tariff commission that it was one of the necessary instruments or concomitants of the Republican system of protection, and that a tariff commission is not necessary at all from the Democratic standpoint or from the standpoint of a tariff for revenue only, and from the standpoint that "protection is robbery." If protection is robbery, why have any of it; and if protection is not needed to encourage our industries, why do we want to investigate the conditions abroad or at home, or the cost abroad or at home? If we are not going to take these conditions into account in framing a tariff law, why do we need a commission to investigate them? And if we are going to take them into account, then we are following Republican principles; that is all there is to it, and that is what we believe in.

I would welcome my Democratic friends over to our position. I read some time ago in a magazine, with very great interest, a very interesting article by the present distinguished and able Presiding Officer of this body [Mr. LEWIS in the chair], taking the very position that Republicans have taken and have upheld for many years on the doctrine of protection. I was glad to welcome him into our ranks upon the principle, anyhow, if he will not come to us under our name. Then I heard with a great deal of interest some time ago the distinguished senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] urging a tariff commission, basing its necessity upon the fundamental principles of Republicanism.

I am glad that our Democratic friends as a party are getting around to our position; and if they would come out squarely and say that they have abandoned their doctrine of a tariff for revenue only, and that they proposed, in levying our tariff, to take into account the conditions at home and abroad industrially, the labor cost, the different elements of cost, and frame our tariff so as to put our people at least upon an equality with those abroad, then indeed there would not be very much difference between the two parties, because, as I have often said, so far as I am concerned the only real party difference that I see between Democrats and Republicans as parties has been and is upon the tariff question.

They say, "We want a nonpartisan tariff commission," and the business men say they want a nonpartisan tariff commission. I do not know what they mean, except this: I have noted, wherever they have passed resolutions declaring for a nonpartisan tariff commission, that they have preceded it with resolutions and declarations to the effect that in framing our tariff we want to take into account the different conditions abroad and balance them or equalize our conditions with theirs, or bring them up to ours, so that we will contest with them upon an equality in the cost of production. If that is what you mean by a nonpartisan tariff commission, I am for it, because that is a Republican tariff commission, and that is all there is to it. You never can have a nonpartisan tariff commission of any kind or character, except that all the parties of the country shall say that our tariff commission shall be to carry out the principles of protection. In other words, the only kind of a nonpartisan tariff commission that will do any good in this country is a protective tariff commission, and that is in fact a Republican tariff commission. You can call it a protective tariff commission in order to get the party word "Republican" off of it; or if all the people of this country come around to the theory that our tariffs should be levied only for revenue, then you can have a tariff commission, if you need it, for revenue purposes only, to carry out revenue purposes, and it will be a Democratic tariff commission; if you want to call it nonpartisan, however, you can do it, but it will be a commission to carry out protection principles or it will be a commission to carry out the principles of a tariff for revenue only. It will be nonpartisan only as the country unites on one or the other of the systems, so that there is no division over that.

No, Mr. President, if you mean by a nonpartisan tariff commission that it is to be a protective tariff commission, I am in favor of it, because it is a Republican tariff commission, even if you want to call it something else.

Then, Mr. President, some time ago the President of the United States was opposed to the child-labor bill because he believed it to be unconstitutional. Now he has changed his mind, and he is for it. In view of all these changes—some of them sudden and some of them unexplained, others probably based upon more mature thought and reasoning and experience—I believe that if we put these two bills together we insure their passage, because, in my judgment, the President, having seen one previous veto overruled in the Senate and defeated in the House by only a few votes, having seen his own veto overruled in the Senate and sustained in the House by only a few votes—I think only about half a dozen—

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. We never voted on it after the President's veto. We never got a chance.

Mr. JONES. On his veto; yes. Of course it passed the Senate by more than two-thirds. It was sustained in the House by a very small vote—I think only about half a dozen; only six or seven, maybe less than that.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, we had the bill first in the Senate, and we passed it over President Taft's veto in the Senate. The House had it first under this administration, and the effort to pass it over the veto was defeated in the House, and we did not have the opportunity. I have no doubt we would have passed it. I certainly should have voted to pass it.

Mr. JONES. Yes; the Senator is correct and I thank him for the suggestion and correction. Now then, he says, the bill has passed the House by a still greater proportionate vote than it ever did before, as I understand. If it passes the Senate by a large vote, as it will, it seems to me that the President of the United States would be fully warranted and fully justified in saying: "In view of my previous veto, and the close vote in the House on it; in view of the tremendous vote now of the representatives responsible to the people of the country, and of the great vote of the Senate, I am not justified in interposing my sole will against the overwhelming sentiment of the people of the country; and therefore, while I have not changed my view with reference to the merits of this measure"—if he has not done so—"yet it is a matter of such importance, and has been so overwhelmingly declared for by the people and their representatives, and as there is incorporated in this bill a provision with which I am heartily in accord, of tremendous importance, I therefore sign the bill." I think that will be done, and that is the reason why I am in favor of attaching it to the child-labor bill.

"Oh," our friends say, "we will put it over until December, until next session." Well, Mr. President, next session is a short session. The appropriation bills will be crowding. They have the right of way. They will have to be passed. We may pass the bill. Probably there will be prolonged discussion which will run it over until after the holidays. Then it goes to the President. He vetoes it. Then it has to come back to both Houses for consideration and discussion, and it will be a very easy matter then to put it over until the 4th of March, and then it will all have to be gone over again. If we want this bill to pass, and we do, we ought to pass it now or this session.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. JONES. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. STONE. Allow me to inject into the Senator's able speech this question: I think it is the desire of the Senator and of the Senate to dispose of the business we have before us, as far as we can dispose of it, as speedily as possible, and adjourn. The Senator, I am sure, concurs in that hope and wish. Would the Senator from Washington agree that a vote on this bill of which he is speaking should be taken on the third or fourth or fifth day, or any other day that he may name, after the meeting of the second session of this Congress in December next? If we agree upon that, if a suggestion should be made to do that, would the Senator agree to it, and would he not be reasonably well satisfied with that arrangement?

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, the Senator from Missouri has not honored me with his presence since I began my little talk. I have practically covered all the suggestions he made.

Mr. STONE. I have not done so because—

Mr. JONES. I know the Senator has been busy; I am not complaining.

Mr. STONE. I have been very busy. I just came in and heard what the Senator has just said.

Mr. JONES. I know it. The Senator is one of the busiest men on that side of the Chamber. He heads one of the most important committees. I recognize that, and I did not say what I have in any spirit of criticism at all. I know the Senator could not be here, but I merely suggested as a fact that I have covered practically all of the suggestions the Senator has made in his question.

Mr. STONE. Then I withdraw the question.

Mr. JONES. I will answer it directly, however, and let the rest of the speech go. I have not, of course, answered the direct question of the Senator. If I can not get this bill through at this session, then I would be willing to agree to vote upon it as early as possible; but I am not going to make the agreement until it is shown to be impossible to get it through this session.

The other suggestion of the Senator I have already covered in my remarks.

Mr. President, there was a very interesting situation developed here the other day. The amendment of the Senator from California [Mr. WORKS] was offered to this bill, and a point of order was made to it as general legislation upon an appropriation bill.

Mr. STONE. Before my friend enters upon that subject would he in his own time be good enough to ask unanimous consent of the Senate that on the third day after the next meeting in December of this Congress a vote be taken upon the immigration bill and all amendments thereto not later than 5 o'clock of that day? Would the Senator be good enough to make that request?

Mr. JONES. In my own time I will very likely—

Mr. STONE. No; right now.

Mr. JONES. I told the Senator a moment ago, in answer to his question, that I would not consent to fix a time early in the next session until I have become satisfied that we can not pass it at this session. I am not satisfied of that yet, and in my early remarks I suggested that I did not believe that the majority wanted to get away from here.

Mr. STONE. I wish to say to my friend that I would second that request if he would make it.

Mr. JONES. Oh, yes; very likely; and the Senator may get an opportunity to second it. But he will probably have an opportunity to second some other request for an earlier consideration of the bill and an earlier vote upon the bill before he has an opportunity to second a request of that character. Why, just Saturday my colleague [Mr. POINDEXTER] asked unanimous consent to consider the immigration bill, I think, upon the disposition of the District of Columbia bill. The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] objected on that side, and stated as his reason for it that he proposed, as soon as this bill was disposed of, to move to take up the child-labor bill. Then my colleague submitted another request, that immediately upon the disposition of the child-labor bill the immigration bill should be made the unfinished business. Senators on that side of the Chamber objected to that request. But I have not despaired yet, Mr. President, of getting a vote upon the immigration bill at this session, and its passage; and until I am satisfied that we will not be able to get a vote, as I said a while ago, I will neither make any request for a vote on the 3d day of the second session in December nor would I consent to it at this time.

Mr. STONE. Let me ask the Senator if his idea, and that of his political colleagues in the Senate, is not this: I am putting it to him for a straight, square, frank answer, man to man.

Mr. JONES. I thought I had answered squarely and frankly.

Mr. STONE. I wish to ask the Senator if what he is after, and those who are cooperating with him, is not this—to press these two measures together for political purposes in this campaign?

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I answered that squarely, and have answered it fully. I stated emphatically no, so far as I am concerned; that I do not consider this a party question. I do not think I will go over what I said a while ago, but I will ask the Senator from Missouri—and it may be asking too much of him, because I know he is busy, and has very important matters—if, in some of his leisure hours, he will just glance over what I have said with reference to that particular subject.

Mr. STONE. I shall be glad to do so.

Mr. JONES. I have tried to show clearly that, so far as I am concerned, it is not a matter of politics, and that I would not want political considerations to weigh on this matter on either side, so far as that is concerned.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, that is such a fine position for a Senator to assume that I congratulate the Senator on the statement, and accept what he says.

Mr. JONES. I mean exactly what I say with reference to it, and if the Senator will do me the honor to read my remarks I want him to take them at their full face value, because that is the way they are intended to be taken. I did say this—that if the majority should refuse to allow this matter to come to a vote, then we could justly make some political appeal with reference to it, and I think we can. I suggested that, and I will not take the time to go over that further.

Mr. STONE. I hope not.

Mr. JONES. No; because I covered it fully.

Mr. President, as I was saying, when the Senator from California [Mr. WORKS] offered his amendment to this bill the other day a point of order was raised with reference to it. The Vice President held that it was in order, for reasons set forth in his ruling. All seemed to be well. The discussion of the amendment proceeded for several hours. But after a little while there seemed to creep into the minds of some of our friends the real effect of the decision of the Vice President, and then indeed there was scurrying to-and-fro. There were movements in hot haste. There were hurried consultations. Heads were put together, and other things were done that I can not refer to on the floor of the Senate. By and by, after, as I say, intervening business had occurred, after debate had continued for two or three hours, an attempt was made to take an appeal from the decisions of the Chair. When the Chair rendered his decision, he invited an appeal to the Senate. In fact, he expressed the belief that an appeal would be taken; but no appeal was taken then. But when the far-reaching effect of this decision was realized, then there was this scurrying to-and-fro that I have referred to, and these consultations, and all that sort of thing; and then came this appeal. Why was it?

Why, it was stated in discussing the proposition that it opened the door to other important legislation being inserted upon the bill; and my good friend from Ohio, the senior Senator from that State [Mr. POMERENE], in a very vigorous utterance, suggested that if the decision of the Chair should stand as the rule of the Senate legislation of various kinds would be inserted or attempted to be placed upon this bill, and he objected to what he called technical objections to the admission of this appeal. I had made this objection. He appeared to be shaking his ebony locks at me. He wanted this appeal allowed. Other Senators suggested the same thing, and that was the reason why they wanted an appeal. It did open the door, Mr. President, just as wide as it could be opened, to legislation upon the District appropriation bill.

What particular legislation was had in mind that was likely to go on this bill that caused such an agitation? Why, we might just as well speak frankly. It was prohibition for the District of Columbia.

That is the character of legislation that it was feared would be offered next to this bill, and, Mr. President, if the ruling of the Vice President stands as the ruling of the Senate, prohibition legislation on this bill will go on, or else it will have to be cut out by a substantive, distinct ruling applicable solely to prohibition legislation, but not in accordance with the rule laid down by the Vice President in passing upon the point of order raised with reference to the amendment of the Senator from California.

I am not sure but that the ruling of the Vice President is correct irrespective of my interest in this other question. The Vice President said that the District of Columbia is simply the agency of the Federal Government, carrying out under the provisions of the Constitution the government of this District and this territory, and therefore this amendment is special legislation. If that is correct, then the District of Columbia appropriation bill is special legislation for this special agency of the Government, and it is not a general appropriation bill at all, and therefore the prohibition against general legislation upon general appropriation bills would not apply.

But the ruling of the Vice President would carry the case still further. He held that the amendment of the Senator from California is special legislation, because it applies to this special agency. If that is true, as I said, this is not an appropriation bill, it is a special appropriation bill, and the proposed amendment for prohibition in the District of Columbia would be special legislation to a special appropriation bill and sustainable on either ground. Of course, I am satisfied that if this matter is submitted to the Senate in accordance with the request of the Vice President made the other day, to which I myself would make no objection, the Senate will vote that the Vice President's ruling was wrong; and if that is true, then, of course, the Senate would hold the other out of order.

Mr. SHEPPARD. May I make a suggestion here?

Mr. JONES. Certainly; I yield.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I wish to reaffirm what the Senator from Washington said. If the ruling of the Chair, to which the Senator from Washington has referred, should be sustained by the Senate my bill for prohibition in the District of Columbia will be offered as an amendment to the District of Columbia appropriation bill.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. JONES. I do.

Mr. VARDAMAN. The Senator seems inclined to take a little rest, and while he is getting his wind I want to express the hope that the Senate will not overrule the excellent decision of the Vice President.

Mr. JONES. I join in that hope.

Mr. VARDAMAN. The Vice President a few days ago, in a very lucid moment, delivered a very elucidating opinion upon the matter under discussion. I was impressed while listening to the delivery of that opinion that the Vice President had given very careful and thoughtful consideration to the subject matter. While I may not altogether agree with his conclusions with reference to the character of the bill—that is, whether it is general or special legislation—I was very glad indeed that he saw fit to render the decision, because I saw in the new rule what seemed to me an opportunity for the enactment of some very salutary legislation for the District of Columbia and for the American people. If the question of saloons or no saloons for the District of Columbia should ever be put squarely to the American Senate, I have no doubt about the saloon hearing its death knell in so far as action in this body is concerned. The American people demand it and the interests of humanity call for such legislation. The open saloon is an evil without a mitigating incident, and I submit that the great Capital of the greatest nation on earth should not be marred by such social cancers and festering sores. It is not in keeping with the highest order of Christian civilization, and the Senate should not overrule the Vice President's judgment, which opens the way for getting rid of this pernicious thing. I do not think anything like that decision has happened since the great commoner in Chicago in 1896 prevented Senator David B. Hill, of New York, and other gold bugs from pressing down upon the brow of labor the crown of thorns and the crucifixion of mankind upon a cross of gold which would accomplish as much for the good of mankind as would be accomplished by the Senate making the decision of the Vice President the rule of the Senate. I sincerely hope, therefore, that this mature, robust child of the Vice President's great intellect may not by a vote of the Senate be immolated upon the bar of the saloon keepers of Washington. The Senate can not afford to permit the sacrifice. It would be an unfortunate surrender to the worst influence in American politics and an outrage upon every idea of loyalty to the best interests of the American people. It would be a sad blow to morality, and above and beyond all a great wrong to the residents of the District of Columbia.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President—

Mr. JONES. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. STONE. I can remain in the Chamber but a little while, and I apologize to the Senator.

Mr. JONES. The Senator does not need to do that.

Mr. STONE. Will the Senator allow me to make an observation at this moment?

Mr. JONES. Certainly.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, the observation I wish to make is this: I think we could, if we devoted ourselves assiduously and sincerely to the work before us, conclude the business of the Senate in time to adjourn within 30 days. But I fear we are not going to do that. This is a presidential year. Senators on both sides, one as bad as the other, are going afield with splendid inspiration, as they see it and feel it, to tell the American people what they severally think about political questions.

Mr. President, I speak with deference and apology, but I doubt whether these eloquent expressions Senators have delivered, are delivering, and will deliver on the various political features of the ensuing campaign will reach the multitudes except in rare instances. More than likely the speech my friend from Washington is delivering to our general delight may be circulated in large numbers by his national or local political organization; but if so, it will be an exceptional case.

May I be permitted to say that as I judge the situation I am inclined to the opinion that the two national committees have some sense of discrimination and that they will be rather inclined to select the speeches made here, so far as they select them at all, with a great deal of care, and therefore that very few of them will ever be circulated in large numbers. Therefore I think we are wasting the time of the Senate in discussing these political questions, for most of those speeches will never be heard of. We could make these speeches to better purpose on the stump in talks to our own constituents, and we might get to them sooner by exercising some restraint now.

Mr. President, if the chairman of the Democratic national committee desired a speech made here setting forth certain views, or if the President, as our party candidate, desired a particular speech to be made, or if there was any general consensus of opinion here on the Democratic side that a speech or a document or anything of that kind should be laid before the Senate to be printed for circulation, I would not object.

The same is true of the other side. If the candidate of the Republican Party, or the chairman of the Republican committee, or if the general judgment of Republican Senators should be that certain things should be said and printed to be circulated among the people, I would not object to that; but for every Senator here on either side to arise and speak on his own motion, with the idea of saying something that will go abroad to influence public opinion and exercise a potent force in deciding the result of the election is a vain presumption, and the only real effect is to waste the time of the Senate.

Mr. President, I have said this much because I believe it better that we should quit talking and go on with the business of the Senate, finish it, and adjourn. If my good friends on the Republican side, and equally my good friends on the Democratic side, wish to go on the stump before their constituents and assault or defend anything whatsoever, they will have abundant opportunity, provided only we can have an adjournment.

If we do not adjourn soon, you Senators will have little opportunity to do that; and, so help me, Cassius, I think you make a mistake by this procrastination. You would have a greater opportunity to present your views to your constituents and to the country on the stump than you will ever have by encumbering the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD with your brilliance. Your views expressed in the RECORD will probably slumber there. At this moment there are a half dozen or so of gentlemen in the news gallery—there were only two when I began, but several have complimented me by appearing since I took the floor—and I know I am not saying anything they will ever report. I am not saying anything worth reporting. I regret that I rarely say anything these acute and discriminating gentlemen consider worth while reporting. They are discriminating, and because they are discriminating they are not going to take up and exploit these long-winded speeches Senators are making for political reasons wholly foreign to the business before the Senate. They become as weary of this peanut politics as other people. They see how utterly improvident and foolish it is. When one of these harangues begins I am told they say, "The dog is barking; let's go out." In this I think they are smart; they have business of more consequence on their hands. And so it almost always happens that this superfluous senatorial eloquence sleeps the sleep of the dead in the RECORD.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the acute Senator, who does not allow anything to escape him, doubtless noticed that there has been as much barking on the Democratic side as on the Republican side.

Mr. STONE. My dear friend, I have just said that I charge nothing to your side that is not equally chargeable to my side. I am talking about my colleagues over here as well as my colleagues over there.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator has a right to do that.

Mr. STONE. I think both amenable to the criticism I have ventured to make. That is all I have to say.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator from Washington permit me a moment?

Mr. JONES. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the Senator from Washington has been a Member of this body for a good many years, I have been a Member of the body a much longer time. Does the Senator remember any time during his membership, or, for that matter, has he acquainted himself with the fact at any time during my longer membership when the business of the session was ever in the condition it is to-day?

Mr. JONES. Never.

Mr. GALLINGER. Has it not been a fact—

Mr. STONE. What does the Senator mean by that?

Mr. GALLINGER. I mean that the Democratic Party seems to be incapable of conducting the legislative business of Congress.

Mr. STONE. Oh, that is an easy thing to say.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is what I mean.

Mr. STONE. But I would like the Senator to say in what way it is incapable so far as this session's uncompleted business is concerned.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will particularize. I do not recall during the long term of the Republican Party in power that we had to pass resolutions extending the appropriations of one session to another. We got our appropriation bills through before the fiscal year ended as a rule.

Mr. STONE. Will the Senator assert that the appropriations during the ascendancy of the Republican Party in Congress were not extended?

Mr. GALLINGER. I do not say they were not in one or two instances, where an appropriation bill had not gotten through; but look at the situation to-day. We are a month after the end of the fiscal year.

Mr. STONE. Now, the Senator is making another political speech.

Mr. GALLINGER. Oh, no; no political speech. I am reciting a fact, modern history, current events.

Mr. STONE. I contradict the fact.

Mr. GALLINGER. Well, Mr. President, the RECORD speaks for itself.

Mr. STONE. Yes; it does.

Mr. GALLINGER. We are in a deplorable situation so far as the business of the session is concerned. In my judgment there never has been a parallel. And now I want to say to the Senator that it looks to me as though we are going to be here all summer. I have been here every day since we met in December, with one exception, and I am not the youngest man in this body.

Mr. STONE. No; about the oldest.

Mr. GALLINGER. But I am prepared to stay here until the snow flies, if necessary, to do the business of the session.

Mr. STONE. I take pleasure in complimenting the Senator on his attendance upon the duties of the Senate.

Mr. GALLINGER. I hope during that time, whether it be longer or shorter, we will pass the remaining appropriation bills and agree to all the conference reports and that we will act upon every good measure that ought to be acted upon, including the child-labor bill and the immigration bill; but I think it would be the part of wisdom for the majority to put over one or two other bills that they are going to urge upon us and that will keep us here longer than the Senator from Missouri would like to stay. I sympathize with the Senator from Missouri that we ought to get home; I should like to get home; but I am not going to abandon the ship during the summer months.

Mr. STONE. Particularly the shipping bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am going to stay here and fight it out if it takes all summer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CLAPP in the chair). The Chair will hear again the Senator from Washington.

Mr. JONES. The Senator from Missouri referred to the boys coming out of the press gallery. They always like to be amused, like the rest of us, and they always like to be entertained, like the rest of us. The Senator from Missouri is always entertaining.

Now, he seemed to think that I had an idea that my speech was going to be circulated either by the press or otherwise. It never entered my mind until he suggested it, and I take it as quite a compliment that it should have entered his mind. I did not intend to say many things when I rose that I have said. This is not intended as a political speech at all. It is not for the galleries, press or otherwise, nor is it intended for political circulation. I have been trying to give my real reasons for what I have expressed with reference to the position I have taken in reference to the immigration bill, and the references to the changes of attitude on the part of the President were simply to show the basis for the hope I have that he will very likely change in reference to the immigration bill when it is put up to him.

The Senator from New Hampshire called attention to the condition of the business of the Senate. I have taken some little pains to examine the Record during the period prior to my entrance here, and the Senator from New Hampshire is absolutely correct in saying that there never was a time in the history of the country when the legislative business of this Government was so behind as it is now.

I put in the Record not long ago a statement prepared by the chairman of the Appropriations Committee of the House of Representatives showing how many times resolutions have been passed extending appropriations for many, many years. That is in the Record. Senators can find it and they can get that information by a very brief examination. My recollection is that until the Democrats got control of Congress in the last year of President Taft's administration not since 1894 has a resolution been necessary to extend appropriations, and since that time, the last of Taft's term, every Congress they have had to pass one or more.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. If the Senator will pardon me, I will say there never was a time when there were as many important bills which had to be attended to as at this session. I recognize the fact, and we all deplore it, that these matters have been put over; but there never was a time in the history of the country when there were so many important bills and as much important legislation before Congress. That has been the cause of the delays in the appropriation bills.

Mr. JONES. I venture the assertion that during the last four years of President Taft's administration there were more important general legislative matters enacted into law than there have been during this administration and of just as great importance as these. As far as a discussion of that is concerned, of course it is not profitable here, but it will be profitable somewhere else; and I have not any doubt, so far as I am concerned, of maintaining my position with reference to it.

Now, Mr. President, I had come to the proposition of this amendment that was intended to be offered to the bill. Under the ruling of the Vice President we will have to await the action of the Senate with reference to that. But in connection with the interest that apparently got very active when they realized the import of that decision I wish to refer for a short while—and this is the real purpose for which I rose—to the excise conditions in Washington City. I have reduced what I have to say with reference to the matter to writing. I know this will not be so interesting as extemporaneous colloquies, but I want to make it as concise as possible.

Mr. President, there is no interest so corrupt in its influence as the liquor traffic. Its insidious agents delve the deepest and rise the highest to serve its ends and accomplish its purposes. No one has a good word for it, and yet its power is almost without limit. It prevents legislation and nullifies it when enacted. It controls public officials directly or indirectly and defies public sentiment openly and brazenly.

Its power and influence were never so plainly manifested and never reached higher sources than here in the Capital of the Nation. The time has come for a plain statement of the facts in order that the people of the country may know what has been done here in the highest places of trust, honor, and responsibility.

The conditions in the District of Columbia were such a few years ago as to arouse a public sentiment for a more stringent regulation of the liquor traffic here. Five or six hundred saloons were doing business. They were massed about the public schools, confronted public institutions, were in close proximity to houses of religious worship, and were scattered all through the residential section of the Capital of the Nation.

To remedy these and many other deplorable conditions the excise law of 1913 was passed after overcoming the power and extreme methods followed and used by the liquor elements to prevent its enactment.

The act placed the enforcement of the law in the hands of an excise board of three members, to be appointed by the President of the United States. He was not restricted to any section of the country, or in a partisan way, in the selection of the members of this board. It was thought that the President of the United States in the selection of men to administer a law in the interest of temperance and good morals in the Capital of this great Nation would be beyond the reach of the baneful influence of the liquor interests. It was believed that the President of the United States would consider carefully the character of the law to be enforced, the purpose to be accomplished, and the moral sentiment of the community to be regarded. It was thought that the President of the United States would seek to appoint men upon the excise board who would administer the law in the interest of temperance, morality, and the welfare of the community. This has not thus far been done.

The law was not, and was not intended to be, a prohibition measure. Those interested in its passage did not desire any fanatical enforcement of its provisions. They simply asked for a fair, reasonable, and sincere administration of the spirit and letter of a law under which not more than 300 saloons might be permitted in the District of Columbia. They did not urge the selection of any particular individual, but they did urge the President to appoint men who would be in favor of the enforcement of the spirit and letter of the law, and suggested a list of names, any of whom would be satisfactory to them. None of these men were selected. Three men were named without any consultation with the friends of the law. Upon the presentation to the President of certain facts with reference to two of the nominees, which would have been called to his attention if any inquiry had been made, their names were recalled by the President. The third appointee was from New Jersey. He was not considered very satisfactory, but it was understood that he was the personal selection of the President, and no objection was made and he was confirmed. Two others were nominated. Their attitude was not known. There was no special reason to warrant serious objection and they were confirmed. One of these two was an attorney. Largely through his influence, rules were adopted which in some instances nullified the plain provisions of the law, and in every case the saloon interest was favored and all doubts resolved for its benefit. Afterwards this attorney resigned and became a regular practitioner before the board of which he had been a member. The facts warrant the assumption that he had special influence with the board in securing licenses and transfers which should have been acted upon by the board without the intervention of any attorney. It was shown in court that he had entered into a contract to secure a license, for which he and another party were to be paid $5,500. This contract was held by the court to be against public policy. This attorney continued to appear before the board, and, from general rumor, has been able to secure licenses and transfers from the board when others have failed.

The maladministration of the board was so flagrant and so notorious that charges against it were made on the floor of the Senate. Upon the presentation of these charges Senator MARTINE of New Jersey said:

Mr. President, in view of the statements made here by the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] on Saturday last, which, if they are half true, the Senate owes the duty to itself and to the country that they should be diligently inquired into, I desire to make a motion. I am unalterably opposed to prohibition, but I am square, and I believe in being square. To that end I move that a committee of five be appointed by the President of the Senate to inquire into all the charges which have been made by the Senator from Washington.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New Jersey. [Putting the question.] The "ayes" have it, and the motion is agreed to.

Under this authority the Vice President appointed as such investigation committee Senators MORRIS SHEPARD, WILLIAM HUGHES, WILLIAM H. THOMPSON, WILLIAM P. DILLINGHAM, and W. L. JONES. Subsequently, the following resolution was passed:

Senate resolution 522.

Resolved, That the special committee appointed by the President of the Senate to investigate the conduct of the excise board is hereby further authorized to investigate fully into the manner in which the excise law, so called, is being administered in the District of Columbia, and said committee is hereby authorized to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, to compel the attendance of witnesses, to employ stenographers to report such hearings as may be had at a rate not to exceed $1 per printed page. The expense of such hearings shall be paid out of the contingent expenses of the Senate, upon vouchers to be approved by the chairman of the said special committee. The said committee is also authorized to sit during the sessions of the Senate.

This investigation was conducted by two Democratic Senators and two Republican Senators, one of the Democratic Senators being unable to attend the meetings of the committee. Its report was signed and concurred in by the two Democrats and the two Republicans, and can not be charged to party bias. The evidence taken and the report made were submitted to the Senate and printed as a document under date of March 4, 1915.

Mr. President, I ask permission to insert at the close of my remarks the report of the committee without the testimony.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, permission to do so is granted.

[The report referred to will be found at the close of the speech of Mr. JONES as an appendix.]

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, the committee found nothing to commend in the administration of the law by the Excise Board, but it did find that the law had been nullified in its plain provisions in the interest of the saloons, and that in the exercise of its discretion the board had always favored the saloons and has resolved every doubtful question in their favor.

It found that the plain provisions of the law prohibiting the issuance of a license to a hotel with less than 50 bedrooms had been evaded and violated by the granting of hotel licenses under the name of restaurants; that the plain provision of the law prohibiting a license to a barroom on any side of a street with less than 50 per cent of its frontage used for business purposes other than saloons had been violated; and that the board, in order to favor the granting of saloon licenses, provided in its rules that this positive restriction in the law should not apply to hotels and clubs; that the board, by the adoption of a rule unauthorized by the law, had permitted minors to enter stores where intoxicating liquors are sold, contrary to the positive provisions of the law; that while the law requires every barroom to be closed between the hours of 1 o'clock a. m. and 7 o'clock a. m. and on Sundays, the board by rule permits the saloons to be opened by 6.45 a. m. and on Sunday, between the hours of 10 a. m. and 12 noon under the excuse of cleaning up; that the board by rule authorized receivers, trustees and other representatives of licensees to conduct the business of the licensee for a period of 60 days, without any authorization by law for so doing; that while the law placed the maximum number of barroom licenses at 300, the board had not exercised its discretion for a smaller number, but that the testimony showed it to be the opinion of the board that it should keep the number at 300; that while the law expressly prohibits the establishment of more than one bar under a license, the board had permitted the violation of this provision in at least two instances; that while the law provides that no more than one entrance should be permitted from the street to a barroom unless the board shall specially permit an extra entrance, out of 39 applications for extra entrances 38 were granted; that while the law expressly provides that no license shall be granted west of the western line of the fire limits "as now established," meaning at the time of the passage of the act, the board licensed two saloons which were beyond the line when the law passed, but which were included by a subsequent change of the line before the law took effect, and evidently for the express purpose of defeating the law, which facts and conditions were brought to the attention of the board before it granted the licenses.

I might add here, Mr. President, that this matter finally reached the courts, and the court of appeals has affirmed the decision of the lower court holding that the granting of these licenses was illegal. The committee found further that, while the law expressly provides that no more than three saloons shall be permitted on one side of a block, the board has permitted four saloons on one side of the principal business blocks of the city; that while the law prohibits the location of a barroom within 300 feet of an alleyway occupied by residences, except upon unanimous vote of all three members of the board, the board granted licenses in practically every instance where applied for within 300 feet of these places, and in some instances permitted three or more barrooms to be located within 300 feet of an alley; that while the law prohibits the location of a place where liquor is sold at retail or wholesale within 400 feet of a schoolhouse or a house of religious worship, measured between the nearest entrances by the shortest course of travel, the board has adopted a system of measurement by the longest usual course of travel, so that in many cases where the shortest course of travel which pedestrians would naturally and conveniently take would prevent the granting of licenses, the board has resorted to square-corner measurement so as to permit the saloons to operate; but, worse than all that, the committee found that the board had permitted plain attempts to evade the law by the construction of parkings and other obstructions for the evident purpose of making the distance greater than 400 feet; that wherever a building is not used exclusively for religious purposes the board held that it is not a place of religious worship or school within the meaning of the law, as in several instances the board granted licenses within 400 feet of a building where large schools are conducted and large congregations carry on religious worship; that while the law prohibited the granting of a license to a hotel the character of which, or the character of the proprietor of which, is shown to be objectionable to the board, the board granted a license to the proprietor of the Grand Hotel, notwithstanding that he had been convicted of selling liquor to a minor girl and that his license had formerly been canceled, and that he had organized a corporation which he controlled, in whose name he was applying for a license, and that a strong report was made against him by the police, and that other hotels which had been conducted in a disreputable manner were granted licenses; that the board had refused licenses to properly conducted barrooms and had granted licenses to disreputable places in the same neighborhood over strong protests; that, while the law provides for the transfer of licenses of deceased licensees by their personal representatives, the board permitted the widow of a licensee to operate a barroom long after her husband's death, although the corporation counsel had given it as his opinion that the bar was being operated contrary to law, and that the board did not stop such violation until pressure was brought to bear upon them through one of the District Commissioners; that the provision of the law requiring the interior of a barroom, when selling is prohibited, to be exposed to full view from the street is almost wholly disregarded; that plain violations of the provision of the law requiring 50 per cent of the frontage of a block to be used for business purposes before a license can be granted have been permitted by allowing saloon entrances to be changed from one side of a square to another without any change in the saloon itself, and in some cases by a mere change in the number without changing even the entrance, and that in some cases, where it is plainly apparent that buildings of very unsubstantial character were constructed for the sole purpose of making business frontage in order to secure saloon license, the board has approved such action by granting the license; that in the case of the Hotel Thyson, which is located just across P Street from the Polk School, while it was apparent that additional rooms were constructed in an attempt to technically comply with the law, the board, notwithstanding such plain purpose to evade the law, and notwithstanding the fact that it was just across the street from a public school, granted the license; and that the board, in the exercise of its discretion, granted licenses to at least four saloons within 403 and 436 feet of the Polk School and the McKinley Manual Training School, attended by hundreds of boys and girls of the city. That in practically every case where the board issued a license under circumstances that constitute a violation or evasion of the true purpose and spirit of the law all phases of the situation were brought to its attention before the issuance of the licenses, and the special Senate investigating committee closed its report with this language:

The committee believes, however, that a careful and dispassionate review of the evidence before us as to the conduct of the board in the administration of the excise law shows that it has disregarded the underlying purpose of the law; that it has nullified its most beneficial features; and that it has encouraged and approved plain evasions and perversions of the law. It is the judgment of the committee that the board has resolved practically every doubt as to law or fact in the interest of saloons. It has shown no proper comprehension of its duties in the execution of a law framed in the interest of morality and good government. The policy of the board in fostering the liquor traffic to the fullest extent permitted by the law, and in many instances at the expense of both its spirit and its letter, is fraught with increasing danger to the health, peace, and morals of the people of the District of Columbia.

In view of the nature of this report the members of the board were expected to resign. They ought to have done so. They did not. They continued to act. No action looking to their removal was taken by the President of the United States, who alone could remove them. In his statement made before the subcommittee of the Senate opposing Gen. Smith's confirmation Senator Sheppard said:

I called the attention of the President to our report and inclosed him a copy of the summary and directed his attention to the hearings. That was before the term of Gen. Smith, the chairman of the Excise Board, had expired.

On the 1st day of July, 1915, the term of Robert G. Smith expired. It was believed then by the friends of law and temperance that the President would surely appoint some one else. Congress adjourned. During the recess it was given out that Gen. Smith had received a recess appointment, and on the 10th day of December, 1915, after Congress had met, the President of the United States sent his name to the Senate for confirmation as a member of the Excise Board. By this action the President declared the report of the Senate committee untrue, or he approved the acts of Gen. Smith and the board in nullifying, evading, perverting, and debauching the excise law of the District of Columbia.

The friends of temperance, morality, and law observance were shocked at the unexpected action of the President. His action was inexplicable to them. Because of his high character and ideals and devotion to sobriety and regard for law observance his action can not be explained, except on the theory that in some way he had overlooked the facts brought out by the investigation carried on by a committee of the United States Senate in the Capital of the country, of the acts of a board appointed by him to administer a law enacted for the special well-being of the people of the District of Columbia.

The Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] wrote him a letter asking him if he had seen the report. The President's reply was:

Your memorandum about the Excise Board I note with concern, because I have had the impression that the members of the board were confronted by a very difficult and almost impossible task. I have not had the time to read the report of the investigating committee, but I have seen a summary of it and am very much concerned what to do in the matter.

To this Senator SHEPPARD replied:

I appreciate the fact that there are such tremendous demands upon your time, but I am sure that if you could find the time to read the report of the investigating committee you will agree with its conclusions as to the conduct of the Excise Board. (Hearings before the subcommittee, p. 33.)

How concerned he was may be judged by his subsequent action. He did not withdraw Gen. Smith's name, but left it to come to a vote in the Senate. On the 27th day of April, 1916, the Senate voted upon the question of Gen. Smith's confirmation. He was rejected. The Senate confirmed the report of its committee and put its seal of approval upon that report and expressed its condemnation of the nullification, evasion, and perversion of the law passed for the welfare of the sober, temperate, and moral-loving people of the District.

On the 1st day of July, 1916, the term of office of Henry S. Baker expired. He was one of the original appointees to the excise board. From the beginning he approved and assisted in the perversion of the law by the board, and showed by his action an utter disregard for its provisions, and an abject subservience to the liquor interest. Notwithstanding the report of the Senate committee; notwithstanding the rejection of Gen. Smith by the Senate, of which the President of the United States was duly and officially notified, and notwithstanding the concern with which the President viewed the situation after the nomination of Gen. Smith, the President of the United States renominated Henry S. Baker as a member of the excise board, and sent his name to the Senate July 14, 1916. I do not know whether he had read the investigating committee's report when he reappointed Mr. Baker. He said he had not read it when he reappointed Mr. Smith. When Mr. Smith was rejected I think he should have examined that report and testimony most carefully. By his action he again denounced the report of the Senate committee as false, indicated again his approval of the nullification and perversion of the law passed in behalf of temperance, morality, and good government in the District of Columbia, and directly rebuked the Senate for its action in rejecting Gen. Smith.

Mr. President, the excise law of the District of Columbia was not enacted in the interest of the liquor traffic. It was enacted to promote temperance, morality, and good citizenship. Certain definite restrictions were placed by the law upon the power of the board to secure these purposes, and a wide discretion was left in it which was hoped, believed, and expected would be used in the interest of the people and not in the interest of the saloon. The board resolved every doubtful provision of the law in favor of the saloon; it has exercised its discretion always in favor of the saloon, and it has directly nullified, disregarded, and perverted the plain provisions of the law in the interest of the saloon. Robert G. Smith and Henry S. Baker have done all these things. They have been reappointed by the President of the United States after their acts have been called to his attention. Why he has done so I shall not surmise. The Senate has rejected the reappointment of Robert G. Smith and thereby shown its condemnation of these acts and its respect for the law. What will it do now? If Henry S. Baker is confirmed, the Senate should apologize to Gen. Smith and ask the President to withdraw Mr. Cummings's name and again appoint Gen. Smith in order that the inexcusable and perverted administration of the excise law, which seems to meet with his approval, but which has been condemned by the Senate committee and the Senate itself, may be continued.

Mr. President, in this connection I desire to call attention, merely as indicating some of the influences as to these appointments, to the fact that the Secretary to the President sent to the subcommittee of the Senate which was investigating the nomination of Robert G. Smith, a list of the letters which he had received indorsing Mr. Smith. The first one on the list is from Gen. Dennis F. Collins, of the National Guard of New Jersey. I desire simply to print in connection with my remarks the first letter from Dennis F. Collins, of Elizabeth, N. J.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection it is so ordered.

The letter referred to is as follows:

NATIONAL GUARD NEW JERSEY,
HEADQUARTERS SECOND BRIGADE,
Elizabeth, March 15, 1913.

Hon. JOSEPH P. TUMULTY,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR JOE: It has come to my attention that the President has the appointment of a board of excise commissioners for the District, said board to consist of three persons at a salary of $2,400 per annum each.

I take great pleasure in recommending to the President, through you, Gen. Robert G. Smith, a gentleman whom I have known for a long term of years and been closely associated with in the military service of New Jersey. Gen. Smith has been a resident of Washington for some years past and not actively engaged in any business and would, to my mind, make an ideal man for such a position. He is a loyal Democrat and a staunch friend and just the character of man whom I know the President would desire and would be pleased to appoint to a position of such responsibility.

Anything that you can possibly do to advance his interest in this matter would be greatly appreciated.

With kind personal regards to Mrs. Tumulty and the six little Tumultys, believe me,

Very truly, yours,

DENNIS F. COLLINS.

Mr. JONES. As further identifying Dennis F. Collins, I desire to call attention to the fact that the City Directory of Elizabeth, N. J., for 1913, when the first letter was published, gives the only Dennis F. Collins there as:

Dennis F. Collins, president of the Peter Breidt City Brewery Co., 604 Pearl; h. 414 S. Broad.

The 1915 Directory makes the same statement.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. JONES. I do.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. What purpose is there in dragging in the name of Gen. Dennis F. Collins? I can not understand that. It is, of course, to bring him into disrepute, if the Senator can do so. I will say to the Senator from Washington that I happen to know Gen. Dennis F. Collins very well, indeed. I have known him for thirty-odd years. He is a most dignified, reputable, cultured, and intelligent gentleman, standing high in the city of Elizabeth, a city with a population of 75,000 or 80,000 people, in New Jersey. He has recently been elected as the comptroller of that city and has held very many other offices of distinction and trust. He is the president of the Peter Breidt City Brewing Co. I know nothing particularly dishonorable in that fact. He has been honorable in all of his dealings; he stands high and reputably in the community; he is trusted and respected alike by all classes and conditions of men; he is a splendid citizen, an honorable and generous father, a good husband, and in every way stands well in the community. That he is the president of a brewing company does not necessarily reflect upon him. Matthew Vassar, who founded Vassar College at Poughkeepsie, on the Hudson, that splendid college for the education of girls, was a brewer, and every dollar of the money that went into Vassar College and that to-day maintains it came from the brewing industry. The brewing industry would not stand one hour if there was not a demand for its product. It is the ceaseless and endless demand of humanity for these things which prompts brewing.

It is the opinion of some of the wisest and best advocates of temperance in our land that if light beers could be brought more into use there would be less of intoxication and less inebriety induced by the use of alcohol.

I am not here, however, to discuss that question; but I do say that it is ungenerous and it is unfair to endeavor to drag this gentleman into disrepute because of the fact that he is the president of a brewing company. Knowing him, as I do, knowing the repute and respect in which he is held in the community in which he has lived for thirty-odd years, I should be ungenerous and untrue to myself if I did not resent it.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I did not make any suggestion at all that it was to the discredit of Mr. Collins that he was the president of this brewing company.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Then what was the Senator doing it for?

Mr. JONES. I simply wanted to show the fact; that is all. I did not intend to comment upon it or to say anything about it.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. But you did. Why did the Senator go so far as to look up the Elizabeth Directory in order to find out who Gen. Collins was? I could have told the Senator that without the trouble of getting the directory.

Mr. JONES. I did so because in the letter from Mr. Tumulty he did not say what the business of Mr. Collins was, and I simply looked to see what his business was. He might have been the manager of a department store; I did not know. He might have been the president of a bank; I did not know. He might have been a day laborer; I did not know. I simply set out the fact as to what his business is, and I did not intend to comment upon it one way or the other.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I want to say right there—

Mr. JONES. Why the Senator should get so enthusiastic over the matter I do not know.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I am not enthusiastic. I feel sad for the Senator's line of thought. The Senator says he does not know whether Gen. Collins is the president of a bank.

Mr. JONES. I said I did not know until I saw the directory.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I can say for the Senator's information that there are presidents of banks in the city of Elizabeth, N. J., and in the counties of Union and Essex that use considerable of his wares and products.

Mr. JONES. That may be true. I have not questioned that. As I say, I have not said that this reflected upon him. The Senator from New Jersey seems to think that it does.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Nor do I think that it reflects upon him.

Mr. JONES. The Senator seemed to object to my putting the fact in the RECORD that his business, that of president of a brewing company, is a reflection upon Mr. Collins. That did not enter my mind at all. Why it entered the Senator's mind I am not able to say. His suggestion is the only reflection that anyone has made on Gen. Collins.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I know what the purpose was. Mr. JONES. I wanted to get the facts; that was all.

Mr. President, I have here a very short address delivered by the Rev. Dr. Charles Wood, of the city of Washington, with reference to the liquor question, which I ask to make a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The address referred to is as follows:

THE WEAK BROTHER AND THE WINE QUESTION.

[A sermon by the Rev. Charles Wood, D. D.]

"It is good neither to eat flesh nor to drink wine, nor anything whereby thy brother stumbleth or is offended or is made weak." (Romans 14: 21.)

Paul places extraordinarily high honor upon the weak brother. He puts him on a pedestal and asks that all the Roman Christians should look at him. He makes the treatment given him the standard by which even now we may judge whether or not our Christian charity is of the Pauline type. However clear our course may seem to be, we must not sail in it if we are in danger of sinking the weak brother.

This gives us a very different valuation of a very unpopular member of society from that to which we are usually accustomed. The weak brother is seemingly so superfluous that many of us are inclined to accept any suggestion promising to eliminate him. He is much in the way; he interferes with the freedom of our swing and the liberty of our movements. But Paul says: It is good not to do anything that may cause him to stumble or to be made weaker than he already is.

Paul puts remarkable honor upon the wine bottle as well as upon the weak brother. He places the bottle by the side of the platter, in as good company as even the owner of a French or California vineyard could desire, and tells us we do well to use neither if by our use of either we are to make our brother stumble and fall. Paul is speaking, of course, of meat that had been offered to idols; such meat was stamped with a sign which showed to which particular god—Jupiter or Mars or Venus—it had been sacrificed. Paul is speaking not as a vegetarian or a hygienic expert. He never dreamed, probably, that an excessive meat diet produces a tendency to rheumatism and gout. He is speaking only as a Christian apostle. He is thinking exclusively religiously and spiritually. It was generally supposed that those who ate the meat consecrated on the altars of pagan gods were themselves worshippers of the very gods to which the meat was offered. Therefore Paul says it is good not to eat such meat, though you yourself may understand perfectly that an idol is nothing in the world and that you are eating this particular meat because it is excellent and cheap. Some weak brother who sees you buy and eat it is convinced that you have gone over to the pagans, and that really you are as much an idolator as any of them.

This weak brother may have very little sense, but Paul thinks that they exercise the highest kind of wisdom who for the weak brother's sake refuse to buy this meat, even though they may have to pay more for the same thing sold in the next shop without the stamp upon it.

For the weak brother himself, no one has ever seemed to care much except the Man of Nazareth and those who, like Paul, get their ideals of men and things from Him. Christ made brotherhood broad, deep, and real. It is no mere matter of blood, but of choice. When we choose Christ, we choose all His brethren as ours. The feeling we might have for the stupid or defective son of an old friend—the care we would take not to do anything that would injure him—Christ wants us to exercise for all the sons and daughters of our Father. What a day that will be when every man treats every man and woman with the same carelessness and respect with which he would treat his own brother or sister!

On behalf of the weak brother the question may be asked of those who are eagerly testifying against him, "Why is he so weak, and why are you, who despise him because of his weakness, so strong?" You are strong because you had a Christian father and mother; the blood in your veins may not be blue, but it is pure, good, old Puritan, Huguenot, or Quaker blood. Your parents gave you a body unmortgaged to disease or vice. They rocked you in an untainted cradle. You were well born; none of your nerves were exposed; none of your teeth, when they came at the proper time, were set on edge. "What have you that you have not received?" You remember it sometimes on Thanksgiving Day, and thank the Lord that you are not like other men—like his weak brother, for instance. He was not well born; he came into life in the slums or the alleys; his cradle was unclean and unhygienic. Or, if he was born in a palatial home, it may be that every corpulence, red or white, was tainted with disease or lust.

But not all the weak brothers were born weak. Many of them have come out of Christian homes, and for the first half of life, it may be, they seemed as strong as anybody. Then something happened, and their strength vanished, and now they are classified with the derelicts. "It is good, neither to eat flesh nor to drink wine, nor anything whereby thy brother stumbleth or is offended or is made weak." It would be absurd to say that all those who were born weak have been kept weak by the use of wine or alcohol or strong drink or "booze"—call it by any name you like. It would be equally absurd to say that all who were once strong became weak through the use of intoxicating liquors. But is there any one thing that has caused so much weakness and wretchedness for all sorts and conditions of men as alcohol? "If we could sweep intemperance out of our country, there would be hardly enough poverty"—poverty is usually a sign of weakness; a man is too weak to get work, or to weak to keep it after he gets it—"left to give healthy exercise to the charitable impulse," says Bishop Phillips Brooks.

When we ask such a question as this, "Whether there is any other one thing that causes so much weakness and wretchedness as alcohol," we must go for our answer to the specialist. We may say very severe things about specialists when we have no need of them, but the moment we are threatened by some mysterious disease we immediately go in search of some one who has made the suspected malady the study of a lifetime. In our haste we probably hurry over to New York, and very likely do not stop till we reach England, France, or Germany, when in all probability—it is certainly true in two or three cases, at least—the best specialist for that particular trouble lives here in Washington.

The specialist whom we wish first to question about alcohol is the physiologist. We find that he has something to say about the use of wine in "moderation"—which some one has defined as "the vanishing point between a bucket full and a thimble full." Our physiologist has studied the effect of doses between these extremes, and he has found that the injurious results are in direct proportion to the quantity employed. Perrin and Lallemand, two French chemists of high repute, were among the first to find that alcohol is treated by the human system as an intruder, and every effort is made to expel it. But before such an effort can succeed the poison produces a partial paralysis of the nerves and muscles of the arteries. The arterial walls are expanded; the blood flows, therefore, more rapidly to the heart, and the heart being compelled to keep the pace may beat itself out in half its allotted time.

The brain is but one twenty-third the weight of the entire body, yet it receives one-sixth of all the blood passing through the system. The blood corpuscles are made rough and ragged by alcohol. Forty per cent of the blood is albumen, and the effect of alcohol on the albumen of the white of an egg is as well known to cooks as chemists—it is turned into a leathery substance. The brain supplied with rough and ragged corpuscles and a fluid much like leather in its appearance shows the results immediately. Shakespeare makes Cassio say in Othello, "Oh, that men should put an enemy in their mouths to steal away their brains." Their brains are still there, but the blood poured into them is of a quality so poor that they find themselves in the position of an engine fed with slag instead of coal. When the physiologist talks to men of brawn instead of brain he says to them, "The only temperance for you is total abstinence; the only dose of alcohol that you will be permitted to take is infinitely smaller than that of a child's thimble full." No boat's crew, no baseball or football team, no track athlete, no brute training to batter the face of another brute, is given so much as a thimble full. The physiologist knows that total abstinence has the greatest chance of recovery from disease and wounds. Life insurance companies give abstainers special rates. They are considered 23 per cent better risks than the thimble-full drinkers.

The sociologist is a specialist on a large scale. He studies society as a whole; he considers its wastes and burdens from the side of political economy. Gladstone, though not a specialist, was almost as great as a sociologist as a statesman. No man can be a great statesman who is not something of a sociologist. Gladstone asserted in Parliament that the loss to England by the use of alcohol was greater than that "by war, pestilence, and famine combined."

Our own ex-Secretary of State has given startling statistics that have not been denied as to the waste caused by alcohol. He points out that while we have spent $400,000,000 on the Panama Canal, we spend each year six times as much for drink; that while our bill for education of all the children in the United States, from the time they enter the kindergarten till they graduate from the universities, is $750,000,000—this, our only defense against barbarism—costs us only one-third as much as we pay for drink; that our National Government always considered—especially by the party in the opposition—as incredibly extravagant, expended last year a little less than one and a quarter billions of dollars—one-half the sum that was spent for drink; that the war in Europe, costing more than $50,000,000 a day, could be carried on for six weeks by the amount paid here every year for alcohol. Two billions and a half of dollars is said by Mr. Bryan to be the sum of our annual drink bill. Cleopatra's solution of pearl was a pauper's beverage compared with the river of gold which is poured annually down the American throat.

The philanthropist is a specialist of a still broader type; he loves humanity and hates all that destroys men; his words are like jagged lightning with the roll of thunder behind them when he sees the weak, hopeless in their weakness, and the strong becoming weak, because of alcohol. Statesmen, scientists, orators, poets, preachers, drink and go reeling from the Senate and the House of Representatives; from laboratories and lecture halls; from the forum and the academy, and from the pulpit, flinging their crowns in the dust—"oh, the misery of it!" A young man dressed in the height of fashion stood leaning heavily against a lamp-post. He was evidently intoxicated. The passers-by laughed and pointed at him and a crowd soon gathered. A woman drove up in a superbly-appointed carriage, with coachman and footman on the box, and as she looked through the crowd and saw the reeling form upheld by the post she leaped from the carriage and rushed to his side, crying "Oh, my poor boy, my poor boy!" You can not represent the cost of such a cry by mathematical notation. Just such cries come every day, not only from the lips of mothers and fathers, but of wives and sisters; and not seldom, so it is said, from the lips of husbands and brothers.

What is the world doing for the weak brother? No man knows ordinarily just who he is or where he is. Who can tell of the thousands of graduates from our educational institutions this year, which of them 10 years from now will be sitting as weak or strong? "Do you know that superb looking man sitting opposite us?" said one of the guests at a public banquet. "Oh, yes," was the answer. "I know him, he is a very distinguished writer." "But do you know him well enough?" was the next question, "to take away his wine glasses?" "Oh, no," was the reply, "I do not know him well enough for that." "Then look out," said his friend, and before the dinner was over it was evident there was great need for everyone to look out. Nobody can remove the glass or the bottle of the dipsomaniac, but it is possible to make it difficult for him to procure alcohol in public places.

For the sake of just such weak brothers the strong have voluntarily surrendered their rights in 19 States of our Union. You could cross the continent, if you chose, on foot or in automobile, passing over our Long Bridge into Virginia and then on through Tennessee, Arkansas, Oklahoma, Kansas, Colorado, and, with the exception of a little corner of Wyoming, where you might get your feet or your wheels into the mire, you could push forward through Idaho to Oregon and up through the State of Washington to Puget Sound without having once seen a saloon, with the exception of those few hours spent in Wyoming.

Total abstinence is compulsory in our Army and Navy, in railways, and factories. It has been proven to be an industrial necessity. Nothing has yet been discovered which has so increased efficiency as total abstinence. Russia was the first nation to see this, and its eyes might never have been opened except for the war. The use of vodka was prohibited during the first year of the war, and, by petition of the peasants, the time limit has been removed by the Czar. The billion dollars lost in revenue were immediately repaid. Whatever may be the results of the war, Russia will win if she maintains prohibition. Germany has greatly restricted the use of beer, and England sees that her greatest enemy thundering at her gates, threatening her civilization, is not Germany but gin. King George has set the example of total abstinence. Alas, that the loudest protest against prohibition in England has been from the prelates!

Our Southern States, east of the Mississippi, are all dry except Florida. The strong men of the South have done this for the sake of the weak brother, who is black. May we not do as much for our weak brother, though he is white? If the bill now before Congress passes—and it is said if Congress has a chance to vote on it it will vote for it—the District of Columbia will fall in line with the 19 dry States.

Two-thirds of the District is already under practical prohibition. A navy yard, a war college, an Army post, a church, a school, a group of homes, are quite sufficient to expel saloons as silently and irresistibly as light expels darkness. Give the saloon all it asks and our churches and homes and schools will be wrecked as if a mine had exploded beneath them.

Prohibition is so practical that it is its own best advocate. States that have tried it recommend it to others that have not yet introduced it. The richest State per capita in our Union is not New York, but North Dakota. The State in which prosperity is most widely diffused is not Pennsylvania, but Kansas—both these States are dry. Colorado has lately made the venture of prohibition, encouraged by the experience of its neighbor, Kansas. Complete and irretrievable ruin was predicted, but the results have been quite the reverse. Deposits in the savings banks having increased, the sales of groceries and clothing in all the shops have doubled. Rents have been raised. The prosperity of Colorado was never so great as to-day. Only an infinitesimal minority would be willing to return to the licensed saloon. The inevitable results in the District of Columbia, supported on one hand by Virginia, and now, since last week, fortunately, on the other hand by Maryland, will be no less beneficial.

But the principle of prohibition, so it is said, is undemocratic. A man who is not only a lifelong Democrat but who was a Democrat before he was born, through his father and grandfather, said the other day, "Prohibition seems to me undemocratic. I have always been opposed to sumptuary laws of every sort. But if prohibition shall be found beneficial—and I am beginning to believe it has already been proved to be the best method of dealing with the liquor traffic—I will not lift my hand against it." We have high authority for asserting that prohibition is neither un-Democratic nor un-Republican. The United States Supreme Court has twice handed down opinions on this subject—in 1847 and again in 1887. The last decision states, "As it is a business attended with danger to the community, it may, as has already been said, be entirely prohibited." Our general assembly, the supreme court of the Presbyterian Church, has approved of the principle of prohibition in a long series of deliverances.

Our personal relation to the weak brother and the wine question may be not unlike Paul's. If there is a warm spot in our hearts for the weak brother; if we are touched with a feeling of his deficiencies; if we believe that the strong ought to bear the infirmities of the weak; if when he stumbles and falls we are hurt; if when he loses his way in the thick forests of life we involuntarily lift our voices to tell him where the path lies; if when he battles with the waves, though he may have gone out in a leaky boat, against our protest, we find it altogether impossible to stand on the shore content with merely wringing our hands and crying for help, but are pulled into the waves by his desperate need—then we shall feel with Paul, that there are times when our own pleasure and profit must be sacrificed for the weak brother's safety and for the salvation of his soul.

Mr. JONES. Now, Mr. President, I think I will say a few words in reference to a nomination which has been made to the Senate, and I think I can say them with propriety in the open session. A gentleman by the name of Cummings has been nominated to fill the place made vacant by the rejection of the nomination of Gen. Smith. I do not know anything about Mr. Cummings. I hope he is a high-class man. I had hoped, however, that in the filling of this board again we would secure men not fanatics, not men who would execute the law in a fanatical way, but men who would have due regard to the letter and the spirit of the excise law which they are to enforce. If Mr. Cummings is the kind of man who will do that, then, all right; I am for his confirmation. The senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] is very anxious for his confirmation, and I want to say, in order that his constituency may know it and that Mr. Cummings may know it, that the Senator from Maryland is doing everything in his power to secure the confirmation of Mr. Cummings. He has even polled the committee and secured more than a majority of the committee indorsing his nomination. But, Mr. President, I want to say that matters have been brought to my attention which, if true, show that Mr. Cummings is absolutely and wholly unfit for the position, and if I can prevent his confirmation until these things are investigated I propose to do so. If they are investigated and nothing found to be in them, no one will more quickly respond to the request for his confirmation than will I. I simply wanted to say this in justice to the Senator from Maryland, who has a splendid letter in behalf of Mr. Cummings from the superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League at Baltimore, commending Mr. Cummings very highly, written to either him or Mr. Cummings. Whether the superintendent knows about the suggestions that have been made concerning Mr. Cummings, I do not know. I will not say anything about what they are here and now, because it would not be proper. There may be absolutely nothing to them, and I hope this is the case; they may be unjust charges against Mr. Cummings; but, in justice to the Senate and in justice to the proper administration of the excise law, we should be given ample time to investigate these charges, and I propose to insist upon ample time for their investigation before he is confirmed. I hope there is nothing to the charges. I hope that the letter commending Mr. Cummings, from the superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League of Baltimore, is entirely and fully justified. I trust that that will develop; but I do say that we ought to have an abundance of time to see whether or not the charges are correct. We do not want any more appointees like the past and no continuance of the present disgraceful administration of the excise law. That is all I have to say.

APPENDIX.

REPORT OF THE SPECIAL COMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE THE CONDUCT OF THE EXCISE BOARD OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

To the Senate of the United States:

We, the committee appointed by the President of the Senate to investigate the conduct of the excise board in the administration of the excise law of the District of Columbia, respectfully report as follows:

The resolution authorizing this committee was passed in the following terms:

Senate resolution 522.

"Resolved, That the special committee appointed by the President of the Senate to investigate the conduct of the excise board is hereby further authorized to investigate fully in the manner in which the excise law, so called, is being administered in the District of Columbia, and said committee is hereby authorized to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, to compel the attendance of witnesses, to employ stenographers to report such hearings as may be had at a rate not to exceed $1 per printed page. The expense of such hearings shall be paid out of the contingent expenses of the Senate, upon vouchers to be approved by the chairman of the said special committee. The said committee is also authorized to sit during the sessions of the Senate."

We have examined many witnesses and submit herewith a transcript of the evidence we have taken.

We have also made personal investigations of various premises in controversy.

1. We find that the present excise board was appointed to administer what is commonly known as the Jones-Works excise liquor law of the District of Columbia, which became effective July 1, 1913, and that said board was originally composed of Joseph C. Sheehy, chairman; Robert G. Smith, and Henry S. Baker. Mr. Sheehy resigned from the board early in 1914 and was succeeded as chairman by Mr. Robert G. Smith, who remains chairman. Cetter T. Bride was appointed to the vacancy thus occasioned and is now a member of the board.

2. We find that the excise board in administering the excise law has adopted certain rules which in many instances change the substance and letter of the law.

(a) The law as to hotels is as follows:

"Hereafter no license shall be issued to a hotel having less than 50 bedrooms for guests, nor to any hotel the character of which, or the character of the proprietor or manager of which, is shown to be objectionable to said board."

The rule adopted by the board in the administration of this clause of the law is as follows:

"Sec. 2. No license shall be issued to a hotel, as such, having less than 50 bedrooms for guests."

As the result of this unauthorized change of the law by the board, several hotels with less than 50 bedrooms for guests have been granted licenses for the sale of intoxicating liquors. The board granted these hotels licenses under the name of restaurants. The fact remains, however, that they are licensed as hotels by the District Government, and are not entitled to liquor licenses under the true spirit and purpose of the law.

(b) The law provides:

"That no license shall be granted for any saloon or barroom on any side of any square, block, or tract of land where less than 50 per cent of the foot frontage, not including saloons or hotels and clubs having barroom licenses under this section, is used for business purposes."

In this connection the board adopted the following rule:

"Sec. 6. Beginning November 1, 1914, no barroom license shall be granted on any side of a street where less than 50 per cent of the foot frontage between intersecting streets, excluding the part of buildings wherein barroom licenses are held, is used for business purposes: Provided, That this restriction shall not apply to hotels and clubs."

This proviso is not in the law and is wholly unauthorized. Under it, however, the board has licensed a number of hotels and clubs on sides of squares or blocks with less than 50 per cent of the foot frontage used for business purposes.

Licenses for barrooms have been given to hotels or clubs where the hotel or club is the only business on the side of the square in which the same is located and where the district is wholly residential.

(c) The law provides:

"That no minor under the age of 18 years shall be allowed to enter or be permitted to remain in any place where intoxicating liquors are sold, other than a hotel, restaurant, or club."

The rule of the board on this subject is as follows:

"Sec. 18. Minors under the age of 18 may enter a wholesale liquor store in a case where the licensee also sells merchandise other than intoxicating liquors, and where the intoxicating liquors are carried in stock and sold in a section of the store set apart for that purpose by a railing: Provided, That no minor under the age of 18 shall be permitted to enter the place so set apart: And provided further, That no intoxicating liquors shall be sold, given away, or in any way disposed of to a minor."

This rule permits minors to enter stores where intoxicating liquors are sold, contrary to the express provision and real intent of the law.

(d) The law provides:

"No licensee under this section shall sell, give away, or dispense any intoxicating liquors to any person between the hours of 1 o'clock a. m. and 7 o'clock a. m., nor on Sundays or Inauguration Day; and between said hours, and on Sundays, and Inauguration Day every barroom or other place where intoxicating liquors are sold shall be kept closed."

The rule of the board is as follows:

Sec. 18 (a). For the purpose of cleaning up and doing other necessary work licensed premises may be entered or occupied by licensees and their regular employees between 6.45 o'clock a. m. and 7 o'clock a. m., except on Sundays and Inauguration Day, and between the hours of 10 o'clock a. m. and 12 o'clock noon on Sundays and Inauguration Day: Provided, That neither said licensees nor their employees shall drink, sell, give away, or dispense any intoxicating liquors during the times mentioned."

Members of your committee saw a number of individuals in several saloons during the two-hour Sunday period permitted by the board for cleaning-up purposes, and in several saloons during this time saw men who were apparently bartenders, dressed as if for dispensing liquors, and from one saloon came two or three young men dressed in business clothes.

(c) In section 20 (b) of the rules the board has added what is in effect a complete new section of the law, as follows:

"Sec. 20 (b). Except in case of the death of a licensee any person or persons duly authorized by the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia may, with the consent in writing of the excise board, conduct the business of a licensee for a period of not exceeding 60 days. In such cases posting of the licensed premises shall not be required."

This gives express authority for receivers, trustees, and other representatives of licensees appointed by the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia to conduct the business of a licensee, for which no provision whatever is made in the excise law.

3. The law places the maximum limit upon the number of barroom licenses at 300, but it gives to the excise board the discretion to license any smaller number it may see fit to permit. The board has not exercised its discretion for a smaller number. The testimony shows that it is the intention of the board to keep the number at 300, thereby adopting the construction most favorable to the saloons.

4. The law provides:

"Nor shall any barroom licensee establish more than one bar under his license."

This provision has been violated in two instances by permitting the operation of double bars under a single license—one at the corner of Fourteenth Street and Rhode Island Avenue and another at the corner of Fourteenth and U Streets.

By the operation of a double bar we mean that in each case the bar was extended into two separate rooms by making about a 10-foot opening between the rooms and running the bar through the opening and on both sides of the partition separating the rooms.

5. The law also provides:

"Nor provide or permit to be used more than one entrance to said barroom from the street * * * unless the excise board shall especially permit an extra entrance."

This provision clearly means that no more than one entrance shall be provided unless some special condition or reason warrants it; and naturally the board would be expected to grant but few such permits. According to the report of the board, out of 39 applications for extra entrances 38 were granted and only 1 refused.

6. The law also provides that:

"No saloon, barroom, or wholesale liquor business shall be licensed west of the western line of the fire limits as now established."

Between the time of the passage of the law and the time it was to go into effect the Commissioners of the District of Columbia so changed the fire limits as to bring two saloons from prohibited territory into license territory; and the territory changed was so small as to raise the unavoidable presumption that it was made for the special purpose of keeping the saloons within the license limits.

Protests were filed with the board against the granting of the licenses to the saloons thus brought within license limits, and the conditions were fully disclosed. Although it had the discretion to refuse these licenses, even though the location might be outside the prohibited zone, and although a plain attempt had been made to nullify the positive provision of the law, the board granted the licenses.

7. The law provides:

"Not more than three saloons or barrooms, other than in hotels or clubs, shall be permitted upon one side of a street between intersecting streets."

Contrary to this provision of the law, four saloons are now permitted to operate on E Street between Thirteenth and Fourteenth Streets NW., one of the principal business sections of the city. The saloon on the corner of Fourteenth and E Streets, opposite the New Willard Hotel, which is owned by Miller Bros., had been refused a license while its entrance was on E Street because there were three other saloons located on that side of the block. License was then applied for by Miller Bros. as fronting on Fourteenth Street, and the license was granted. Immediately the window fronting on Fourteenth Street was broken out, made into a door, the entrance on E Street was closed, and the board licensed the saloon, although its location was exactly where it was before.

8. The law provides:

"No saloon, barroom, or other place where intoxicating liquor is sold at retail shall be licensed, allowed, or maintained within 300 feet of any alleyway occupied for residence or of places commonly called slums, except upon the unanimous vote of all three members of said excise board."

The plain purpose of this provision was to remove barrooms a reasonable distance, at least, from these places and protect to that extent the poor people living in them from the baneful influences of saloons. The board has apparently disregarded this purpose. It has granted licenses in practically every instance where applied for within 300 feet of these places, and there are instances where there are three or four or more barrooms located within 300 feet of a single alley.

9. The law provides:

"No saloon, barroom, or other place wherein intoxicating liquor is sold at retail or wholesale, other than hotels and clubs, shall be licensed, allowed, or maintained within 400 feet of any public schoolhouse or a now located or established college or university or within 400 feet of any now established house of religious worship, measured between the nearest entrances to each by the shortest course of travel between such places of business and such public schoolhouse, college, or university, or established house of religious worship."

The board has construed the language "measured between the nearest entrances to each by the shortest course of travel" to mean a square-cornered or right-angled measurement; that is, having in many instances, where saloons are located within 400 feet of schools or places of religious worship by the shortest course of travel which pedestrians would naturally and conveniently take, resorted to the square-cornered measurement, thereby permitting the saloon to operate. However, in several instances, even by the square-cornered measurement, the saloons are located within the prohibited distance, particularly Graff's saloon, No. 222 Seventh Street SE, where by square-cornered measurement, even around a parking which he himself constructed evidently for the purpose of making the distance farther, the saloon is still within 400 feet of the Eastern High School.

Also at Schriener's place, 730 Fourteenth Street NW, which by square-cornered or other measurements is located within 400 feet of the New York Avenue Presbyterian Church. In one instance, at Mergner's place, No. 415 East Capitol Street, an iron fence was permitted to be constructed across a sidewalk close to the building in order to throw the measurement and course of travel around the parking to make the distance more than 400 feet from a public school at No. 25 Fifth Street SE.

Several other barrooms have been granted licenses within 400 feet of public schoolhouses, churches, and colleges.

We submit herewith plats (see p. 393) made at our request by the District surveyor, giving the measurements at the above and other places, and showing the distances between saloons and churches, schoolhouses, and colleges by the shortest course of travel to be in many instances less than 400 feet.

10. In this connection attention is called to the fact that wherever a building is not used exclusively for religious or school purposes the board contends that it is not a house of religious worship or a school or college within the meaning of the excise law. It has, therefore, in several instances permitted saloons to be operated within 400 feet of buildings where large schools are conducted, or where large congregations carry on religious worship.

11. We direct attention to that clause of the law which requires that no license shall be granted any hotel the character of which, or the character of the proprietor or manager of which, is shown to said board to be objectionable.

The most notable instance of a violation of this clause is as follows: The proprietor of the Grand Hotel, which occupies Government premises, was granted a license notwithstanding he had been convicted of dispensing liquor to a minor girl, and his license formerly canceled, and notwithstanding it was shown he had organized a corporation which he controlled and in the name of which he was applying for a license, and that a strong report was made against him by the police. At the hearings conducted by the board on the question of giving him a renewal of license in October, 1914, the police report was as follows:

"The manager, Edward L. Gardiner, conducts a garden in the basement of this hotel, where they have music and singing. Dancing is allowed on a platform set aside for that purpose. This is a resort for street walkers and women of questionable character, and the result is a meeting place for men and women. In my opinion these conditions are objectionable, in connection with a bar, and should be eliminated."

This police report was signed by J. L. Sprinkle, acting captain first precinct.

This testimony was corroborated by Sergt. Catts, of the vice squad of the District police, both at the hearings before the excise board on the question of renewing Gardiner's license and before our committee.

It also developed in the testimony before our committee that cases are now pending against the proprietor of this hotel, Gardiner, for selling liquor to a minor.

The testimony before this committee also shows that other hotels were granted licenses which had been conducted in a disreputable manner.

12. The excise board has refused licenses to properly conducted barrooms and has granted them to disreputable places in the same neighborhood, over strong protests. A saloon on the north side of Pennsylvania Avenue had been carried on for many years by Mr. Hurdle. No complaint had been made against him. He was refused a license, or transfer of a license, and across the street, the Philadelphia House, which was clearly shown by the testimony before us to be a most disgraceful and disreputable resort, was granted a license. The testimony showed that the Philadelphia House is a place of resort for colored prostitutes and for men and women of questionable character.

13. The law also provides:

"That the personal representative of any deceased licensee may within 30 days after the death of such licensee transfer said license in accordance with the provisions of this law touching transfers of licenses."

In violation of this provision the board permitted Mrs. Gordon to operate the bar of her husband long after his death, although the attention of the board was called to the violation of the law, and they did not act to prevent such violation until pressure was brought upon them through one of the District Commissioners, and although the corporation counsel had rendered an opinion that the bar was being operated contrary to the law.

14. The law provides:

"That the interior of every barroom shall at all times when selling is prohibited be exposed to full view from the street, without obstruction by screens, blinds, curtains, stained glass, bottles, boxes, signs, or other material, except in the case of clubs licensed under this section and hotels having only an interior barroom, which shall be exposed to full view from the corridors or passageways leading to the entrance or entrances to such barroom."

The committee found on a tour of personal observation that but little attention is paid to this provision of the law. Glass doors and windows are stained and are obstructed by curtains, partitions are frequently erected across the barroom a short distance from the entrance, and the only compliance with this provision of the law in most cases was the drawing aside for just a short distance of one curtain.

15. The law provides:

"PAR. 3. That the said board shall appoint a clerk at a salary of $1,500 per annum, and an inspector with police powers at a salary of $1,500 per annum. Said inspector shall make inspections as may be required by this section, under the orders of the board, and make full report of such inspections to the board. He shall wear a badge indicating that he is such inspector of the excise board."

Instead of appointing an inspector and requiring him, as contemplated by the law, to inspect places of license holders, the board appointed a stenographer under the name of inspector, who does the stenographic work of the board and makes a stenographic record of the proceedings before the board, and his principal time is occupied by clerical work. He inspected only 130 places prior to November 14, 1914, and has made no inspections whatever since that time. This official testified before our committee that no orders or instructions regarding inspections had been given him by the board, but that he has been made simply a clerk or stenographer.

Licenses have been granted for barrooms on the sides of a square or block where there is no other substantial business, and in many cases where it is evident that there is not 50 per cent of the frontage used for business purposes. Plain violations of this provision have been permitted by allowing the saloon entrances to be changed from one side of the square to another side of the square without any change in the saloon itself or its location.

In some instances it is apparent that buildings of a very unsubstantial character have been constructed for the purpose of making business frontage in order to secure a barroom license, and the board has apparently approved such action by granting the license.

A frontage occupied by a board fence, with a business sign on top but with the ground occupied only by brick or tiling or boards or old barrels, or not occupied at all, has plainly been counted as frontage used for business purposes in order to grant a barroom license.

16. We regard it as significant of the attitude of the board that it has not exercised its discretion in favor of the schools as against the saloons by refusing licenses to saloons which may be located only a few feet beyond the 400-foot limit. The actual distance between the Polk School and the McKinley Manual Training School is 838.5 feet. Just across P Street from the Polk School is the saloon located in the Hotel Thyson. In the case of this hotel it is apparent that additional rooms were constructed in an attempt to comply with the law, and the board granted a license notwithstanding the fact that it was just across the street from a public school. The Hotel Thyson bar fronts on Seventh Street, and can not be distinguished from an ordinary separate bar.

Farther along the block, on the same side of the street with the Thyson Hotel, is the Murray saloon, only 402.6 feet from the entrance to the Polk School and 435.9 feet from the south door of the McKinley Manual Training School. Immediately opposite Murray's, on the other side of Seventh Street, are two other barrooms. In other words, within approximately 400 feet of these large schools are four saloons. This is a clear case of the exercise of a discretion in the interests of the saloons and against the schools. The same condition prevails in a number of cases as to churches.

17. It should be stated that in practically all instances where the board has issued licenses to saloons under circumstances that constituted a violation or evasion of the true purpose or spirit of the law all phases of the situation were brought fully to the attention of the board through numerous protests and representations of citizens before the issuance of the license.

18. The committee finds no evidence of corruption or venality on the part of any member of the board, and believes that each member should be exonerated from any charge or imputation of this character. The committee believes, however, that a careful and dispassionate review of the evidence before us as to the conduct of the board in the administration of the excise law shows that it has disregarded the underlying purpose of the law; that it has nullified its most beneficial features; and that it has encouraged and approved plain evasions and perversions of the law. It is the judgment of the committee that the board has resolved practically every doubt as to law or fact in the interest of the saloons. It has shown no proper comprehension of its duties in the execution of a law framed in the interest of morality and good government. The policy of the board in fostering the liquor traffic to the fullest extent permitted by the law, and in many instances at the expense of both its spirit and its letter, is fraught with increasing danger to the health, peace, and morals of the people of the District of Columbia.

Dated at the city of Washington, in the District of Columbia, March 4, 1915.

MORRIS SHEPPARD.
WM. H. THOMPSON.
WM. P. DILLINGHAM.
W. L. JONES.

STATEMENT OF SENATOR HUGHES.

Because of a death in my family I was unable to be present at the hearings of the committee at which the testimony was taken. Therefore I feel that in justice to the excise board, the members of which I believe to be upright, honorable men, I should not give my approval to the report of the majority.

WM. HUGHES.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Mr. President, in reference to the Senator's remarks about Mr. Cummings, I wish to say that, so far as my personal knowledge of the gentleman is concerned, I believe he will carry out in good faith the letter and the spirit of the excise law. I believe he is recognized as a man of strong intelligence, and I believe that he recognizes that that is the proper way to conduct the affairs of the office, and that he will carry out the purposes and intent of the law.

The letter in regard to Mr. Cummings, referred to by the Senator from Washington in his remarks, is a very strong one from Superintendent Hare. I think that Mr. Hare has had an opportunity to know this man probably as well as anybody else connected with the Anti-Saloon League. I shall not present the letter now, but it is a letter of the strongest character, by a man from the same State as Mr. Cummings, a man who has had every opportunity to know what Mr. Cummings has done in the past in regard to such matters.

So far as time is concerned, it has been nearly three weeks now since this nomination was sent to the Senate, and I have heard of no objection to Mr. Cummings from any source in any particular.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I want merely to observe that the same reasons which prompted the Senate to reject the nomination of Gen. Smith apply with equal force to the nomination of Mr. Baker. His conduct in the administration of the Excise Board was exactly the same as that of Gen. Smith. The Senate can not confirm Mr. Baker and at the same time adhere to its action in rejecting Gen. Smith, without stultifying itself.

If it should confirm Mr. Baker, then it ought, as the Senator from Washington has said, apologize to Gen. Smith and ask for his reinstatement.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I will say, Mr. President, that I was not speaking with regard to Mr. Baker. My remarks were in regard to a citizen of my own State.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I understand that perfectly, and I spoke not in answer to the Senator from Maryland, but merely to confirm the remarks of the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] in relation to Gen. Smith and Mr. Baker.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Mr. President, in view of the statement of the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] concerning Mr. Cummings, who is a citizen of my State, knowing him as I do and believing that he will carry out the provisions of the excise law, I felt that it was my duty to defend him and to call attention to the letter to which I have referred, showing that he has been backed by the Anti-Saloon League superintendent of the State of Maryland.

IMMIGRATION.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington. Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I move that the District of Columbia appropriation bill be laid aside and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 10384, being the immigration bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the Senator had better not make that motion. The chairman of the committee has that matter in charge, and I understand will ask that the District of Columbia bill be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. What is the motion of the Senator from Washington?

Mr. POINDEXTER. To temporarily lay aside the District of Columbia appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will say to the Senator from Washington that that properly is the function of the Senator in charge of the bill.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. For what purpose does the Senator ask that the District bill be laid aside?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I did not catch the observation of the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair observed that it was more properly the function of the Senator in charge of the bill to request that it be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Undoubtedly, if the chairman of the committee is disposed to do that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands he is.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. For what purpose does the Senator from Washington make the request?

Mr. POINDEXTER. For the purpose of moving the consideration of other business, namely, the consideration of the immigration bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, a great many Senators are absent to-day who desired to be present when the further consideration of the District of Columbia appropriation bill was had, and I will ask the Senator in charge of the bill to lay it aside for the day.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Mr. President, the Senator from Georgia asked the privilege this morning of taking up another bill.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I desire to say to the Senator from Washington that it had been pretty well arranged among a number of us to give an opportunity for the consideration of the vocational education bill this afternoon, which is Senate bill 703. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE] has already discussed it, and I believe if we are allowed to take it up at this time we can dispose of it in a little over an hour. Probably we have not a quorum present. The suggestion of the Senator from Washington undoubtedly would result in the call for a quorum, and I think we will have an opportunity to pass the vocational education bill, in which nearly every Senator is interested.

Mr. President, I ask the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia to consent that the District appropriation bill be temporarily laid aside in order that we take up Senate bill 703.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The trouble is that the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] has obtained the floor. The Chair desires to assure the Senator from Washington that, so far as such matters can be understood, the Chair thinks it was understood that at the conclusion of the speech of the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] the Senator from Maryland would move to lay aside the District appropriation bill, and, as the vocational education bill would probably not necessitate a roll call, the Senator from Georgia had intended to ask for the consideration of that measure by the Senate; but the Senator from Washington has obtained the floor, and, of course, is entitled to proceed.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Certainly.

Mr. GRONNA. I trust the Senator from Washington will let us take up the vocational education bill. We all know how diligently the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE] has worked to get that bill through, and I do not believe there is any opposition to it in the Senate. Furthermore, I do not believe that it will take to exceed an hour to pass it, and I therefore ask the Senator from Washington to yield to the request of the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, it is true that when you [Mr. CLAPP in the chair] were not in the chair I obtained the floor this morning, and was on the point of making the motion when I yielded to the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], who desired to proceed with his remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that when he took the chair it was understood, so far as such a matter could be understood, that at the conclusion of the speech of the senior Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] a request would be made to lay aside the pending bill, and then the Senator from Georgia expected to be recognized.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I will say to the Senator that the Senator from Georgia this morning got up on the floor and made a request concerning the vocational education bill.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I had the floor and would have proceeded this morning, but yielded because the Senator from Washington wanted to speak before the District appropriation bill was laid aside.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I appreciate that entirely, and do not want, of course, to interfere unnecessarily with any arrangement that has been made. Of course everyone is familiar with the importance of the immigration bill, the public interest that there is in it, and also familiar with the difficulty that there is of getting the matter presented to the Senate for a vote. That is all I want. If the Senate desires to vote it down, it will not take very long to do that; and if it votes the other way, it equally would not take very long. I am satisfied that it will lead to no debate. Every Senator has long ago come to a conclusion as to how he will vote on the immigration bill, and it can be disposed of in a very short time. I insist upon my motion.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Mr. President, so far as I am personally concerned, I should feel, if I had any say in the matter, that it would be my duty to yield to the taking up of the bill suggested by the Senator from Georgia, as he had previously referred to it this morning. However, it is a matter for the Senate, and I am willing to abide by its determination.

Mr. JONES. That is a matter for the Senate to determine.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I stated that, and appreciate it. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The status of the matter is this: The Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] rose and was recognized. There was no haste or anything of that sort in connection with the proceeding, and he has the floor.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Upon my motion, I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Mr. President, I have not agreed as yet to let go by default or to lay aside temporarily the District of Columbia appropriation bill.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum is suggested. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bankhead	Hollis	Martin, Va.	Smith, Ga.
Chamberlain	Hughes	Martine, N. J.	Smith, Md.
Chilton	Husting	Nelson	Smith, S. C.
Clapp	James	Overman	Stone
Clarke, Ark.	Johnson, S. Dak.	Page	Taggart
Curtis	Jones	Phelan	Thomas
Fletcher	Kenyon	Poinexter	Tillman
Gallinger	Kern	Pomerene	Vardaman
Gronna	Lee, Md.	Sheppard
Hardwick	Lewis	Sherman
Hitchcock	McLean	Smith, Ariz.

Mr. THOMAS. I again announce the necessary absence from the city of my colleague [Mr. SHAFROTH]. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. HOLLIS. I desire to announce that the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] is absent on official business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-one Senators have answered to the roll call. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the names of the absentees.

The Secretary called the names of absent Senators, and Mr. BROUSSARD, Mr. DILLINGHAM, Mr. LA FOLLETTE, Mr. LANE, Mr. NORRIS, Mr. RANDELL, Mr. ROBINSON, Mr. SIMMONS, Mr. UNDERWOOD, and Mr. WILLIAMS answered to their names when called.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-one Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Washington that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 10384, an act to regulate the immigration of aliens to, and the residence of aliens in, the United States.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Mr. President, I hope that motion will not prevail. We have up this bill, which has been here for several days, and I am unwilling to lay it aside. I hope the Senators will keep the bill before the Senate until it is passed.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, is that motion debatable?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair assumes that it is; yes.

Mr. STONE. I should like to say just a word or two.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. STONE. I do.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I want to say that I have never yet consented that this bill be laid aside, and it has been continuously before the Senate all the morning.

Mr. STONE. But the motion now is to take up another bill, and if it is agreed to it would displace the District bill.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. It would.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I shall not keep the Senate more than a few minutes.

I had something to say a bit ago about the waste of time, about making political speeches and endeavoring to promote political ends here, and that it all resulted in a mere waste of the time of the Senate without promoting any end Senators engaging in such things seemed to think they might promote. I will not repeat what I said then, although there are twice as many Senators present now as were present when I made that speech a half an hour ago.

I want to say this, Mr. President, in addition to what I said then, and as an addendum, for I forgot to say it then: I have had my heart, or stomach, or mentality [laughter], or some part of me, or all of me, full to overflowing with political speeches that I have been anxious to unload. Personally, I have been impressed with the perhaps vain notion that these speeches have merit in them, and might be of some value to the Democratic Party.

Mr. President, in my time here I have thrown aside a number of speeches.

Mr. OVERMAN (in his seat). Good!

Mr. STONE. It was good, Senator. If I had not, on reflection, thought it was good, I would not have thrown them aside. I have thrown into the wastebasket speeches that I have labored upon in preparing. I have some speeches in my stomach now, or in my heart, or in my mind—I am uncertain just where they are—that it is hard for me to suppress. I should like to come over here on the Republican side and shake my clenched fist into your faces and tell you some things you ought to be told.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Come on.

Mr. STONE. No; I am not coming; but I would like to.

Mr. NELSON. "Lay on, Macduff!" [Laughter.]

Mr. STONE. No; I will not say "Lay on," for I know my friend from Minnesota would retort—

Damn'd be him that first cries, "Hold, enough!"

[Laughter.]

And that is the trouble about this situation. Such things lead on and on to endless struggle. We do not get anywhere.

Mr. President, if I believed that the speeches that I have incubating would be taken up by these men up there in the press gallery and exploited before the millions of men and women who read their papers, I doubt if there is any power in the Senate or outside that could keep me from delivering them. I would sure make them. But, as it is, I know what would happen if I made them. If these newsmen said anything about them at all, they would have the good judgment, the discriminating taste, to confine their observations to a space about as long as my index finger. That is true of all of us, and we all know it. Then, what are you making these speeches for? These men there in the press gallery are not going to scatter your utterances broadcast, and nobody else is going to do it. That is the common experience of statesmen here, and therefore I ask what are you killing all this time for, talking only to empty benches and to a few good men and women in the gallery who are visiting the Capital and who drop in here to look upon the Senate and go away—with what sort of an impression I do not know? We are killing time, Mr. President; valuable time. The Senator from Washington is now bringing up a question he knows he is bringing up purely for political reasons—the immigration bill. Well, he can make speeches, and good ones, too—strong, intelligent, and forceful speeches—

Mr. WILLIAMS (in his seat). And long.

Mr. STONE. And long, my friend says.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona (in his seat). And loud.

Mr. STONE. And loud, another Senator says.

SEVERAL SENATORS. And good.

Mr. STONE. Yes; he does all that; and he will kill one, two, three, four hours of the time of the Senate in the making. I ask the representatives of the press gallery to mark this, and will you please record it? Before the Senator has spoken 10 minutes, ordinarily, there will not be over a half dozen Members of the Senate present. Will you newsmen say that?

Senators will disappear, not because they do not appreciate the Senator, but because they understand his purpose and are not interested. Perhaps I ought not to have said that, because some of my Republican friends may stay against their will, as a sort of forced compliment, and I would now myself like to stay after having said this, as a compliment, only I have an engagement that will necessarily take me away. Mr. President, the Democratic Party is in the majority here, and it must assume responsibility. The Democratic Party is not going to agree to the motion of the Senator, and he knows it, to take up the immigration bill at this time and displace the District appropriation bill. What, then, does he make the motion for? Evidently he thinks he is making some sort of politics to be used out in Washington, or that somebody else can use somewhere else. He can say, "Here is the Record, my fellow citizens. Here is a motion I made, and the Democratic Party in the Senate voted it down. What do you think of that?" And he will roar out there like he roars here [laughter], as eloquently, as forcibly, as engagingly, and as beguilingly as he does here.

Mr. President, we know this is pure, simple, undiluted politics, and every man of us knows we are wasting time. For one I would like to get along with the business of the Senate. If the Senator from Washington would just make his motion and let us vote on it without that long speech he is fixing to make, and thus dispose of this matter—if we could do that and go on, the Senator would still have the benefit of his politics.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I will agree to that, Mr. President.

Mr. STONE. On that assurance, I quit. Let us vote.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I think it is my duty as chairman of the committee just to state to the Senate that I have not lost my zeal for this bill or my interest in it, nor do I think any of my colleagues on this side or on that side have; and I want to assure them, so far as I am concerned as chairman of the committee, that whatever can be done to facilitate the passage of this bill I shall certainly do. Of course, I reserve to myself the right, at the proper time and at the proper place, being charged with this duty as chairman in a way, to give the Senate an opportunity to say whether or not they are going to pass this bill; and I think I might go further and say they will have that opportunity at this session.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I do.

Mr. BORAH. Did I understand the Senator to say that he felt that we would have an opportunity to vote on the bill at this session?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I do.

Mr. BORAH. Of course, Mr. President, if I could be reasonably certain of that matter it would control my action in regard to another matter. I know that the Senator believes in the bill, and would like to see it passed; and if the Senator feels reasonably assured that we will be given an opportunity, it will certainly have much to do with my course with regard to another procedure.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. In reply to the Senator, I will state that so far as the Senator who has charge of the bill from the standpoint of committee work is concerned, he will use every means within his power to give the Senator from Idaho that opportunity.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 10384, to regulate the immigration of aliens to, and the residence of aliens in, the United States.

Mr. POINDEXTER. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I move that the motion be laid on the table.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Upon that motion I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. The motion is to displace the District of Columbia appropriation bill and to take up the immigration bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Washington moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 10384. The Senator from Maryland moves to lay the motion on the table. On that the Senator from Washington requests the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHILTON (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. GRONNA (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Maine [Mr. JOHNSON]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. HOLLIS (when his name was called). I announce my pair with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. OVERMAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. REED (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] to the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. STONE (when his name was called). I have a standing pair with the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK]. For the present, at least, I withhold my vote, as I do not see that Senator in the Chamber.

Mr. THOMAS (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER] to the junior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] to the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. UNDERWOOD (when his name was called). I desire to inquire whether or not the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I have a general pair with that Senator, and in his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. VARDAMAN (when his name was called). I desire to inquire whether or not the junior Senator from Idaho [Mr. BRADY] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I have a pair with that Senator. Being unable to secure a transfer, I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER]. In his absence, I withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I would vote "yea."

Mr. BECKHAM. Has the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT] voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. BECKHAM. I have a general pair with that Senator. In his absence, I withhold my vote.

Mr. THOMAS (after having voted in the affirmative). I understand that a transfer to the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] was made before my transfer to that Senator. I therefore make the transfer to my colleague [Mr. SHAFROTH] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia (after having voted in the affirmative). I will state that I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. I was told that I could transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE], which I now do, and let my vote stand.

Mr. LIPPITT. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] to the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] and vote "nay."

Mr. McLEAN (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS]. In his absence I withdraw my vote.

Mr. JAMES. I desire to ask if the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] has voted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. JAMES. I have a general pair with that Senator, and in his absence withhold my vote.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I wish to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COIT] with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY];

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CATRON] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN]; and

The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE] with the Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND].

Mr. WILLIAMS (after having voted in the affirmative). I understand that the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] has not voted. I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania to the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] and permit my vote to stand.

Mr. REED (after having voted in the affirmative). In voting "yea" I transferred, or undertook to transfer, my pair with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] to the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS]. I learned since voting that the Senator from Montana is paired, and therefore I could not transfer to him. I have been unable to get a transfer, and hence I am obliged to withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 35, nays 17, as follows:

YEAS—35.

Bankhead	Johnson, S. Dak.	Pittman	Smith, Md.
Broussard	Kern	Pomerene	Smith, S. C.
Bryan	Lane	Ransdell	Swanson
Fletcher	Lee, Md.	Robinson	Taggart
Hardwick	Lewis	Sheppard	Thomas
Hitchcock	Martin, Va.	Shields	Thompson
Hollis	Martine, N. J.	Simmons	Tillman
Hughes	Newlands	Smith, Ariz.	Williams
Husting	Phelan	Smith, Ga.

NAYS—17.

Borah	Gronna	Nelson	Townsend
Clapp	Jones	Norris	Works
Curtis	Kenyon	Page
Dillingham	La Follette	Poin Dexter
Gallinger	Lippitt	Sherman

NOT VOTING—43.

Ashurst	Cummins	McLean	Smoot
Beckham	du Pont	Myers	Sterling
Brady	Fall	O'Gorman	Stone
Brandeggee	Goff	Oliver	Sutherland
Catron	Gore	Overman	Underwood
Chamberlain	Harding	Owen	Vardaman
Chilton	James	Penrose	Wadsworth
Clark, Wyo.	Johnson, Me.	Reed	Waish
Clarke, Ark.	Lea, Tenn.	Saulsbury	Warren
Colt	Lodge	Shafrath	Weeks
Culberson	McCumber	Smith, Mich.

So Mr. POINDEXTER's motion was laid on the table.

VOCATIONAL EDUCATION.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I had hoped at this time that we might be given an hour in which, with the aid of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE], we would be able to complete our presentation of Senate bill 703, providing for national aid to vocational education, and to bring that bill to a vote.

We have given a great deal of time at this session to preparation for war. We might well give some preparation for peace and to the better preparation of our girls and boys for the struggles of life, for its joys and its trials. We well might present the fact that even in case of war more men and women would be required at home to prepare the instruments of war and to prepare the food and clothing for the soldier than those who would be required to be in the front. They should be prepared for their duties in war and in peace.

ORIGIN OF THE BILL.

The bill which we have presented to the Senate is largely the work of a Commission on National Aid to Vocational Education which was created by act of Congress approved January 20, 1914.

Pursuant to this act the President appointed, in addition to Senator PAGE and myself, Representatives HUGHES, of Georgia, and FESS, of Ohio; John A. Lapp, director Indiana Bureau of Legislative Information, Indianapolis, Ind., secretary of Indiana Commission on Industrial Agricultural Education, 1912; Miss Florence M. Marshall, director Manhattan Trade School, New York City, member of Massachusetts Factory Inspection Commission, 1910; Miss Agnes Nestor, president International Glove Workers' Union, Chicago, Ill., member committee on industrial education, American Federation of Labor; Charles A. Prosser, secretary National Society for the Promotion of Industrial Education, New York City; and Charles H. Winslow, special agent, Bureau of Labor Statistics, Washington, D. C., member of Massachusetts Commission on Industrial Education, 1906-1909.

The work of the commission, consisting of the bill, the report, and the testimony, will be found in two volumes, printed as House documents of the Sixty-third Congress, second session.

The plan of the bill is through capable leadership and some contribution to promote vocational instruction throughout the States. It in no sense is contemplated that the final responsibility for the work shall be removed from State authorities.

APPROPRIATIONS.

The appropriations are divided into four heads:

First. For the salaries of teachers, supervisors, and directors of agriculture.

Second. For the salaries of teachers of trade and industrial subjects.

Third. For the training of teachers of agricultural, trade and industrial, and home economic subjects.

Fourth. For the work of the Federal board for vocational education. The funds are to be used by the Federal board for vocational education to administer the grants to the States and to furnish information and give stimulus to vocational education.

The appropriation carried by the bill for the salaries of teachers, supervisors, and directors of agriculture is, for the first year, $500,000, to be increased $250,000 each year until the total reaches $2,000,000; then to be increased $500,000 each year for two years until the appropriation reaches $3,000,000, which will be in 1924 and 1925, and annually thereafter the sum of $3,000,000.

The appropriation for the salaries of teachers of trade and industrial subjects is the same as that for agriculture.

The appropriation for the training of teachers of agricultural, trade and industrial, and home economic subjects is to be, for the first year, $500,000 and to increase $200,000 each year until it reaches $1,000,000, and annually thereafter to be $1,000,000.

For the work of the Federal board for vocational education the appropriation is made $200,000.

The bill provides that the allotment to any State for the purpose of cooperating with the State in paying the salaries of teachers of agricultural subjects or of trade and industrial subjects shall not be less than a minimum of $5,000 for any fiscal year prior to June 30, 1923, nor less than $10,000 for any fiscal year thereafter.

It provides that for the purpose of cooperating with the States in preparing teachers, supervisors, and directors of agricultural subjects, trades and industrial, and home economic subjects the allotment of funds to any State shall not be less than a minimum of $5,000 for any fiscal year prior to the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, nor less than $10,000 for any fiscal year thereafter. It carries a supplemental appropriation for these amounts.

The fund appropriated for salaries of teachers, supervisors, and directors of agriculture is to be prorated to the States according to rural population.

The fund appropriated toward the salaries of teachers of trade and industrial subjects is to be prorated among the States according to urban population.

The fund appropriated for the training of teachers is to be prorated according to population.

The States, through their legislative authorities, must formally accept the conditions of this act. The States must respectively create or designate State boards with whom the national board will deal.

The State boards are to formulate plans for the administration of the grants in conformity with the provisions of the Federal statute. These plans, however, are to be submitted to the Federal board for approval.

For each dollar paid from the Federal grant allotted to any State, the State or local community, or both, shall spend an equal amount for the same purpose, and shall in addition meet all costs of plant, equipment, or maintenance, including the salaries of teachers necessary to complete well-rounded courses of instruction.

The bill limits the schools which are to receive aid in part from the National Government to schools supported and controlled by the public.

The education given in the schools is to be of less than college grade. They must be designed to prepare boys and girls over 14 years of age for useful and profitable employment in agriculture, and in the trades and industries.

Three classes of schools are contemplated:

First. To aid schools in which practically half the time is given to vocational instruction.

Second. Part-time schools for young workers over 14 years of age, with a view of extending their vocational knowledge, and extending the vocational intelligence of the pupils.

Third. Evening schools to extend the vocational knowledge for mature workers over 16 years of age.

The amendment which I have proposed designating a specialist in vocational education to be general director of all the vocational work, with a salary of $7,500, was intended to fix in the minds of the board the fact that the person in charge of the work should be a man who has broad and exact knowledge of vocational education.

The lists of specialists in each division should include both educators and those who have special knowledge of the several subjects.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I am much interested in the Senator's remarks. I will ask the Senator if he knows of any Senator on either side of the Chamber who is against this bill?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I hope I do not; I am going to present a few more words, completing a detailed description of the bill, and then I really feel that we might vote to pass it.

Mr. GALLINGER. I was about to make the observation that I hope we will be able to vote on it or get a day set for a vote on the bill. Of course if we set some time in the future and do not act upon it to-day it will be discussed again. I should like very much to have the bill passed and get it out of the way, because I think pretty nearly everybody is for it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I think the Senator is right and—

Mr. GALLINGER. I did not mean to interrupt the Senator's discussion, of course.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. My discussion is practically over. I was only referring now to the amendments that I have suggested and that the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE] and I have studied together. The truth is, on this side my colleagues seem largely to have looked to me to work upon the bill, as I have been working upon it for several years, and I know the Senators on the other side of the Chamber realize the splendid work that has been done with reference to this measure by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE].

Mr. GALLINGER. We all do.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The responsibility for the measure would have continued with him rather than to have fallen to me but for the change which took place in the organization of the Senate three years ago. With the Republican majority he was leading in the work and I was helping him. Since that time, as I am chairman of the Committee on Education and Labor, the situation is reversed just a little, but I am always glad to stop at any time the opportunity is presented to give to the Senator from Vermont every possible credit for his splendid work upon this subject, and almost to regret that we have a Democratic majority and that he has not charge of the bill instead of myself.

I present to the Senate tables showing the amount which each State would receive for the salaries of teachers, supervisors, and directors of agricultural subjects under the provisions of this bill; also the amount each State would receive for salaries of teachers of trade and industrial subjects; and also the amount each State would receive for the training of teachers under the bill.

I ask that these exhibits be printed for the use of the Senate at the close of my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I should like to call attention to these amendments. First, we amend the bill by changing the date with reference to the different appropriations. The bill was drawn more than a year ago. We have simply moved the dates up so as to conform to the present time. That really was adopted when we brought the matter to the attention of the Senate a few days ago.

The next amendment is a slight modification of the relation of the board to similar work in the department. The bill as originally drawn required the board to leave the work to the several departments where it could be done there. The language was quite strong and practically required this course. It said:

That such studies and investigations and the report for the purpose of agricultural education shall so far as practicable be made in cooperation with and through the Department of Agriculture—

And so on. We modify that so as to read:

When the board deems it advisable such studies, investigations, and reports concerning agriculture for the purpose of agricultural education may be made with the cooperation of the Department of Agriculture.

The modification is simply to leave it in the discretion of the board rather than in the terms used as to the original board, and to require them to do it, if they could. We thought if we obtained the great leaders of vocational education indicated by our amendment at the head of this work they might find it better to conduct the work themselves, or to have it done under their direction, rather than under the direction of anybody who could be found in any one of the departments. We, therefore, so framed the amendment as to leave it discretionary.

The next amendment which we shall submit to the Senate is an amendment providing that—

There shall be selected by the board, among other assistants, a specialist in vocational education, to be general director of all the vocational educational work, at a salary of $7,500 per year.

There are, perhaps, a half dozen men in the United States who stand at the head in this line of work. We meant by this that we expected one of those leaders to be put at the head of the work. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE] and I agreed on that amendment.

There was quite an appeal to us to modify the bill so as to create a board in control of men attached to particular lines of work in commerce, in manufacturing, and in practical labor. We believe we can perhaps best reach that desire by providing that—

The vocational educational board is authorized to select an advisory board to be composed of seven men, one from the mechanic arts, one from agriculture, one from commerce, one from labor in general, and three from the field of general education. The said advisory board may be called together from time to time, but their entire service shall not exceed more than 30 days in one year. They shall receive no compensation, but shall be paid their traveling expenses and shall be allowed $10 per day for subsistence, the expenses of the advisory board to be paid out of the appropriation provided for in this section.

We made an appropriation of $200,000 a year for the use of the vocational board in the general conduct of the supervision of the work and the stimulation of the work in the States. We provide that the compensation of the advisory board shall be taken out of that $200,000. We also provide that the salaries of these leaders in vocational education shall be taken out of the $200,000.

Now, Mr. President, I have presented to the Senate the amendments which we propose.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, one thing I have noticed in this bill, and that is that in apportioning salaries the instructor in charge of home economics is paid a much lower salary than are the others. It seems to me that home economics is about as important a matter as we can think of in connection with a bill of this kind. Is the Senator from Georgia sure that the proper person can be obtained for this work for the amount indicated in the bill?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I only understand that the very ablest teachers of home economics make a salary of but $5,000 a year, and that we put the salary as high as that which any of them get.

Mr. GALLINGER. I know nothing about it beyond the fact that the others seem to have salaries of $7,000 and $7,500.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It is this, Mr. President: A great leader of industrial education could take the superintendence of a big plant and command a high salary; his knowledge gives him an opportunity to make more; and my advice was that the very highest salary should be paid to a teacher of home economics—home economics being a line of work that does not pay as much, although it is most valuable—and we adjusted the salaries in this bill to the highest salaries given in the line of work named.

Mr. GALLINGER. The subjects with which home economics deals are such as the health and welfare of the people in general.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes. The Senator from New Hampshire can not feel its importance more earnestly than I feel it.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have no intention of moving an amendment, but I was rather struck by the fact that that instructor was to get a much less salary than the others.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, if any other Senator desires to discuss the subject, I shall be very glad to hear from him.

APPENDIX A.

GRANTS PROPOSED BY THE COMMISSION UNDER THESE PRINCIPLES.

1. For the work of the Federal Board for Vocational Education, $200,000 annually. This money is to be used in administering the grants to the States as described below and in furnishing information and advice to the States as previously described.

2. For the salaries of teachers, supervisors, and directors of agricultural subjects, $500,000 for the fiscal year 1916-17. This annual amount is to be increased at the rate of $250,000 a year until a total of $2,000,000 annually is reached in the fiscal year 1922-23. After that year the increase is to be at the rate of $500,000 a year until a total maximum appropriation of $3,000,000 annually is reached in 1924-25.

3. For the salaries of teachers of trade and industrial subjects, the sum of $500,000 for the fiscal year 1916-17. This annual amount increases for each subsequent year in the same manner as the grants for the teachers of agricultural subjects above, until the same total maximum of $3,000,000 annually is reached in 1924-25.

4. For the training of teachers of agricultural, trade and industrial and home economics subjects, the sum of $500,000 for the year 1916-17; $700,000 for the year 1917-18; $900,000 for the year 1918-19; and $1,000,000 for the year 1919-20 and annually thereafter.

Summary of proposed grants for vocational education: The table below gives the appropriations recommended for each purpose by years, the total for each year, and the total grants from 1916 to 1925, inclusive. (These amounts do not cover three small special appropriations in 1915-16, which decrease each year thereafter and which are necessary to raise, as hereinafter described, first to $5,000 and later to $10,000, each of the funds allotted to the smaller States for the salaries of teachers of agricultural subjects, for the salaries of teachers of trade and industrial subjects, and for the training of teachers.)

Year.	Section 2. Appropriation for agricultural teachers.	Section 3. Appropriation for trade and industrial teachers.	Section 4. Appropriation for training of teachers, etc.	Section 7. Appropriation for Federal Board of Vocational Education.	Total for each year.
1916-17.....	$500,000	$500,000	$500,000	$200,000	$1,700,000
1917-18.....	750,000	750,000	700,000	200,000	2,400,000
1918-19.....	1,000,000	1,000,000	900,000	200,000	3,100,000
1919-20.....	1,250,000	1,250,000	1,000,000	200,000	3,700,000
1920-21.....	1,500,000	1,500,000	1,000,000	200,000	4,200,000
1921-22.....	1,750,000	1,750,000	1,000,000	200,000	4,700,000
1922-23.....	2,000,000	2,000,000	1,000,000	200,000	5,200,000
1923-24.....	2,500,000	2,500,000	1,000,000	200,000	6,200,000
1924-25.....	3,000,000	3,000,000	1,000,000	200,000	7,200,000
Total.....	14,250,000	14,250,000	8,100,000	1,800,000	38,400,000

Appropriations to the States for the salaries of teachers of agricultural subjects should be in proportion to their rural population, according to the last preceding United States census. This was the plan followed in the Smith-Lever Act in allotting moneys to the States for the teaching of agriculture through farm extension and demonstration work. A precedent has thus been established which the commission believes to be on the whole the most equitable basis of distribution. Appropriations for the salaries of teachers of trade and industrial subjects should be allotted to the States in proportion to their urban population. Since the appropriation for the training of teachers is to be used for the preparation of instructors for home economics as well as for agriculture and the trades and industries, it should be allotted to the States in proportion to their total population.

The three following tables show the sums received by each State from each grant for the first year 1916-17 and the sums they will receive when the increasing appropriations from year to year have reached the largest annual amount, which will be in 1924-25, in the case of all salaries of teachers, and in 1919-20 in the case of the training of teachers. The fourth table which follows gives the total amounts proposed for each State for all purposes for the first 10 years.

Table showing amounts which each State would receive for the salaries of teachers, supervisors, or directors of agricultural subjects under the proposals of the commission.

[Allotments in proportion to the total rural population according to the last preceding United States census. Each State is guaranteed not less than $5,000 for each year prior to the close of the fiscal year 1922-23, and not less than $10,000 for each year thereafter.]

State.	Rural population.		Allotment, 1916-17.	Maximum allotment, 1924-25.	Special allotment to guarantee $5,000 to each State in 1916-17.	Special allotment to guarantee $10,000 to each State in 1923-24.
	Number, 1910.	Percentage distribution.
Alabama.....	1,767,662	3.58	$17,900	$107,400
Arizona.....	141,094	.29	1,450	8,700	$5,550	$2,750
Arkansas.....	1,371,768	2.78	13,900	89,400
California.....	907,810	1.84	9,200	55,200
Colorado.....	394,184	.80	4,000	24,000	1,000
Connecticut.....	114,917	.23	1,150	6,900	3,850	4,250
Delaware.....	105,237	.21	1,050	6,300	3,950	4,750
Florida.....	533,529	1.08	5,400	32,400
Georgia.....	2,070,471	4.20	21,000	126,000
Idaho.....	255,696	.52	2,600	15,600	2,400
Illinois.....	2,161,662	4.38	21,900	131,400
Indiana.....	1,557,041	3.16	15,800	94,800
Iowa.....	1,544,717	3.13	15,650	93,900
Kansas.....	1,197,159	2.43	12,150	72,900
Kentucky.....	1,734,463	3.51	17,550	105,300
Louisiana.....	1,159,872	2.35	11,750	70,500
Maine.....	360,928	.73	3,650	21,900	1,350
Maryland.....	637,154	1.29	6,450	38,700
Massachusetts.....	241,049	.49	2,450	14,700	2,550
Michigan.....	1,483,129	3.01	15,050	90,300
Minnesota.....	1,225,414	2.48	12,400	74,400
Mississippi.....	1,589,803	3.22	16,100	96,600
Missouri.....	1,894,518	3.84	19,200	115,200
Montana.....	242,633	.49	2,450	14,700	2,550
Nebraska.....	881,262	1.79	8,950	53,700
Nevada.....	68,208	.14	700	4,200	4,300	6,500
New Hampshire.....	175,473	.36	1,800	10,800	3,200	1,000
New Jersey.....	629,957	1.28	6,400	38,400
New Mexico.....	280,730	.56	2,800	16,800	2,200
New York.....	1,928,120	3.91	19,550	117,300
North Carolina.....	1,887,813	3.83	19,150	114,900
North Dakota.....	513,820	1.04	5,200	31,200
Ohio.....	2,101,978	4.25	21,250	127,500
Oklahoma.....	1,337,000	2.71	13,550	81,300
Oregon.....	365,705	.74	3,700	22,200	1,300

<sup>1</sup> The amounts are based on the census of 1910. They would of course be changed somewhat by the census of 1920, for all allotments after that year.

<sup>2</sup> Since the total appropriation to the States is increasing each year the amount of the special allotment to the smaller States necessary to guarantee $5,000 annually and $10,000 annually will of course decrease each year.

<sup>3</sup> Based on the apportionment of $2,500,000.

Table showing amounts which each State would receive, etc.—Continued.

State.	Rural population.		Allotment, 1916-17.	Maximum allotment, 1924-25.	Special allotment to guarantee $5,000 to each State in 1916-17.	Special allotment to guarantee $10,000 to each State in 1923-24.
	Number, 1910.	Percentage distribution.
Pennsylvania.....	3,034,442	6.15	30,750	184,500
Rhode Island.....	17,956	.04	200	1,200	4,800	9,000
South Carolina.....	1,290,568	2.62	13,100	78,600
South Dakota.....	507,215	1.03	5,150	30,900
Tennessee.....	1,734,744	3.53	17,650	105,900
Texas.....	2,958,438	5.99	29,950	179,700
Utah.....	200,417	.40	2,000	12,000	3,000
Vermont.....	187,013	.38	1,900	11,400	3,100	500
Virginia.....	1,585,083	3.21	16,050	96,300
Washington.....	536,460	1.09	5,450	32,700
West Virginia.....	992,877	2.01	10,050	60,300
Wisconsin.....	1,329,540	2.69	13,450	80,700
Wyoming.....	102,744	.21	1,050	6,300	3,950	4,750
Total, United States.....	49,348,883	100.00	500,000	3,000,000	47,650	33,500

APPENDIX B.

Table showing amount which each State would receive for the salaries of teachers of trade and industrial subjects under the proposals of the commission.

[Allotments in proportion to the total urban population, according to the last preceding United States census. Each State is guaranteed not less than $5,000 for each year prior to the close of the fiscal year 1921-22, and not less than $10,000 for each year thereafter.]

State.	Urban population.		Allotment, 1916-17.	Maximum allotment, 1924-25.	Special allotment to guarantee $5,000 to each State in 1916-17.	Special allotment to guarantee $10,000 to each State beginning 1923-24.
	Number.	Percentage distribution.
Alabama.....	370,431	0.87	$4,350	$26,100	$650
Arizona.....	63,290	.15	750	4,500	4,250	$6,250
Arkansas.....	202,681	.48	2,400	14,400	2,600
California.....	1,469,739	3.45	17,250	103,500
Colorado.....	404,840	.95	4,750	28,500	250
Connecticut.....	999,839	2.35	11,750	70,500
Delaware.....	97,085	.23	1,150	6,900	3,850	4,250
District of Columbia.....	331,069	.78	2,550	15,300	2,450
Florida.....	219,080	.51	2,600	15,600
Georgia.....	538,650	1.26	6,300	37,800
Idaho.....	69,898	.16	800	4,800	4,200	6,000
Illinois.....	3,476,929	8.16	40,800	244,800
Indiana.....	1,143,835	2.68	13,400	80,400
Iowa.....	680,054	1.60	8,000	48,000
Kansas.....	493,790	1.16	5,800	34,800
Kentucky.....	555,442	1.30	6,500	39,000
Louisiana.....	496,516	1.16	5,800	34,800
Maine.....	381,443	.89	4,500	27,000	500
Maryland.....	658,192	1.54	7,700	46,200
Massachusetts.....	3,125,367	7.33	36,650	219,900
Michigan.....	1,327,044	3.11	15,550	93,300
Minnesota.....	850,294	1.99	9,950	59,700
Mississippi.....	207,311	.49	2,450	14,700	2,550
Missouri.....	1,398,817	3.28	16,400	98,400
Montana.....	133,420	.31	1,550	9,300	3,450	2,250
Nebraska.....	310,852	.73	3,650	21,900	1,350
Nevada.....	13,367	.03	150	900	4,850	9,250
New Hampshire.....	255,099	.60	3,000	18,000	2,000
New Jersey.....	1,907,210	4.47	22,350	134,100
New Mexico.....	46,571	.11	550	3,300	4,450	7,250
New York.....	7,185,494	16.86	84,300	505,800
North Carolina.....	318,474	.75	3,750	22,500	1,250
North Dakota.....	63,236	.15	750	4,500	4,250	6,250
Ohio.....	2,665,143	6.25	31,250	187,500
Oklahoma.....	320,155	.75	3,750	22,500	1,250
Oregon.....	307,060	.72	3,600	21,600	1,400
Pennsylvania.....	4,630,669	10.86	54,300	325,800
Rhode Island.....	524,654	1.23	6,150	36,900
South Carolina.....	224,832	.53	2,650	15,900	2,350
South Dakota.....	76,673	.18	900	5,400	4,100	5,800
Tennessee.....	441,045	1.03	5,150	30,900
Texas.....	938,104	2.20	11,000	66,000
Utah.....	172,934	.41	2,050	12,300	2,950
Vermont.....	168,943	.40	2,000	12,000	3,000
Virginia.....	476,529	1.12	5,600	33,600
Washington.....	605,530	1.42	7,100	42,600
West Virginia.....	228,242	.54	2,700	16,200	2,300
Wisconsin.....	1,004,320	2.35	11,800	70,800
Wyoming.....	43,221	.10	500	3,000	4,500	7,500
Total United States.....	42,623,383	100.00	500,000	3,000,000	64,750	54,500

<sup>1</sup> The amounts are based on the census of 1910. They would, of course, be changed somewhat by the census of 1920 for all allotments after that year.

<sup>2</sup> Since the total appropriation to the States is increasing each year, the amount of the special allotment to the smaller States necessary to guarantee $5,000 annually and $10,000 annually will, of course, decrease each year.

<sup>3</sup> Based on the apportionment of $2,500,000.

APPENDIX C.

Table showing amount which each State would receive for the training of teachers under the proposals of the commission.

[Allotments in proportion to total population according to the last preceding United States census. Each State is guaranteed not less than $5,000 for each year prior to the close of the fiscal year 1918 and $10,000 for each year thereafter.]<sup>1</sup>

State.	Population.		Allotment, 1916-17.	Maximum allotment, 1919-20, and annually thereafter.	Special allotment to guarantee $5,000 to each State in 1916-17.	Special allotment to guarantee $10,000 to each State beginning 1919-20.
	Number.	Percentage distribution.
Alabama.....	2,138,093	2.32	$11,600	$23,200
Arizona.....	204,354	.22	1,100	2,200	$3,900	$7,800
Arkansas.....	1,574,449	1.71	8,550	17,100
California.....	2,377,549	2.58	12,900	25,800
Colorado.....	799,024	.87	4,350	8,700	650	1,300
Connecticut.....	1,114,756	1.21	6,050	12,100
Delaware.....	202,322	.22	1,100	2,200	3,900	7,800
District of Columbia	331,069	.36
Florida.....	752,619	.82	4,100	8,200	900	1,800
Georgia.....	2,009,121	2.84	14,200	28,400
Idaho.....	325,594	.35	1,750	3,500	3,250	6,500
Illinois.....	5,638,591	6.13	30,650	61,300
Indiana.....	2,700,876	2.94	14,700	29,400
Iowa.....	2,224,771	2.42	12,100	24,200
Kansas.....	1,690,949	1.84	9,200	18,400
Kentucky.....	2,289,905	2.49	12,450	24,900
Louisiana.....	1,656,388	1.80	9,000	18,000
Maine.....	742,371	.81	4,050	8,100	950	1,900
Maryland.....	1,295,346	1.41	7,050	14,100
Massachusetts.....	3,366,416	3.66	18,300	36,600
Michigan.....	2,810,173	3.05	15,250	30,500
Minnesota.....	2,075,708	2.28	11,300	22,600
Mississippi.....	1,797,114	1.95	9,750	19,500
Missouri.....	3,293,335	3.58	17,900	35,800
Montana.....	376,053	.41	2,050	4,100	2,950	5,900
Nebraska.....	1,192,214	1.30	6,500	13,000
Nevada.....	81,875	.09	450	900	4,550	9,100
New Hampshire.....	430,572	.47	2,350	4,700	2,350	4,700
New Jersey.....	2,537,167	2.76	13,800	27,600
New Mexico.....	327,301	.36	1,800	3,600	3,200	6,400
New York.....	9,113,614	9.91	49,550	99,100
North Carolina.....	2,206,287	2.40	12,000	24,000
North Dakota.....	577,059	.63	3,150	6,300	1,850	3,700
Ohio.....	4,767,121	5.18	25,900	51,800
Oklahoma.....	1,657,155	1.80	9,000	18,000
Oregon.....	672,765	.73	3,350	6,700	1,350	2,700
Pennsylvania.....	7,065,111	8.33	41,650	83,300
Rhode Island.....	542,610	.59	2,950	5,900	2,950	5,900
South Carolina.....	1,515,400	1.65	8,250	16,500
South Dakota.....	583,888	.63	3,150	6,300	1,850	3,700
Tennessee.....	2,194,789	2.37	11,850	23,700
Texas.....	3,896,542	4.24	21,200	42,400
Utah.....	373,351	.41	2,050	4,100	2,950	5,900
Vermont.....	355,956	.39	1,950	3,900	3,050	6,100
Virginia.....	2,061,612	2.24	11,200	22,400
Washington.....	1,141,990	1.24	6,200	12,400
West Virginia.....	1,221,119	1.33	6,650	13,300
Wisconsin.....	2,333,899	2.54	12,700	25,400
Wyoming.....	145,965	.16	800	1,600	4,200	8,400
Total United States	91,972,266	100.00	500,000	1,000,000	44,200	88,400

<sup>1</sup> The amounts are based on the census of 1910. They will, of course, be changed somewhat by the census of 1920 for all allotments after that year.

<sup>2</sup> Since the total appropriation to the States is increasing each year, the amount of the special allotment to the smaller States necessary to guarantee $5,000 annually and $10,000 annually will, of course, decrease each year.

<sup>3</sup> Based on the apportionment of $1,000,000.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, I wish to express my deep gratitude for the very complimentary way in which the Senator from Georgia has referred to my connection with this work. I made my remarks upon this bill last week, anticipating then that when the measure came up for final discussion we would probably have very little time to give to the matter. I said to my friends to-day, when asking them to aid me in getting up this measure this afternoon, that I would make no extended remarks to-day, and I shall keep my promise to them by abstaining from any extended discussion at this time.

I believe the Senate is substantially a unit on this question, and I believe there is no piece of constructive legislation before Congress to-day that is of equal importance as affecting the great body of the American people.

There is not a State superintendent of public instruction in the United States with whom I have not been in correspondence in regard to this bill; there is not a head of any normal school in the country with whom I have not been in correspondence; there is no dean of any of the experiment stations connected with the agricultural schools with whom I have not been in correspondence. I have written to almost all the heads of universities in the United States, and in many cases I have taken up the matter with considerable detail. I know that the country is ready for this measure—that it earnestly demands it—and I am very glad indeed that its passage through the Senate is coming at this time.

In order to keep my promise to my brother Senators, I will not take the time of the Senate longer, but will ask the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] if he will not consent to temporarily lay aside the bill which he has in charge in order that we may have a vote upon this measure at this time.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President—

Mr. PAGE. I yield the floor.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Does the Senator from Colorado desire to speak in regard to the matter to which the Senator from Vermont has referred?

Mr. THOMAS. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I desire to say that, so far as I am concerned, I am willing to temporarily lay aside the District of Columbia appropriation bill for the purpose referred to by the Senator from Vermont, and I agree to his request.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, the request made of the Senator having in charge the District of Columbia appropriation bill to temporarily lay it aside in order that the Senate may consider what is popularly known as the vocational education bill having been granted, and that bill being before the Senate, I wish to present a matter of which I think the chairman of the committee and perhaps the Senator from Vermont have been informed, and which, as I am informed, meets with their approbation.

A lady who resides in my city has long devoted herself to the problem of the instruction in civic duties and civic obligations of our alien population. She has been extremely active in this work since the outbreak of the war, and believes, I think very justly, that preparation consists quite as much in educating the alien population of the United States as to American institutions and American citizenship as in building fleets and equipping armies. She has also been very active in encouraging aliens to become citizens of the United States, and particularly in familiarizing them with the English language. This lady visited Washington some time ago to promote this movement, and while here she interviewed the Senator from Georgia on one or more occasions regarding the application of the principle of vocational education and the extension of the purpose of the bill to the alien population of the country. She proposed this amendment to section 6, at the end of the first paragraph:

And problems, requirements, and methods for the proper training of foreign-born persons for intelligent citizenship and industrial efficiency.

If there is no objection, I should like at this time to offer the amendment, with the hope that it may be accepted.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I do not know what to say about that amendment. It, of course, is a subject that appeals to all of us, but whether it would harmonize with the general scheme of the bill is another question. We make no distinction in this bill between any of our citizens. We seek the industrial vocational training of them all, as may be needed. Foreign populations vary so greatly in the different States that it would seem to me that would be more of a local problem. In States that have a large foreign population undoubtedly they could prepare as part of their schedule special vocational instruction for the foreign population, and it would meet the approval of the central board. I do not think any specific clause would be necessary to let the general board approve as part of the work of a particular State some special instruction in vocational education for the foreign population. I am inclined to doubt the wisdom of adding the amendment to the bill as a distinct proposition.

The lady to whom the Senator has referred saw me—and she is a splendid woman and very enthusiastic in her purposes—but such an amendment will affect, I fear adversely, the general symmetry of the bill, as it undertakes to select a class. Under the scheme of the bill such matters are to be submitted to the local board of the State to be adjusted to suit the classes in the State, and when the local board acts the central board can approve its action without the legislation.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I was informed by the author of the amendment, who must have misunderstood the chairman of the committee, that the proposed addition to the bill had received his consideration at an informal hearing which he gave to her, and that he would accept it if I should offer it. I certainly do not wish to do anything that would interfere with the symmetry of the bill, and certainly nothing that would prevent its present consideration and passage. I think, however, that the amendment would not have the effect which the Senator apprehends.

It will be noticed that, as drawn, it does not refer to any particular class of citizens except as embodying problems and methods in education. The bill provides that "such studies, investigations, and reports shall include" certain processes and elements which are recited in section 6 of the bill, to which the amendment would add—and problems, requirements, and methods for the proper training of foreign-born persons for intelligent citizenship and industrial efficiency.

That is, this system of vocational education shall include instruction with regard to these problems to those who can afterwards use and apply them to that class of our population which they immediately concern. Of course, if this amendment were one which had for its purpose a classification, and, consequently, a special element of training outside and beyond the general purpose of the bill, the criticism offered by the Senator from Georgia would be perhaps unanswerable; but if in the imparting of the information, the educational processes, to those who are the beneficiaries of the bill, they also be instructed regarding problems, acquirements, and methods of training of foreign-born persons, so that they in turn may become teachers and instructors, it would seem to me that it is not only in harmony with the bill itself, but very properly includes a subject upon which vocational education and training is as essential as in any other department of life.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President—

Mr. THOMAS. I yield to the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, in all the discussions with reference to this bill there has been but one sentiment, and that is that we should reach down and take the hand of the boy and the girl, the sons and daughters of the immigrant, and lift them up and educate them in matters that pertain to their vocational calling. We must keep in mind the fact that the States themselves must attend to the purely cultural part of education. That has been the one prominent thought as we have passed through the discussion of this bill. The State must so educate the children as to lay a broad general educational foundation, vocational training commencing only after the boy or girl has reached the age of 14. As showing the spirit of this bill, I want to read just a word from a recent speech delivered by me in the Senate:

A condition and not a theory confronts this Government to-day. If our citizens of the generation upon which we are now entering are unable to earn a decent livelihood and give their children such an education as will equip them to run the race of life with a fair measure of success, it will be impossible to convince them that they are receiving that equality of opportunity to which they are certainly entitled and without which they can not long remain true and loyal citizens.

We have had in mind this foreign element to which the Senator from Colorado refers. We have believed that we could not assimilate this foreign element unless we gave it something more than a cultural training.

I said further in my remarks:

We have received into this country hundreds upon hundreds of thousands of wholly uneducated people who have grown up under a monarchical form of government—people who have come here that they and their children may enjoy the beneficence of this great, rich, prosperous Nation.

We can assimilate them into our political system but slowly at best, and their loyalty to our country and its flag will depend very largely upon whether they do or do not come to believe that they are receiving a fair and just division of the prosperity with which our land is blessed.

I believe this is one of the great features of this bill. We say to the sons of the foreigner, "As soon as you have laid the foundation of a cultural education in the grades we will give you a vocational training that will enable you to earn a better wage, a more decent livelihood." I shall be very much mistaken, Mr. President, if this bill does not work out exactly the ends suggested by the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, if the Senator from Colorado will permit me to interrupt him, I think the way in which I was misunderstood was that I meant that the bill already would do the very thing which the lady who called on me thought should be done. I did not mean, I am sure, that I thought there ought to be a special designation in the bill itself.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, except where isolations exist and are persisted in by foreigners in this country, the problem of the second generation is a comparatively simple one. The children of the immigrants, with the exceptions referred to, are very readily assimilable in America. They easily absorb our language and our customs. They accustom themselves to our institutions and methods, and almost imperceptibly, as it were, grow out of their origin and environment into the institutions and customs of the Republic. I have no doubt that this bill will be of enormous benefit to the children of the immigrants who are here and who are not yet acquainted with our language, and have not yet become citizens, as it will also benefit the native children of the country; and in my reading on the general subject of immigration I have discovered that the children of immigrants frequently become the teachers of their parents. They acquire, as I say, by constant contact and association with the people around them, who are mostly citizens, that spirit of Americanism which the native very naturally and necessarily possesses; and it is therefore comparatively easy for them—by example if not by precept—to become the teachers of their less assimilable parents. But there is, unfortunately, a tendency with some classes of our foreign immigration to isolate themselves from the rest of the people, to keep to themselves, to maintain their native language, and to refuse, or at least fail, to familiarize themselves with the English language, and consequently with the customs and institutions of America.

Mr. PAGE. Does not the Senator think that this bill will be one of the great forces that will overcome that tendency?

Mr. THOMAS. I have no doubt of it, in view of what has been stated by the Senator, who knows all about the purposes of the bill and has been very familiar with its purposes and the details of its structure for a great many years. If I had any doubt about it I would certainly dismiss it upon the assurance of the Senator from Vermont, whose child this bill unquestionably is, and who, as declared by the Senator from Georgia, is entitled to the great merit of having framed it, introduced it, lived with it, and brought it to its present moment of fruition. It is a great work, and a monument to the Senator's career which I am sure will keep his memory fresh and green in the hearts of a grateful posterity. I certainly hope so.

There is, however, as I was about to say, a lack of homogeneity between certain elements of our foreign population and the great mass of our people. It is unfortunate that this is so, and much of the demand for a restricted immigration bill is due to that fact. No man can become a good citizen of the United States who does not familiarize himself with its institutions and learn and think in its language. No man, in my judgment, should be permitted to avail himself of American citizenship who declines to undergo that process of change, because he can not be an American citizen in all that the term implies and be unfamiliar with its language, and consequently with the Nation's institutions, its history, and its purposes. That class of immigrant, up to the outbreak of the European war, was multiplying in some sections of the country. Communities existed and do exist where the English language is as much a stranger as it is in the heart of southeastern Europe. There are some communities which insist not only upon—to use a common expression—flocking entirely by themselves, but who repel those natural and proper advances for assimilation which are made in the best of faith by others.

It is that class of immigrants, that class of aliens, that class of citizens, if you please, residing in the United States whose education should become one of the duties of every citizen coming in contact with them. Much of the complaint which aliens make, much of the reason which they offer for refusing to become American citizens is the hostility, or at least the indifference, to them shown by others, and particularly by native-born Americans. We need these people in the development of our wonderful resources, and at the close of the war in Europe we shall probably need them more than ever, for I am unable to understand how immigration will continue in very large numbers after this war, in view of the declination of Europe and the consequent demand for labor in those countries from which our immigration has been chiefly derived. It is the right time, in my judgment, to set at work those forces of education, of assimilation, and of contact with aliens scattered throughout the country and make of them good citizens of the United States.

The author of this amendment, as I say, has been devoting her life in the sphere of her usefulness—which is, of course, contracted—to reaching the alien who can not speak the English language and teaching him the rudiments of it, acquainting him with the importance and value of American institutions, drawing the contrasts so easily apparent between the liberty and opportunity of the individual in the United States and the absence of them in the country of his nativity, and to awaken that spirit of interest which not only precedes but almost always produces an affection for the institutions and opportunities of the new country, and which make the recipients of that knowledge better men and better women, and whose improvement must result in bringing them into the fold of our citizenship.

I hope it is true, and I have no doubt that it must be, that one result of the processes of this educational system will be to instill in the minds and the hearts of the recipients of the benefits of the system not only a knowledge of the needs and course of training of the foreign-born noncitizen population—and indeed some of them who are citizens—but also an enthusiasm in imparting that knowledge where it will be beneficial. But I do not perceive, as I stated before, how this amendment in any way trenches upon the purpose or the symmetry of the bill, since it merely adds one more process of education to be applied to those for whose benefit the bill has been framed.

Mr. President, I shall not imperil the passage of this measure or insist upon the acceptance of this amendment if it is not acceptable to the committee having the bill in charge. I am somewhat disappointed, however, that there seems to be opposition to it, because I had assumed, from the information that had been given me—and about which, of course, there must have been some misunderstanding—that when the bill was taken up the amendment would be accepted.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, is the bill before the Senate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. No; the bill is in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. GALLINGER. I did not know that it had been taken up by any action of the Senate.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I asked unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 703) to provide for the promotion of vocational education; to provide for cooperation with the States in the promotion of such education in agriculture and the trades and industries; to provide for cooperation with the States in the preparation of teachers of vocational subjects; and to appropriate money and regulate its expenditure.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I desire to say a word in behalf of this measure. It appeals to me very strongly. My life has been a practical one from early boyhood until the present day, and I have realized very intensely and thoroughly the advantages that might come from a vocational system of education. I realize that the great colleges and universities of our land accomplish much, but they are in a realm entirely outside of vocational education; and, as valuable as they may be and as valuable as they are, their value would be very much enhanced if it might be accompanied by a knowledge of vocational, practical pursuits in life.

I know that in the public schools in my own city we have in two instances established the vocational features of education in conjunction with the ordinary school training, and they have been of infinite advantage.

In New York on two occasions quite recently—one a year or more ago—when there I dropped into an institution without real knowledge as to just what it was, and I found that it was maintained for the purpose of encouraging vocational education, for advancing the young men—and they had thousands of them there, and many on a waiting list—in some vocational knowledge in conjunction with the ordinary literary knowledge that they might acquire. I finally became engaged in conversation with the principals of the institution in New York—the first occasion was about a year ago and the other of more recent date—and they expressed themselves in most high favor of the process of education that was anticipated in the vocational education bill, then known as the Page bill. Since that time there has been a merging of ideas and interest between the Senator from Georgia and the Senator from Vermont. But these gentlemen, the principals of these schools, could not speak highly enough or extravagantly enough of the great advantages that would come from the adoption of this vocational education scheme which was known as the Page-Smith bill. As a member of the Committee on Education and Labor, to which this bill has been referred, it has been my privilege to come in pretty close contact with many of those. Feeling its just and great merits, I trust that the bill may be passed without hesitancy or without doubt. It will prove a blessing to the generations coming on, and in the future years will be of untold value to our Republic.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary informs the Chair that the Senator from Georgia has offered 47 amendments which simply change the year. If there is no objection on the part of the Senate, they will be considered as one amendment. The question is on agreeing to that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 9, beginning on line 8, the Senator from Georgia moves to strike out the paragraph beginning "Such studies, investigations, and reports" and to insert in lieu thereof the following words:

When the board deems it advisable such studies, investigations, and reports concerning agriculture for the purpose of agricultural education may be made in cooperation with the Department of Agriculture; such studies, investigations, and reports concerning trades and industries for the purposes of trade and industrial education may be made in cooperation with the Department of Labor; such studies, investigations, and reports concerning commerce and commercial pursuits for the purposes of a commercial education may be made in cooperation with the Department of Commerce; such studies, investigations, and reports concerning the administration of agricultural schools, courses of study, and instructions in vocational subjects may be made in cooperation with the Bureau of Education.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 10 the committee proposes, in line 14, to strike out the words "of assistants and office and such" and to insert "of the officers, the assistants, and such office and."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. And beginning in line 16, with the words "the Federal board for vocational education," it is proposed to strike out those words and all of lines 17, 18, 19, and 20 as printed in the bill, and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

There shall be selected by the board, among other assistants, a specialist in vocational education, to be general director of all the vocational educational work, at a salary of $7,500 per year; a specialist in agricultural education, at a salary of $7,000 per year; a specialist in education in trades and industries, at a salary of $7,000 per year; a specialist in education in home economics, at a salary of $5,000 per year; a specialist in commercial education, at a salary of $7,000 per year, who shall be paid out of the appropriation provided for in this section.

The vocational educational board is authorized to select an advisory board to be composed of seven men, one from the mechanic arts, one from agriculture, one from commerce, one from labor in general, and three from the field of general education. The said advisory board may be called together from time to time, but their entire service shall not exceed more than 30 days in one year. They shall receive no compensation, but shall be paid their traveling expenses and shall be allowed $10 per day for subsistence, the expenses of the advisory board to be paid out of the appropriation provided for in this section.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, the chairman informs me that he will consent to the insertion of the following amendment:

And problems, requirements, and methods for the proper training of foreign-born persons for intelligent citizenship and industrial efficiency.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. After consulting with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE], and understanding the classification into which it comes where there are quite a number of applications, the objection which occurred to us seems to be removed.

Mr. THOMAS. It is to be added at end of line 21, page 9, after the word "subject."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In the original bill, page 9, at the end of line 7, after the words "vocational subjects," insert:

and problems, requirements, and methods for the proper training of foreign-born persons for intelligent citizenship and industrial efficiency.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SUITS BY STATES.

Mr. CHILTON. I ask the Senator from Maryland to agree to lay aside the pending bill for 5 or 10 minutes, so that I may call up a measure and make an explanation of it to the Senate. I believe I can get the consideration of this bill, in which I am very much interested. It is the bill (S. 5126) giving the consent of the United States for the bringing of certain suits in the Supreme Court of the United States, and for other purposes.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I have no objection.

Mr. CHILTON. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill.

Mr. TOWNSEND. What bill is it?

Mr. CHILTON. I will explain it to the Senate. This is a bill to enable any State in the Union to bring suit against the Federal Government, giving the consent of the Government because the Government now has the right under the decision of the Supreme Court to sue a State. This is a bill which has been probably as maturely considered by the Judiciary Committee as any bill that was ever before either House of Congress. It did not pass the committee unanimously, but it has been brought up at this session of the Senate on three or four occasions when the calendar was being considered; but I did not take the time then to explain to the Senate the purposes and objects of the bill, for the obvious reason that it would have a useless expenditure of time. On these occasions one objection defeated consideration.

The bill is a substitute for several bills which have been introduced and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

One is a bill introduced by the Senator from Massachusetts, another by the Senator from Louisiana, another by the Senator from Colorado, another by myself, and probably another by the Senator from Virginia. At the suggestion of the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], all these bills were consolidated, and a bill in general language was reported by the subcommittee unanimously and acted on by the full committee and reported to the Senate. This bill simply provides that wherever there is a controversy between a State of the Union and the United States, which, as between individuals, would be cognizable in a court of justice, it may be brought in the Supreme Court of the United States.

Let me say that this adds nothing to the judicial power, of course. Suits, such as are described in this bill, can be brought now in the Court of Claims, but the Committee on the Judiciary thought—a majority of them did, and I did, and I think the Senate will conclude—that whenever a case rises to the dignity of being indorsed by the legislature of a State, it is a proper matter, in the first instance, to be considered by the Supreme Court of the United States.

Now, we are in a very peculiar and anomalous position. The Supreme Court has held, in the case of the United States against Texas, that the United States can sue a State; and yet there is no way by which a State can sue the United States. I take that controversy as an illustration. In that case the United States sued the State of Texas to recover the whole county of Greer from it, alleging that the State of Texas had wrongfully exercised jurisdiction and in claiming possession of that county, which had been, and which was in fact, a part of the State of Oklahoma.

If the positions of the parties had been reversed, if it had so happened that the United States had so to speak, "squatted" upon Greer County, there is no power in the world by which the State of Texas could sue the United States; and the State would have been helpless to obtain justice.

I take another illustration given by the Judiciary Committee. We have at this session conveyed to the State of Nevada about 7,000,000 acres of land for school purposes. If the State of Nevada shall, under the arrangement for assigning that land to the State, take land which does not belong to the State, the United States has a remedy by a suit in the Supreme Court of the United States; but if, on the other hand, the United States shall be in the wrong and shall take the property of the State, or if a $1,600 clerk shall say that the land belongs to the United States and not to the State, there is no way by which the State can assert its right.

Mr. President, I will state the reason why I ask the Senate to take up the bill now. On two occasions this measure has been brought up when I was here and when we were calling the calendar, and under the five-minute rule I could not explain what the bill was; I did not have time. On one of the last two occasions when the calendar was called I was away at the funeral of Mr. Moss; the other time I was unavoidably absent, detained on committee business, the business of the Senate, and did not know that the calendar was being called.

Mr. KENYON. I should like to ask the Senator if there is a minority report of the committee?

Mr. CHILTON. There is no minority report. I will say this to the Senator—

Mr. KENYON. How many members joined in the report?

Mr. CHILTON. I have not the vote now. There were some Senators opposed to it.

Mr. KENYON. Are the Senators who are opposed to it in the Chamber now?

Mr. CHILTON. No; but I have talked to them. I will say this to the Senator: I do not want to take advantage of any Senator's absence. I know that in committee the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] opposed it, but he stated to the Senate that he does not propose to bring up the bill for a vote. He thinks that it is a proper measure for the Senate to consider. That is true of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND], as the Record shows. They made that statement in open Senate, and the Record shows it. The same statement has been made by the Senator from California [Mr. WORKS] and, as I recall, by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK].

I do not want to bring up a bill in the absence of any Senator who desires to be heard, but the Senators mentioned have stated to the Senate, and the Record shows it, that they do not want to oppose the consideration of the bill. If it comes to a vote, they will vote against the bill, as I understand their position. I do not understand that they have asked that this bill shall not be taken up in their absence.

The two Senators from Massachusetts are deeply interested in this bill, as are many other Senators, and it is an important matter.

The other day some Senator made the statement, and I did not have time then to reply to it, that under it some States could bring suit for large claims against the Government. You can do it now in the Court of Claims. You can not give jurisdiction to a court or the right to sue in any case without taking the chance that a rascal or scoundrel will bring suit against a good man. There is nothing that can be said against this bill that can not be said against any other bill authorizing a suit, and I assert that no Senator who has a drop of State rights doctrine left in him can oppose this bill.

Of course, in my opinion, the Supreme Court made a mistake when it held that the Government can sue a sovereign State, and I will say that there were dissenting from that opinion Chief Justice Fuller and Associate Justice L. Q. C. Lamar. But a majority of the court held the very strange doctrine—in the Texas case—that by adopting the Constitution the State gave their consent to be sued and thereby there attached the jurisdictional clause of the Constitution giving to the Supreme Court jurisdiction in any suit in which the United States was a party and original jurisdiction in any suit in which a State was a party.

The Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] at one time opposed this measure. He read the report of the committee, however, and promptly told me to go ahead, that he had no further objection to the bill.

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] the other day upon the statement of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND] objected. The Senator from Utah, however, did not object. The Senator from Michigan objected when the calendar was up probably two or three weeks ago, and I think he has ascertained from the Record or from those Senators whom he then seemed to be trying to protect that they do not object to the Senate considering the bill. They simply voted against it in committee, and the matter is here now for consideration, without any demand from them to delay consideration. The reason why I ask the Senate to take it up now is that Monday has been, rather by consent, set apart as the day when the calendar should be taken up. I have been unfortunately absent twice when the calendar was up for consideration, and I have explained why I was absent. I concede that we could not have taken up this bill had I been here, but the fact is I was not here and I could not be here for the reasons I have stated. I have to leave the city to-night or to-morrow, probably to be gone for the best part of the week.

This is a matter of vital importance. It is not political. It has been considered and it has been discussed for years and years. The substitute was really drawn by the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] as a solution of the general question—that is, as embodying all that the Senate ought to pass concerning the purposes and principles stated in the four or five bills that were before the Senate Judiciary Committee on this subject.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I can not consent to the consideration of the bill at this time. The Senator from West Virginia states that I have talked with members of the Judiciary Committee, and find no objection to it. I have talked with several Senators, who stated that they did seriously object to the passage of the bill. I have been told by several of them that they had agreed with the Senator from West Virginia that they personally would not file any objection against considering the bill. Those Senators are absent from the Senate to-day. The Senator himself will not contend that they would vote for the bill if they were present. Every one of them would vote against it and many of them would discuss it in a way that would present their views of the measure.

I did listen to what the Senator from Utah stated when this bill was called up the first time, having a good deal of confidence in what the Senator said, and it looked to me as though it was a proposition that might permit the States of the United States to go to the Supreme Court on a claim that never ought to be considered, in morals at least, though possibly there might be some equitable or moral right sustaining the claim. For instance, as the Senator from Utah states, the great Northwest Territory, much of which was claimed originally by some of the thirteen States, if they could bring suit and make out a case which to the Senator from West Virginia might seem all right and equitable, and if they could establish it they might compel the United States to pay untold millions of dollars.

Mr. CHILTON. I should like to ask the Senator if it is possible to do it unless the Supreme Court should decide that it is right?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I said there might be a legal right for it, but in all the cases that have come up since I have been here when the States asked permission to bring suit that suit has been laid before Congress, and the Senate has passed upon the individual merits of the particular case.

I have no objection at all to the Government paying its just debts. I was upon the Committee on Claims for two years, and I voted for the payment of every claim that was made out before that committee; I was not prejudiced against the claims at all; but this wholesale proposition, for some purpose, I do not know just what, is presented here when many of the Senators who are opposed to it, at least those who have talked with me, are absent.

I submit, Mr. President, that in the condition of the Treasury to-day many of the claims which have waited for so many years can wait a little longer, and we can well afford to bring the particular case before the Senate and let it go to the committee and let the Senate committee and the Senate itself pass upon that claim. Then there will be no valid reason or obstruction in the way of Senators getting a hearing before the court.

I simply rose to object, however, for the reason I have stated. I have talked with Senators on the Judiciary Committee. Everyone with whom I have talked has agreed with me that this bill ought to be considered.

Now, we are supplanting the District of Columbia appropriation bill with this measure. I can not quite understand why the Senator from Maryland consents to it, when the appropriation bill has been hanging for days; and this is a bill that will provoke discussion, a bill the opponents of which are mostly absent from the Senate at this time. To take it up and supplant the legitimate business of the Senate is something I can not agree to.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I will say to the Senator that, as chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, I merely consented that the Senator from West Virginia might bring the bill before the Senate, as other Senators have a right to request the unanimous consent of the Senate. I did it out of courtesy to the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. CHILTON. The Senator from Michigan is unfair in his statement of my position and he is unfair in the statement or the attitude of this case. To put me in the position of trying to bring up this bill when some one opposing it is absent is unfair to me and it is unfair to this situation.

What I stated was a fact. The other day I spoke to the Senator about it, and I understood him to say to me that the Senators who were opposed to it had stated what I said they had stated. I so understood him. Now, I certainly would not look the Senator in the face and state what he had said to me unless I believed he had said it to me.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I have no doubt the Senator from Georgia believed it, but he is certainly mistaken. The Senator spoke about the Senators from Massachusetts. There are Senators on the floor now who are members of the Judiciary Committee who have come in lately, and they can substantiate every word I have said.

Mr. CHILTON. Exactly. Let me repeat, the first time this matter was brought up before the Senate it came up regularly upon the calendar. The Senators who had opposed it stated to the Senate that they would oppose the bill, but they did not want to object to its consideration, and they did not object to its consideration. Other Senators upon this side objected to its consideration. After those Senators read the report they withdrew their objections. Then the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] made an objection at one time, but when he read the report he withdrew his objection.

I have talked with the Senators who opposed it and they do not occupy the position of the Senator from Michigan. I know what I am talking about. I know the Senators who voted against the bill in committee, and I know they have stated on this floor and to me that they do not want to object to the consideration of the bill. But the Senator has put it in a way that possibly my motive might be misconstrued. I do not want to bring up the bill now if the Senator knows of any absent Senator who wants to be heard. If he thinks he is the guardian of the conscience of Senators upon the other side, and wants to try to put me in the position of trying to get up the bill in some Senator's absence, I am perfectly willing to put the facts in the Record and submit to the rule. I am not afraid of any speeches that may be made when it comes up on its merits.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I desire to state that the records will show, that I have not put the Senator in a false light in any particular. I took his own statement that certain Senators had agreed not to object to it, but were against it, and I said the Senators were not here. Did any of them ever consent to have this bill considered in their absence?

Mr. CHILTON. I never talked to them about considering it in their absence. All I have done has been in the open. It has been up four or five times when the calendar was considered. If the Senator wants to start in to be the guardian of one side of the Senate, it is all right. I do not want to be under the suspicion of bringing up this bill in the absence of anyone who wants to be here when it is considered. But those Senators have spoken on this floor themselves. They said here they did not want to object to its consideration and were satisfied with being against it and let the Record show they were against it. Of course, the objection puts the bill over for the present, but I want it understood that I will press it for passage as the rules may permit.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I wish to ask consent of the Senate to consider a bill which came over from the House a day or two ago.

Mr. CHILTON. Is not the question to be put on my motion, Mr. President?

The VICE PRESIDENT. There was no motion. The Senator from West Virginia asked for unanimous consent.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I beg the Senator's pardon. I thought the matter had been concluded.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] objected.

Mr. CHILTON. Does the Senator object?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I object.

Mr. CHILTON. Well, the Senator, of course, can object, and I can not help myself, Mr. President.

STREET RAILWAY IN HAWAII.

Mr. VARDAMAN. This bill came over from the other House a day or two ago and was referred to the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico. It is for the purpose of amending an act extending the time for the building of a street railway in South Hilo, County of Hawaii, in the Territory of Hawaii, approved August 1, 1912. The contract expires on the 1st of August, and they have been unable to raise the money there with which to begin the construction of the road under the terms of the original contract. They are very anxious to have the bill passed to-day. It does not change the contract. The people of Hawaii desire it. The bill passed with practical unanimity—I understand, indeed, without any opposition at all—through the other House and through the committee of the Senate, if I may be permitted to refer to those matters. The report of the committee of the other House states that—

The city of Hilo contains about 9,000 inhabitants, and up to the present time it has been difficult to secure capital sufficient to begin operation.

The committee is advised that just recently responsible residents of the Hawaiian Islands have agreed to finance the building of the street railway in Hilo, and it appears to this committee that an extension of time of two years within which to commence the preliminary construction of the railway and the expenditure of not less than $20,000 is a reasonable period.

I have not had an opportunity, in the absence of the junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH], the chairman of the committee, to get the committee together; but I have conferred with the members of the committee who are in the city, and they universally approve this measure and direct me to report it and ask for its passage.

Mr. GALLINGER. Has the Senator from Mississippi reported the bill?

Mr. VARDAMAN. I am going to report it now, and I desire to have it passed, because this is the last day of the month, and there seems to be no objection to it anywhere. I should like to have immediate consideration of the bill. I think other Senators have been approached on the subject and who are familiar with the bill. I now report from the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico the bill (H. R. 16640) to amend an act entitled "An act granting a franchise for the construction, maintenance, and operation of a street railway system in the district of South Hilo, county of Hawaii, Territory of Hawaii," approved August 1, 1912, as amended by an act approved July 25, 1914, without amendment, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Mississippi asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THE CALENDAR.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I desire to ask unanimous consent that the consideration of the calendar may be proceeded with, beginning where we left off the other day, for the consideration of unobjected measures.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President—

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Just one moment. We have given a chance for the consideration of about half the calendar; and while I have not myself any bills on the lower part of the calendar, I know what it is to Senators to get unobjected bills acted on, and I think we ought to have a chance to dispose of them.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I desire to ask at what number on the calendar its consideration was left off.

The VICE PRESIDENT. At Calendar No. 509.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let us first ascertain what the Senator proposes to do with the request of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, what I desire will take but a moment.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I hope the request of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] will be put.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Georgia asks unanimous consent to proceed to the consideration of the calendar of unobjected cases, under Rule VIII, commencing at Calendar No. 509. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

THE STOP-WATCH SYSTEM.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I desire merely to make a short statement, which will take but a minute.

On July 25 we had under consideration the stop-watch system. I then made a statement regarding an instance which had come under my observation, to the effect that a man who was in the employ of the Mail Bag Division of the Post Office Department of the Government, and who had worked there for 20 years, had been put under the speeding-up process; that he was taken mentally ill; and that he was sent to the asylum. When I mentioned that the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] seemed to be very much surprised at it; but since that time—whether through his efforts or otherwise, I do not know—I have received a letter from the Postmaster General, in which he states that there has not been any stop-watch system whatever in that department. That prompted me to look up the matter, and I discovered that when I said "mail bag" I should have said "sail making." Hence I want to correct the statement to avoid putting the Post Office Department in an unpleasant plight.

I have here a statement of the Solicitor of the Department of Labor that one Mr. D. C. Manning, a sailmaker in the Mare Island Navy Yard, who had worked there for 20 years, had been put under the so-called speeding-up process and was afterwards declared incapacitated in consequence and was sent to the asylum. I have also some other matter of a similar nature which came under my observation at that time. I ask that I may present this without further reading, and I ask that it go into the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, it will be so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR,
OFFICE OF THE SOLICITOR,
Washington, April 2, 1915.

In re claim for compensation by D. C. Manning, sailmaker, Mare Island Navy Yard.

The above-mentioned claim has been specially submitted to this office with the following inquiry:

Did the claimant sustain an injury within the meaning of the act of May 30, 1908?

It appears from the record that on July 24, 1913, this claimant became incapacitated, and so continued until July 28, when he returned to work. After working three days he was again incapacitated, which continued until November 1, 1913, when he again returned to work, but after working with great difficulty for nine days he was again incapacitated, and has since that time been unable to return to work. The cause of the injury as given by claimant is "strain from rushing work under the Halsey system." The nature of the incapacity is given by one physician as "aortic incompetence." He further says that the disability will continue for life, and that claimant is suffering from "incurable heart condition."

Another physician who treated claimant afterwards gives the nature of disability as "dilatation of aortic orifice of heart, hypertrophy, and dilatation of heart. Aortic incompetence." The objective and subjective symptoms he gives as follows:

"Condition as noted in four above, producing dyspnea, palpitation, gastric disturbances, insomnia, general nervous irritability."

This physician also states that claimant, who is a man only 52 years of age, will be incapacitated for life. Under the heading of "Remarks," he further says that—

"It is possible and even probable that the type of work being done on day of accident suddenly and without warning produced the overstrain which resulted in dilatation of aortic orifice."

In response to a letter from the department asking claimant to explain fully the facts and circumstances connected with his incapacity, in a letter dated January 2, 1915, he says:

"(1) I worked in the sail loft at Mare Island as a first-class sailmaker, without losing a day from illness of any kind for about 20 years and had one of the best records for lots of good work, that any man could have."

"When Naval Constructor Evans took charge of the shops on the navy yard, he placed the men in the sail loft on a time-card system. Under this you had to give an account of every minute you were on a job. At the time this system was inaugurated we were given to understand that the men who did the most work would hold their jobs the longest. As I had a large family to support I could not afford to lose my job, so I worked hard and fast and faithfully, as usual, and I had understood that the sailmakers at Mare Island Navy Yard outclassed those at all other yards in the amount of work turned out for a given time under this system."

"When Mr. Evans left the navy yard he was succeeded by Constructor Fisher, who instituted the Halsey system, a system which is more severe than the time-card system as regards the amount of work expected from those working under it. At that time there were only a few men left in the sail loft, all the others having been eliminated as a result of the fast pace that a few of us had set. I might be asked why I did not quit when I found the work so trying. My answer to this, of course, is that I had a large family to support and I was not in a position to quit, and, besides, I felt I was physically strong enough to keep up the work. During this time the six other men who remained in the sail loft with me never worked steadily under the Halsey system the same as I did. They used to take long rests, and do so yet, as their records will show. If they did not they probably would be in the same condition as I am now. This system is so trying on the physical condition of a man who works under it that the larger shops refused to stand for it."

"On the afternoon upon which the injury occurred, I had just gotten started on my work on coaling bags when all of a sudden I felt my heart give out for the first time in my life. The rush had strained and ruptured my heart which had always been good and never before given me any trouble. If this was not the case or if my heart had previously been affected in any way, I certainly could not have made the record I did during my 20 years of work in the sail loft. At the time of the injury I managed to get to the navy-yard dispensary, where I remained the rest of the afternoon, and I have never been well or able to work since. I think this is all I can say under the first heading."

"(2) Under the Halsey system a time man, equipped with tablet, lead pencil, and stop watch, sat in front of you as long as the job lasted. His work was to hold the watch in his hand and take absolute account of every minute of your time for a day of eight hours, the object being to find out how long it takes a man to do a certain piece of work. Having done this, his duty was to report to headquarters, and as a result you were given a standard, which of course, is always a big day's work, as under such a system men will naturally do their level best in attempting to make the best record possible. In other words, the Halsey system is a system designed to get out of the man employed under it the greatest possible amount of work he can do in a given time, with the fear ever hanging over him that a failure to keep up to standard will cause him to lose his job."

"At the time of my injury I was making coaling bags. A coaling bag when finished is about 42 inches long and 8 feet in circumference. It is the hardest job in sail making. When filled it will hold 800 pounds of coal. It is made out of the heaviest kind of flax canvas. In making it, two thicknesses of canvas are used and a large tarred rope, including two slings is sewed around the top of the bag. In making it a 5-inch needle is used with large flax thread which requires the exercise of considerable strength to get it through the canvas. I had just started to sew on one of these bags when the injury occurred."

"(3) In the first place I thought that my injury would be only temporary and I did not expect to be permanently disabled. Then my case became so bad that I had to be removed to a San Francisco hospital for treatment. I kept thinking all along that I probably would get well in time and would be able to go back to work again. Had I recovered probably no claim would have been presented by me, but inasmuch as my injury has resulted in permanent disability, I finally decided to submit my claim some months ago."

Upon the foregoing facts the question arises whether the incapacity of claimant beginning July 24, 1913, and practically continuing until the present time, with prospects of further continuance throughout the life of claimant, is due to an injury in the course of employment, as contemplated by the provisions of section 1 of the act of May 30, 1908.

While the facts and conditions in this case may be somewhat different from other cases of a similar nature which have been heretofore passed upon in the administration of this act, yet the principle involved is not entirely new and has been previously considered.

One of the early cases wherein a similar question was considered was that of W. H. Merritt, an employee of the Puget Sound Navy Yard. The cause of the incapacity in that case was shown to be as follows:

"Severe strain due to overexertion in continuous climbing of stairways and ladders, in continuous rush of work, with crew of inexperienced men, causing extreme worry and exertion on part of myself in completing work properly."

The attending physician gave the character of injuries as follows:

"Heart strain resulting in acute dilatation of the heart."

In that case it was said:

"From a consideration of the record, it clearly appears that claimant is incapacitated for work; that just previous to his incapacity he was engaged upon work requiring of him an unusual strain and exertion, and that previously thereto he was an unusually vigorous man, as well as an energetic worker."

Upon a consideration of the facts in the case it was concluded that the case bore a striking similarity to the Gilmore case, and it was accordingly recommended for approval by the solicitor in an opinion dated May 4, 1910.

The Gilmore case, just referred to, arose in the Washington Navy Yard, and the cause of the injury was stated to be as follows:

"I was fitting and assembling 5-inch breech mechanisms on a hurry order for Mare Island Navy Yard for the Cincinnati and was working hard to complete order in time."

The attending physician certified that claimant was suffering from a right inguinal hernia which was at the site of a previous operation from which the results were good for a number of years, but that the recurrence dated from heavy lifting at his work in the navy yard. Claimant also gave a further statement concerning the surrounding circumstances, which was as follows:

"As near as I can trace it was from the work I was doing at the time. We had a lot of mechanisms to get ready for Mare Island Navy Yard and they had to be completed by the 1st of June. The work was very difficult, and I had to strain myself a good deal, and after I was through I felt that I was sore, and I remarked to my fellow workman at the time, 'I believe I hurt myself.'"

In an opinion by the solicitor dated April 11, 1910, it was said in concluding:

"In this case the facts as shown by the record indicate that the hernia was produced by something involved in the exertions of the claimant while employed on the unusual rush of work mentioned by him, in view of which it is clear that the principles laid down by the Attorney General in the Clark case are applicable."

It will be observed from the foregoing that so far as the circumstances surrounding the injury and subsequent incapacity in those two cases are concerned they are practically similar to those found in this case. Here was a strong, hearty, hard-working employee, who for about 20 years had been regularly employed by the Government and whose rating was first class. After putting in all those years of service and retaining his health, strength, and vigor, a new system was installed in the Government establishment by which the employee was kept under the highest nerve-racking tension by reason of the fact that a time man sat watching his every movement during every minute of an eight-hour workday. In addition to this it will be observed from claimant's letter, above quoted, that the work he was performing was of the heaviest and hardest kind to be performed in his occupation. Under such circumstances it is not a matter of surprise that his health should have been injured and shattered, for it certainly seems that such treatment of a man engaged in heavy manual labor, necessitating also the use of the intellect, would be sufficient to upset the mind of an ordinary individual and produce insanity.

From a consideration of the facts in this case, I am of the opinion that the same conclusion reached in the cases of Merritt and Gilmore should be adopted in this case and the claim approved for payment.

Respectfully submitted.

CHARLES L. SIMMS,
Acting Solicitor.
LOUIS F. POST,
Assistant Secretary.

Approved and referred to the Bureau of Labor Statistics.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I trust this will conclude the discussion of this subject.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I hope it may. I have no desire to press it further.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have a mass of material on the other side of the question, but I will not submit it to the Senate.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I only want to square myself with the Post Office Department. Having made a statement as to that department, when I find I am wrong I am brave enough to correct it; but my statement was correct in substance with reference to some other divisions.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Regular order, Mr. President.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 15494) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war, which had been reported from the Committee on Pensions with amendments.

The first amendment of the Committee on Pensions was, on page 1, after line 5, to strike out:

The name of Ellen Rohr, former widow of William E. Scott, late of Company B, Thirtieth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, after line 6, to strike out:

The name of Elizabeth Maurer, former widow of Frederick Neigeman, late of Company E, Sixteenth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, after line 8, to strike out:

The name of Emma A. Gasper, widow of John Gasper, late of Company C, Fifty-first Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, after line 21, to strike out:

The name of Marian Lemon, former widow of John C. Stockton, late of Company E, Thirtieth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, line 7, before the words "per month," to strike out "$50" and insert "$40," so as to make the clause read:

The name of Silas M. Abers, late of Company E, Thirty-sixth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 6, to strike out:

The name of Samuel Prisk, late of Company K, Eleventh Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, line 20, before the words "per month," to strike out "$20" and insert "$12," so as to make the clause read:

The name of Lodema C. Hodges, widow of Henry Hodges, late of Company H, Seventy-fourth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, after line 12, to strike out:

The name of Eliza E. Sutherland, widow of Richard L. Sutherland, late unassigned, Eleventh Regiment Missouri Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, after line 10, to strike out:

The name of Uriah T. Tapscott, late of Company I, Seventh Regiment, and Company E, Sixth Regiment, Kentucky Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President, I hope the Senate will disagree to this amendment. I simply wish to state to the Senate that I am personally acquainted with Mr. Tapscott, having known him for many years. I know his to be a very worthy claim. I spoke to the chairman of the Committee on Pensions [Mr. JOHNSON of Maine] regarding it, and he said he was perfectly willing that I should present the matter, and that he had no objection to the Senate disagreeing to the amendment. Mr. Tapscott practiced law in my court for a number of years, and I know personally that for the last three or four years he has been totally disabled and confined to his home most of the time. About all the property he has is a law library, which is not worth very much if he can not use it, and a modest homestead. He is 68 years old, and gave over two and one-half years of service to his country during the Civil War. No more worthy claim is contained in this bill. I, therefore, hope that the Senate will disagree to the amendment striking out this item from the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Pensions was, on page 16, line 15, after the surname "Schwing," to insert "widow of Joseph Schwing, late of Company I, One hundred and sixteenth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and," so as to make the clause read:

The name of Elizabeth Schwing, widow of Joseph Schwing, late of Company I, One hundred and sixteenth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and former widow of John Meyers, late of Company C, Sixteenth Regiment New York Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, line 23, before the words "per month," to strike out "$40" and insert "$50," so as to make the clause read:

The name of Hiram Morgan, late of Company F, Thirty-ninth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 17, after line 6, to strike out:

The name of Andrew G. Scott, late of Company F, Seventy-eighth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 17, after line 18, to strike out:

The name of Samuel Gooding, late of Company F, One hundred and seventieth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 20, after line 22, to strike out:

The name of Della C. Ross, former widow of Charles B. Clark, late of Company I, One hundred and twenty-second Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 21, line 17, before the words "per month," to strike out "$30" and insert "$24," so as to make the clause read:

The name of David E. Lindsey, late of Company F, One hundred and eighty-sixth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 21, after line 22, to strike out:

The name of Marion E. Laird, widow of George F. Laird, late of Company D, Sixth Regiment Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 25, after line 2, to strike out:

The name of Emma L. Edwards, former widow of Gilbert Keene, late of Company A, One hundred and forty-third Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 25, line 20, after the word "Kentucky," to strike out "Mounted," and in the same line, after the word "Volunteer," to insert "Mounted," so as to make the clause read:

The name of Elijah W. Taylor, late of Company C, Fifty-second Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Mounted Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 28, line 10, after the words "per month," to strike out "in lieu of that he is now receiving," so as to make the clause read:

The name of John M. Gray, late of Company B, Twentieth Regiment, and Company K, Eighty-sixth Regiment, Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month, the same to be paid to him under the rules of the Bureau of Pensions as to modes and times of payment, without any reduction or rebates on account of former alleged overpayments or erroneous payments of pension.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 26, after line 14, to strike out:

The name of Ellen Jane Taylor, former widow of George M. Taylor, late of Company F, Sixth Regiment Tennessee Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 26, line 19, after the surname "Wooley," to insert "widow of George C. Wooley, late of Company M, Ninth Regiment New York Volunteer Cavalry, and," so as to make the clause read:

The name of Mary J. Wooley, widow of George C. Wooley, late of Company M, Ninth Regiment New York Volunteer Cavalry, and former widow of Nelson Raymond, late of Company M, Ninth Regiment New York Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 28, line 4, before the words "per month," to strike out "$20" and insert "$24," and in the same line, after the words "per month," to insert "in lieu of that she is now receiving: Provided, That in the event of the death of Clara Porter, helpless and dependent child of said George W. Porter, the additional pension herein granted shall cease and determine: And provided further, That in the event of the death of Emma L. Porter the name of the said Clara Porter shall be placed on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, at the rate of $12 per month from and after the date of death of said Emma L. Porter," so as to make the clause read:

The name of Emma L. Porter, widow of George W. Porter, late of Company B, One hundred and thirty-fifth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving: Provided, That in the event of the death of Clara Porter, helpless and dependent child of said George W. Porter, the additional pension herein granted shall cease and determine: And provided further, That in the event of the death of Emma L. Porter the name of the said Clara Porter shall be placed on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, at the rate of $12 per month from and after the date of death of said Emma L. Porter.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 28, line 4, before the words "per month," to strike out "$20" and insert "$12," so as to make the clause read:

The name of Adelaide McGreevey, widow of James W. McGreevey, late of Company A, Second Regiment United States Veteran Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 28, after line 20, to strike out:

The name of Sarah C. Knights, widow of Jacob M. Knights, late of Company E, Seventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 33, line 20, before the word "Volunteer," to strike out "Mounted," and, in line 21, before the word "Infantry," to insert "Mounted," so as to make the clause read:

The name of James M. Minton, late of Company G, Seventh Regiment Tennessee Volunteer Mounted Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 34, line 18, before the words "per month," to strike out "$36" and insert "$30," so as to make the clause read:

The name of Henry Startzel, late of Company B, Second Battalion Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 38, line 9, after the word "Militia," to insert "Infantry," so as to make the clause read:

The name of Franklin Deal, late of Company C, One hundred and seventy-third Regiment Pennsylvania Drafted Militia Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 38, after line 22, to strike out:

The name of Rachel S. Flood, former widow of John B. Rice, late of Company K, Ninth Regiment Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

SPANISH RIVER BRIDGE, ALABAMA.

The bill (S. 6372) to authorize the counties of Baldwin and Mobile, Ala., their successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across Spanish River at or near the junction of Raft and Spanish Rivers was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER BRIDGE, AITKIN COUNTY, MINN.

The bill (H. R. 13835) to authorize the county commissioners of Aitkin County, Minn., and the town board of Logan Township, in said county and said State, to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River on the line between sections 26 and 27, township 149 north, range 25 west, fourth principal meridian, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, section 1, line 9, after the word "township," it is proposed to strike out "100 and," so as to make the section read:

That the county commissioners of Aitkin County, Minn., and the town board of Logan Township, in said county and said State, are hereby authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Mississippi River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at its intersection with the division line between sections 26 and 27, township 49 north, range 25 west, fourth principal meridian, in the county of Aitkin, in the State of Minnesota, in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, the effect of that amendment is simply to change the number "149" to "49." I will say that the Representative who introduced the bill advised me that that change would be necessary.

Mr. CLAPP. There was evidently a mistake in the text.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. SHEPPARD, the title was amended so as to read: "A bill to authorize the county commissioners of Aitkin County, Minn., and the town board of Logan township in said county and State, to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River on the line between sections 26 and 27, township 49 north, range 25 west, fourth principal meridian."

MISSOURI RIVER BRIDGE AT WILLISTON, N. DAK.

The bill (H. R. 14483) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near the city of Williston, N. Dak., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

YELLOWSTONE RIVER BRIDGE, MONTANA.

The bill (H. R. 14823) to authorize the Savage Bridge Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Yellowstone River in the State of Montana, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MISSOURI RIVER BRIDGE, MONTANA.

The bill (H. R. 14534) permitting the Missouri River Transportation Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Missouri River in the State of Montana was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BRIDGE ACROSS RED RIVER OF THE NORTH.

The bill (H. R. 15318) granting the consent of Congress to the village and township of Hendrum, Norman County, Minn., and the township of Elm River, Traill County, N. Dak., to construct a bridge across the Red River of the North on the boundary line between said States was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RED RIVER OF THE NORTH BRIDGE IN NORTH DAKOTA.

The bill (H. R. 15322) granting the consent of Congress to Traill County, N. Dak., to construct a bridge across the Red River of the North, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REFUND OF ADDITIONAL DUTIES COLLECTED ON PINEAPPLES.

The bill (H. R. 2184) providing for the refund of certain additional duties collected on pineapples was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to R. U. Delapenha & Co., of New York, $782.31, that being the amount of additional duties collected from them by the collector of customs at the port of New York on four shipments of pineapples imported in January, February, and March, 1913.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOSEPH J. SCOTT.

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 158) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Treasury to credit the stamp account of Joseph J. Scott, as collector of internal revenue of the first collection district of California, in the sum of $300, being the representative value of certain internal-revenue special-tax stamps which were lost from the office of the said collector, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to credit the stamp account of Joseph J. Scott, as collector of internal revenue of the first collection district of California, in the sum of $300, being the representative value of certain internal-revenue bowling alley and billiard table special-tax stamps which were lost from the office of the collector during the rush of business incident to the collection of the special taxes imposed by the act of Congress dated October 22, 1914, it having been definitely ascertained that the same have never been issued.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

A. S. WALKER.

The bill (H. R. 8697) for the relief of Collector of Internal Revenue A. S. Walker, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Treasury to credit A. S. Walker, the collector of internal revenue of the State of Texas, and his accounts with the sum of $683.33, being the value of internal-revenue stamps charged to him, stolen, lost, or accidentally destroyed at Austin, Tex., in the spring and winter of 1914.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RECLAMATION OF ARID LANDS.

The bill (H. R. 12365) to promote the reclamation of arid lands, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time and passed.

GOVERNMENT FOR PORTO RICO.

The bill (H. R. 9533) to provide a civil government for Porto Rico, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is a very long bill. I ask that it may go over for the present.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

YUMA RECLAMATION PROJECT, ARIZONA.

The bill (S. 5718) to provide for an auxiliary reclamation project in connection with the Yuma project, Arizona, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill has been reported from the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands with amendments.

The first amendment was, on page 1, line 4, after the word "heretofore," to insert "or hereafter," and, on page 2, line 3, after the word "therefor," to insert "That appurtenant water rights for lands in private ownership may be sold for not to exceed 160 acres to any person, at a price which shall be not less than the highest price per acre paid for public land sold under the provisions of this act, payment thereof to be made under the same terms as for public land under the provisions of section 2. Final water-right certificate shall not be issued to such private land until payment has been made in full. No works shall be constructed nor water delivered through any of the works of the Yuma project for the irrigation of any such private lands unless application has been made to purchase a water right for such land under the terms and provisions of this section," so as to read:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to set apart any lands in the State of Arizona heretofore or hereafter withdrawn under the reclamation law, in connection with the Yuma reclamation project, as an auxiliary reclamation project or unit, and sell, in tracts of not more than 160 acres to any one purchaser, the lands so set apart and believed to be susceptible of irrigation, at public sale under suitable regulations, for not less than the reasonable value per acre of the land plus the estimated cost per acre of reclamation works to be constructed for the reclamation of said lands so set apart plus the proportionate cost per acre of the works previously constructed and available therefor. That appurtenant water rights for lands in private ownership may be sold for not to exceed 160 acres to any one person, at a price which shall be not less than the highest price per acre paid for public land sold under the provisions of this act, payment thereof to be made under the same terms as for public land under the provisions of section 2. Final water-right certificate shall not be issued to such private land until payment has been made in full. No works shall be constructed nor water delivered through any of the works of the Yuma project for the irrigation of any such private lands unless application has been made to purchase a water right for such land under the terms and provisions of this section. The Secretary of the Interior at or prior to the time of sale, shall fix and determine (a) the reasonable value of the land per acre; (b) the estimated cost per acre of the works to be constructed; and (c) the proportionate cost per acre of the works previously constructed and available for the lands offered for sale.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 5, on page 4, line 14, to strike out "That all moneys received in excess of the estimated cost of construction, as fixed by the Secretary of the Interior, shall be paid into the reclamation fund established by the act of June 17, 1902," and in line 19, after the word "and," to insert "that any money remaining in said separate fund known as the auxiliary reclamation fund of the Yuma project, Arizona, after completion of the said auxiliary project and, so as to make the section read:

SEC. 5. Any surplus of funds paid on account of construction remaining after completion thereof, and that any money remaining in said separate fund known as the auxiliary reclamation fund of the Yuma project, Arizona, after completion of the said auxiliary project and after reimbursement of the reclamation fund for the proportionate share of works built by means of the latter fund shall be credited to the cost of operation and maintenance of the works of the said auxiliary project, and any balance thereof on hand when the said auxiliary project is taken over, as provided in section 4, shall be paid to the contracting organization.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SETTLERS UNDER RECLAMATION PROJECTS.

The bill (H. R. 10116) for the relief of certain settlers under reclamation projects, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that any person who has heretofore established residence upon and improved any tract of land within the irrigable area of the Yuma reclamation project in Arizona withdrawn from entry under the provisions of the reclamation law and acts supplementary thereto and amendatory thereof, and who shall have made valuable improvements upon such lands, and who has resided thereon in good faith for two years prior to the passage of this act, may make entry for the farm unit upon which his residence is established, and that such residence and improvements heretofore made shall be credited upon his final proof.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT TUCSON, ARIZ.

The bill (S. 889) for the erection of a public building in the city of Tucson, Ariz., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, with an amendment, on page 2, line 3, after the words "sum of," to strike out "$400,000" and insert "$325,000," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to contract for the erection and completion, in the city of Tucson, Ariz., of a suitable building, including fireproof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches, complete, for the use and accommodation of the United States post office, Federal court, land office, Immigration Service, and Forestry Bureau, upon ground already purchased by the Government for such purpose and now owned by the United States, the cost of said building not to exceed the sum of $325,000.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator from Arizona if that amount of money is really needed for the erection of a building in Tucson—$325,000?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. It happens to be my home town. I have taken the matter up fully, and my opinion is, and also the opinion of the postmaster in that city, that it will require more room than is given here. They have cut down the amount to $325,000.

Mr. GALLINGER. What is the population of Tucson?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. It is largely over 20,000. A railroad is opening up from the City of Mexico through the town, and is bringing an immense foreign mail there. We have almost every Federal office you can think of in that city. The matter has been thoroughly considered and is recommended by the department as essential.

Mr. GALLINGER. The amount is so much larger than we ordinarily appropriate that it attracted my attention.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Naturally so, and I appreciate the Senator's feeling about it. But in a growing country like Arizona, you see, we have so many various offices that the Government has to provide accommodations for them by renting buildings, and we are trying to get these offices all under one roof and cut out this rental. That is as cheaply as they can erect a suitable building.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator the population of this town.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I stated it to the Senator from New Hampshire as well as I could remember. I do not know accurately what it is.

Mr. KENYON. The Senator does not know?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. No.

Mr. KENYON. And this bill carries $300,000?

Mr. GALLINGER. Three hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars.

Mr. KENYON. It seems to me to be a pretty large appropriation for a town of twenty-five or thirty thousand people.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SAMUEL D. KINGSBURY.

The bill (H. R. 11679) for the relief of Samuel D. Kingsbury was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Treasury to issue a registered bond of the 3 per cent loan of 1908 to 1918, with interest from May 1, 1904, in favor of Samuel D. Kingsbury, a resident of Indianapolis, Ind., in lieu of United States 3 per cent coupon bond of said loan for $500, No. 148931, the said bond with coupons attached dated August 1, 1904, to maturity, inclusive, having been stolen: Provided, That the said Samuel D. Kingsbury shall first file in the Treasury Department a bond in the penal sum of double the amount of the principal and the unpaid interest coupon of the said bond in such form and with such sureties as may be acceptable to the Secretary of the Treasury to indemnify and save harmless the United States from any loss on account of the stolen bond hereinbefore described or the coupons belonging thereto.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ISAAC R. STROUSE.

The bill (H. R. 13027) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Treasury to credit the stamp account of Isaac R. Strouse, collector for the seventh internal-revenue district, in the sum of $14,570.42, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to credit the stamp account of Isaac R. Strouse, collector for the seventh internal-revenue district, in the sum of $14,570.42, being the representative value of certain internal-revenue stamps which were taken by an act of burglary on the night of October 17, 1915, from the safe in which the same had been properly deposited while in the care and custody of said collector.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

The bill (H. R. 11707) to amend an act entitled "An act to increase the pension of widows, minor children, etc., of deceased soldiers and sailors of the late Civil War, the War with Mexico, the various Indian wars, etc., and to grant a pension to certain widows of the deceased soldiers and sailors of the late Civil War," approved April 19, 1908, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Pensions with amendments.

The first amendment of the Committee on Pensions was, in section 1, page 1, line 4, after the word "widow," to insert

"now on the roll or hereafter to be placed on the pension roll and entitled to receive a less rate than hereinafter provided," and on page 2, line 3, after the word "widow," to insert "of an officer or enlisted man of the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States who served in the Civil War, the War with Mexico, or the War of 1812, now on the roll or hereafter to be placed on the pension roll and entitled to receive a less rate than hereafter provided," so as to make the section read:

That from and after the passage of this act the rate of pension for a widow, now on the roll or hereafter to be placed on the pension roll and entitled to receive a less rate than hereinafter provided, who was the lawful wife of any officer or enlisted man in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States, during the period of his service in the Civil War, shall be $20 per month, and the rate of pension for a widow of an officer or enlisted man of the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States who served in the Civil War, the War with Mexico, or the War of 1812, now on the roll or hereafter to be placed on the pension roll and entitled to receive a less rate than hereafter provided, who has reached or shall hereafter reach the age of 70 years, shall be $20 per month; and nothing herein shall be construed to affect the existing allowance of $2 per month for each child under the age of 16 years and for each helpless child; and all acts or parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed: Provided, however, That this act shall not be so construed as to reduce any pension under any act, public or private.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let that bill go over for the present.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

ADULTERATION OF FOOD PRODUCTS.

The bill (S. 3351) to amend the act of August 30, 1890, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Let that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

LANDS IN OREGON.

The bill (H. R. 10305) to grant certain lands to the State of Oregon as a public park, for the benefit and enjoyment of the people was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GEORGE W. TRAHY.

The bill (H. R. 1592) for the relief of George W. Trahey was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to George W. Trahey, of Bremerton, Wash., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $762 for damages suffered by him on account of an injury received by him while performing his duties as master shipwright at the navy yard, Puget Sound, on May 8, 1912, said injury resulting from gunshot wounds inflicted upon him by one John N. Haley, an employee of said yard, who at the time of such shooting was insane.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I think the facts in that case warrant an increase in the amount to be allowed, which I want to call very briefly to the attention of the Senate. Then I shall offer an amendment and let the Senate act upon it as its judgment may dictate.

Mr. OVERMAN. Have the committee allowed him one year's salary?

Mr. JONES. No; they just allowed him the damages that he received, or rather the expenses that he incurred during his illness. I will call attention briefly to the facts.

This man, as the bill says, was employed at the navy yard at Puget Sound, and a man by the name of Haley did the shooting. An exhibit found in the report says:

A few weeks prior to the time of the shooting, Haley, then coxswain of an oil-burning steam launch, of which Trahey had charge in the capacity of master of transportation, was overcome by the gaseous fumes from a defective oil burner and compelled to go home, where he was confined to his bed for some time.

Complying to an order to the effect that when an employee is injured in the performance of his duties and unable to appear in person after a period of 15 days to personally request compensation for injury, a regular printed form was filled out and sent to Haley for signature.

Crazed and still ill from the effects of the gas, Haley imagined that by means of this paper with his signature affixed Trahey was plotting to have him convicted of a charge of trying to obtain money from the Government under false pretenses and, after placing him behind the bars, to gain possession of the property belonging to him.

Acting under that sort of a hallucination, this man one morning came into the office where Trahey was at work and shot him twice, I think; once through the fleshy part of his left shoulder and neck, coursing downward and into and through his lungs.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think the bill had better go over, because no member of the Committee on Claims is present to defend its action. I think it had better go over until some member of the committee is present.

Mr. JONES. I hope the bill will not go over. If the Senate does not feel disposed to adopt the amendment I offer after stating the facts, it can reject it.

Mr. OVERMAN. I will not object if the Senator will let it go as recommended by the Committee on Claims, who investigated this matter.

Mr. JONES. I say if the Senate would not accept that, I would be willing to let it go as reported, if the Senate does not think that what I call to its attention warrants the increase. I will say frankly to the Senator that I understand that the subcommittee recommended a thousand dollars increase to the full committee, but the full committee rejected it.

Mr. OVERMAN. Is any member of the Committee on Claims here?

Mr. CLAPP. Several old members are here. We all know about it.

Mr. JONES. The bill was referred to the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA], who reported it to the full committee, and then reported it to the Senate.

Then, after Haley had shot Trahey, he turned and shot another man and killed him, and then came back, and while Trahey was on the floor he shot him again. This exhibit says:

Then, noticing that Trahey was still alive, he walked to the outer door, peered up and down the street, and returning to where Trahey still lay, unable to rise, pointed the gun at him within a few inches of his head. Endeavoring to reach for the gun, and realizing that he had not sufficient strength to grapple with the madman, Trahey exclaimed, "For God's sake don't shoot; you've killed me now. Give me a chance to say good-by to my family." Unmoved by the appeal, and with a fiendish glee at the helpless condition of his victim, he stood for a moment without speaking, and then answered Trahey by shouting, "I've got you now; I've got you where I want you," and an instant later fired point-blank into Trahey's face, the bullet taking effect within 2 inches of the spot where the first bullets had entered; then turning to the door, he passed quietly outside and around the end of the building.

The man finally, after a very intense struggle, recovered sufficiently to come back and do some work at the navy yard. The doctors, however, certify that he never will be himself again; that he is permanently disabled to a degree. Now, as I understand, the amount given by the committee of the House and reported by the Senate was the amount for the time that he lost and his doctor's expenses. I understand that the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] recommended to the full committee a thousand-dollar increase, and that was the amendment that I desired to offer to the bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, the committee in each House has recommended $762, and there is no man on this committee present to defend the action of that committee.

Mr. JONES. If the Senator feels that he ought to let it go over if I propose an amendment, I know this man needs this money and I do not want to cause a delay, so rather than do that—

Mr. OVERMAN. I have no doubt the Senator thinks that, and it may be all right. I am not objecting to it. I do think that some member of the Committee on Claims ought to be here to defend their action.

Mr. JONES. Of course there is no member of the committee here at present, and I understand the Senator's attitude. In view of the Senator's attitude I will not offer the amendment, and simply ask that the bill be passed as reported by the committee.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COURTS IN KANSAS.

The bill (H. R. 6914) to amend section 82, chapter 231, of the act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. THOMPSON. There is one correction, Mr. President, I desire to make. In line 1, on page 3, it will be noted that in copying the statute the word "district" has been left out where it referred to the district court. I move to amend so as to correct that omission.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 3, line 1, before the word "court," it is proposed to insert the word "district," so as to read:

The terms of the district court for the second division shall be held at Wichita on the second Mondays in March and September; and for the third division at Fort Scott on the first Monday in May and the second Monday in November. The clerk of the district court shall appoint three deputies, one of whom shall reside and keep his office at Fort Scott, one at Wichita, and the other at Salina, and the marshal shall appoint a deputy who shall reside and keep his office at Fort Scott, and the marshal shall also appoint a deputy who shall reside and keep his office at Kansas City.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

FORT NIOBRARA MILITARY RESERVATION, NEBR.

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 184) providing for one year's extension of time to make installment payments for the land of the former Fort Niobrara Military Reservation, Nebr., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to allow entrymen of such lands of the former Fort Niobrara Military Reservation, Nebr., made under the act entitled "An act to subject lands of the former Fort Niobrara Military Reservation and other lands to homestead entry," approved January 27, 1913, as are required to be paid for at their appraised values, one year extension of time in which to make each of the two remaining unpaid installments of the purchase price.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LANDS IN ARIZONA.

The bill (S. 865) granting to the State of Arizona public lands for the construction, repair, and maintenance of public roads, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, this bill as originally introduced by the senior Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] asks for a grant to the State of Arizona of 250,000 acres for the purpose of constructing, repairing, and maintaining public wagon roads. The committee extended it so as to include 11 other States, and in their generosity increased the amount from 250,000 acres to 500,000 acres each. In other words, with a sweep of the pen they gave away 5,750,000 acres of land in addition to what the original bill carried. I do not know but that we ought to give away all our public lands. I am inclined to think we are going to do it in the near future. We certainly will if we go on in this way. I will ask that the bill go over for the present.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Before that is done, in view of the statement made by the Senator from New Hampshire, and with the hope that he may relent from his present position—

Mr. OVERMAN. I call for the regular order.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I will state that I introduced a bill for 250,000 acres of land for Arizona. Every one of the public-land States having large tracts of desert lands, I felt with the Committee on Public Lands that they had just as much right to the grant of lands for that purpose as the State of Arizona.

I will say that it is the only part of the United States where more than four-fifths of the remaining valuable lands of the State are in the hands of the Federal Government in the shape of reservations of various kinds. All we have to do is to build roads through it. We can not get from one town to another without going through a Government reserve, an Indian reserve, a military reservation, a forest reserve, or the national monument, and the result is that it throws on the taxable property, consisting of what is land of the railroads and the mines and the cattle industry, the whole expense of the government, that could easily have been carried on if the State had been given its due proportion of its own resources at the time it was admitted into the Union.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me, I have heard the Senator make that statement, and it has impressed me very deeply, so far as Arizona is concerned; but does the same condition exist in all the other States?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Very much the same.

Mr. GALLINGER. Not in California, surely.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I shall leave that to the Senators from California, but I think there are enormous quantities of it reserved.

Mr. GALLINGER. In Colorado, I think, they have no scarcity of land for the support of the inhabitants; and have we not made appropriations of land to Montana at the present session of Congress?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Not that I know of.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have that impression.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I think the Senator probably refers to Nevada.

Mr. GALLINGER. I know we did to Nevada, and Nevada is here again.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I know; but that was to make Nevada equal in the grant.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think we had better let the bill go over.

DEALERS IN TOBACCO.

The bill (S. 5987) to amend subsection 11 of section 3244, Revised Statutes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That subsection 11 of section 3244, Revised Statutes, be amended by adding at the end of said subsection the following: Provided, That agents or salesmen of manufacturers of,

or wholesale dealers in, tobacco selling their product only to other dealers, either on order or by direct delivery, shall not be construed peddlers.

Mr. GALLINGER. In line 9 I move to insert the word "as" before "peddlers."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

J. L. DA ROZA ESTATE.

The bill (H. R. 13728) for the relief of the J. L. da Roza Estate (Inc.), of Elk Grove, Cal., was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to refund to the J. L. da Rosa Estate (Inc.), of Elk Grove, Cal., the sum of $1,158, being the internal-revenue taxes paid on 20 barrels of grape brandy destroyed by fire on the evening of November 18, 1911, and while stored in the designated place of deposit on the distillery premises in the custody of an officer of internal revenue and before being stamped with special bonded-warehouse stamps permitting removal to bonded warehouse.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ERSKINE R. HAYES.

The bill (H. R. 7062) for the relief of Erskine R. Hayes was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. Is there anyone here who can explain the bill? It is a very large sum of money. Let it go over for the present.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

J. W. DELLINGER.

The next bill on the calendar was the bill (H. R. 9621) for the relief of J. W. Dellinger.

Mr. OVERMAN. This bill was reported adversely, and I move that it be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

DE BARBIERI & CO.

The bill (H. R. 8318) for the relief of De Barbieri & Co., of Valparaiso, Chile, was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I desire to be heard briefly on these various claims. Last year near the close of the session there were two important claim bills before the Senate. One was a bill to pay a very long list of so-called Southern claims involving the taking of church and educational institutions by the Union Army during the Civil War, a class of claims that I think at this late day are very doubtful, to say the least, a class of claims that a distinguished Senator on the other side two years ago, I think it was, declared he did not believe one of them ought to be paid.

But that bill was before the Senate, and there was likewise a bill before the Senate that I had offered for the allowance of certain claims reported by the Court of Claims, which proposed to pay for extra labor in the navy yards of the country, a large number of workmen in quite a number of States, and also an amendment proposing to pay the claims of officers and employees of the United States navy yards growing out of the fact relating to whether or not the service was performed on land or on the sea.

The Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN] had charge of these bills, having reported them from the Committee on Claims. During the discussion I asked the Senator from Florida why we could not pass both bills, one embracing the Southern claims and the other embracing claims on the part of the employees in the navy yards, every one of which has been examined and reported by the Court of Claims. The Senator from Florida in reply said:

I would be glad to do so if we had time. I will say that I am in favor of the bill as reported from the committee. That is this bill as reported from the committee.

A further colloquy led the Senator from Florida to say two or three times that he was in favor of the bill, but he feared there was not time to pass it at the last session and there would be an opportunity to pass it at the present session.

I have reintroduced the bill, but it does not emerge from the Committee on Claims. I have made inquiry about it several times, and it seems it has been given its coup de grâce for the present.

Now, until we can get some action on that bill, at any rate for the purpose of calling attention to it, I desire to object to the present consideration of these bills commencing at the top of page 15, House bill 8380, and going down to the end of page 17, House bill 12742.

Mr. OVERMAN. I hope the Senator will make one exception.

Mr. GALLINGER. These are individual claims reported from the Committee on Claims. No one of them can be more meritorious than those embraced in the bill which the Senator from Florida gave me the assurance we would have an opportunity to consider at this session, but which manifestly we will not have an opportunity to consider. Why should those worthy claimants be denied their rights, and particularly under the circumstances that occurred in the Senate at the last session and the debate that ensued? I think we had better stop paying private claims until we can look after the claims of those worthy people whose claims have been examined by the court and after an examination have been recommended for payment.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President—

Mr. GALLINGER. I yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I was engaged and I did not hear the Senator's statement. What claim was it that the Senator spoke about?

Mr. GALLINGER. I will repeat to the Senator from Mississippi that at the last session, rather near the close of the session, there were two bills before the Senate reported from the Committee on Claims by the Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN]. One was a long list of claims for the alleged destruction of certain church and other property in the South during the Civil War. The other was for the payment of a list of claims for overtime payment in the navy yards of the country, all of which had been examined by the Court of Claims and reported favorably.

I asked the Senator from Florida at that time why we could not pass both those bills. One might have been denominated a Southern bill and the other a Northern bill, although the navy-yard claims are not all in the North by any means. The Senator from Florida expressed regret that probably we would not have time to do it as we were nearing the time of adjournment, a little nearer than we are, I apprehend, but I was given the assurance as far as a Senator would be willing to give it that those claims would be probably favorably acted upon at this session. They had been reported by the Senator from Florida.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I will say to the Senator, if he will pardon me a moment, that one of the inexplicable things that I find since I came to the Senate is the disposition on the part of Congress to deny to the people who have claims against the Federal Government the right to settle. I can not understand why any Senator would object to this great Government paying what it owes to its citizens. I do not care whether he lives in the North or lives in the South, the Government has assumed the obligation and it is quite as immoral for the Nation to repudiate its debts as it is for an individual man or woman.

In the list of claims which the Senator from New Hampshire objects to there is a little claim by a firm in Monroe County, Miss., for the killing of a horse by the agent of the Government. The probabilities are that those people are poor and they need that money. The South has not grown fat and rich from the war like the other sections of the country. The boll weevil, the low price of cotton, the falling off in our lumber trade, and other things that have happened there have caused our people to be in very straitened circumstances, and I can not see any excuse or justification for the Congress to refuse to pay the debts which the Government admittedly owes. I want to say to the honorable Senator from New Hampshire that I will take great pleasure in joining with him at any and all times to vote for any measure which provides for the settlement of the debts which the courts have adjudged that the Government owes.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I have several times stated on the floor of the Senate that if the Government was a private citizen and imprisonment for debt was in vogue in this country the Government would be in jail all the time. I will say now that in the debates last year I made the same suggestion in different language that the Government ought to pay the claims of its citizens. It is an outrage that the Government does not do it. Take this list of claims. The Senator says this is a small claim of a citizen of Mississippi. Here is a small claim:

NEW HAMPSHIRE.

- To Daniel C. Pearson, of Manchester, $1,667.58.
- To Emma M. Gay, widow and executrix of Thomas S. Gay, deceased, of New Hampshire, $477.65.
- To Elvira S. Hardy, widow of James L. Hardy, deceased, of Hillsborough County, $293.85.
- To Hazel O. Goodsoe, Perle E. Nute, Leonora W. Goodsoe, and E. Shirlet Rundlett, children of Augustus O. Goodsoe, deceased, of Rockingham County, $293.70.
- To S. Augusta Tasker, widow of George E. Anderson, deceased, of Belknap County, $48.59.
- To Marie S. Perrimond, widow of Xavier Perrimond, deceased, of Rockingham County, $60.

To Emma G. Jenness, widow of Thomas B. Gammon, deceased, of Rockingham County, $208.60.

These are claims that the Court of Claims have examined carefully and reported in favor of, and they ought to have been paid, but they are lingering here.

Mr. OVERMAN. Those claims ought to be paid; there is no doubt about that. But I want to call the attention of the Senator to one claim. It is not a war claim, but the claim of a private citizen. It is order of business 552. The sheriff, a county officer, was ordered to arrest an outlaw and was killed. His widow is a poor, helpless woman, and they have only allowed her his salary for one year.

Mr. GALLINGER. It ought to be paid, of course.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is the general law.

I ask the Senator, in view of this woman's age, as she is very old and feeble and she is only paid one year's salary of her husband, that he allow that bill to be passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SWANSON in the chair). The Chair understands the Senator from New Hampshire objects to the consideration of the bills he has indicated, from Order of Business No. 541 to Order of Business No. 582, inclusive.

Mr. GALLINGER. If I may be permitted to offer this list of claims, which have been adjudicated by the Court of Claims, as an amendment to the bill, and which I had the assurance would be considered at this session, but there does not seem to be any movement in that direction—if I may be permitted to offer that amendment to the Senate bill, I will not object to any of the claims bills.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Is there objection to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8318) for the relief of De Barbieri & Co., of Valparaiso, Chile.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. GALLINGER. I offer the claims which are embraced in Senate bill 661 as an amendment to the bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. Those were all found by the Court of Claims?

Mr. GALLINGER. Every one.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let those claims be added and the bill go to conference, and if they can not be adjusted in conference I shall make no complaint; but they were reported favorably last year by the Committee on Claims. Senate bill 661 is pigeonholed for some inscrutable reason, and it does not appear.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. What is the total amount? Will the Senator state it?

Mr. GALLINGER. I have not counted it up. It is not very large. There are a good many claims, but they are very small.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. And for overwork?

Mr. GALLINGER. For overtime.

Mr. OVERMAN. They were all found by the Court of Claims.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. They are legally entitled to the payment under the decision of the Court of Claims.

Mr. GALLINGER. Every one.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. They are adjudicated claims of these men.

Mr. GALLINGER. Every one of them.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Do I understand that the objection of the Senator from New Hampshire goes to House bill 10931, Order of Business No. 543?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire has offered an amendment to House bill 8318.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I understood that the Senator objected to the list of claims bills.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not made a formal objection, but stated that he possibly would object. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire to House bill 8318.

Mr. NEWLANDS. That amendment includes a number of claims.

Mr. GALLINGER. It does.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I have no objection to that, whatever. I quite agree with what the Senator from New Hampshire said regarding the inexcusable delay in paying these claims against the Government. I merely wish to call attention to a case of extreme neglect which I hope will soon be remedied, and that is the fact that the French spoliation claims have not yet been paid, though the claims have been pending for years and have been adjudicated by the Court of Claims. It will take only a million or two to close them out entirely. It seems to me that there ought to be a speedy action regarding those claims.

I wish to say in this connection that we have, during the past two or three years, been taking up claims arising out of the Civil War and adjusting those claims, whereas the French spoliation claims, which arose out of a previous war and have just as good a foundation as any claims that have ever been presented against the United States, have been delayed for years. Some of them are being adjusted after long struggles, but many of them remain still unsettled.

There we absolutely secured the release of this country from the claims that France was pressing against this country for a violation of its treaty by promising to adjust these claims against France for French spoliation and, having received the benefit of that treaty in securing an entire release from France, we have never yet paid over the consideration to American citizens who are entitled to payment under that treaty.

Mr. VARDAMAN. May I ask the Senator from Nevada whether those bills are on the calendar.

Mr. NEWLANDS. No; I am simply calling attention to them. They are not on the calendar. I understand that the Committee on Claims or the Committee on the Judiciary, I do not know which, is about to present a bill for the payment of numerous southern claims arising out of the late Civil War, and I wish to give notice that, so far as I am concerned, I shall oppose any adjustment of any other war claims unless coupled with an adjustment so as to meet these French spoliation claims.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If the Senator from New Hampshire will permit me to reply to the Senator from Nevada, there is no list of southern war claims now being prepared for payment that I know anything about. On the contrary, the last time we approved and paid some of those war claims, all limited to loyal citizens who stood by the Union during the war, the Crawford amendment was added, which repealed the Tucker Act and the Bowman Act, and all the litigation pending stopped. There has not been another hearing since that time before the Court of Claims to adjust any of those claims. So it would seem to be utterly impossible that anybody should have the claims prepared.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I will ask the Senator whether there is not a bill being urged by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] on that subject? I have been told there was.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not think so; but what we are urging is the repeal of the Crawford amendment, so that the Court of Claims may proceed with the hearing of these cases. That is one of the bills the Senator from Tennessee has charge of.

Mr. GALLINGER. With the permission of the Senators, I will resume, and will say that I think my purpose has been accomplished. I turn to the debate last year. The Senator from Florida said during the close of the debate:

I will undertake to have it considered.

That is, this bill that I offer as an amendment.

I do not know what the plans are here, but whether we get it immediately considered or not I have no doubt it will be considered.

Upon that statement, I permitted claims for churches and institutions of learning, I suppose, and various other kinds of property that it was said the Northern soldiers had destroyed to go through. It was practically with the understanding that this bill should also be considered. It has not only the recommendation of the Court of Claims, but it had the favorable report of the Committee on Claims last year; and I have endeavored to get it reported this year, but I think it has been stated that the committee does not hold meetings, or something of that kind.

Now, having accomplished my purpose in calling attention to this matter I will withdraw the amendment and allow these private claims to go through; but, Mr. President, this is not the last that will be heard of the claims embraced in that bill, because it is a wicked thing to keep these men, who served overtime in the workshops of the United States, and whose claims have been certified to as being correct in every respect, out of the small sums of money that would go to the various employees. I am sure if any general bill comes in here, such as the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] has suggested, it will not pass without very serious consideration.

I have been for a long time interested in the French spoliation claims. One of the wickedest things this Government has ever done was to make the promise to a foreign government that those claims would be paid, and then allow them to drag along for a hundred years or thereabout. The Senate has recognized their validity and their honesty, and has frequently passed bills for their payment as amendments to other bills, but elsewhere they were resisted and defeated.

I think we ought to begin to clean up, so far as we can, the obligations which the Government owes to its citizens. If a citizen owed the Government he would be called to very quick and strict accountability; but the Government can owe the citizen for a hundred years, and there is no relief apparently; certainly not any relief, except by an act of Congress.

I had an experience when I first entered public life as to the claim of a poor man from my town, just as honest a claim as any man ever had in the world. He had been here seven winters trying to get that claim allowed. It was only for $700 or thereabout. I took it up with vigor. I was a Member of the other House, and I was on the Committee on Claims. I got a favorable report; I succeeded in getting it passed through the House, and followed it here. I succeeded in getting it passed here and carried it to President Cleveland, who signed it. I attempted to take the news to my constituent, a poor fellow, who had hardly a dollar in the world, but found that he had died three days before and had been buried by charity. That was the first experience I had as a Member of Congress in reference to the manner in which the Government treats its citizens.

Now, Mr. President, I repeat I withdraw the amendment. I am not going to object to these claims unless I discover some objection to some individual claim as we go along.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I wish merely to add one word to what has been said by the Senator from New Hampshire. As I said before, when I first entered Congress, more than 20 years ago, I was brought face to face with the French spoliation claims and made a study of them at that time, while I was a Member of the House of Representatives. I became convinced of their absolute justice, and that the failure to pay them was a disgrace to the United States Government. I have seen those claims pressed repeatedly in Congress, some of them passing and some of them failing through the objection either of one House or the other. I have observed, particularly where new Members come to the House or new Members come to the Senate and the matter is presented as a new question, the old subject of the French spoliation claims has to be fought over again. Some two or three years ago we had a two or three days' debate on the subject, and the matter was then most thoroughly presented. Now, I am told that as a result of this spasmodic action of Congress, lasting over a period of nearly 100 years, most of those claims have been paid, and that there now is a balance of only about one million or two million dollars of claims which have been found to be just claims by the court established for that purpose which have not been paid. It seems to me that Congress should at a very early date take up those claims and satisfy them.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President—

Mr. OVERMAN. Regular order!

Mr. VARDAMAN. Did I understand the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] to say that he was going to object to any other claims being acted on?

Mr. OVERMAN. I called for the regular order, Mr. President.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I have the floor, I suppose.

Mr. OVERMAN. Notwithstanding that, I can call for the regular order. I do not mean to take the Senator off the floor; but I understood the Senator from Nevada to say that he had not objected, and I should like to get on with the calendar.

Mr. GALLINGER. Does the Senator from Mississippi allude to me?

Mr. VARDAMAN. No, I was speaking to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS]; but I yield the floor, Mr. President.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN SIMPSON.

The bill (S. 3743) to reimburse John Simpson was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay $100 to John Simpson, of Pulaski County, Ky., to reimburse him for damages arising from the destruction of a creek ford due to backwater created by the construction of Lock and Dam No. 21 on the Cumberland River; which payment is recommended to Congress by the Chief of Engineers, with a renewed recommendation therefor, in his annual report for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915 (pp. 1085, 2837, and 2838), which is printed as House Document, No. 91, Sixty-fourth Congress, first session.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DRS. BLAIR AND BLAKE AND OTHERS.

The bill (H. R. 10931) for the relief of Drs. Blair and Blake, Dr. W. J. Maxwell, Dr. R. C. Evans, and J. B. Blalock was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay $375 to Drs. Blair and Blake, $25 to Dr. W. J. Maxwell, $25 to Dr. R. C. Evans, and $4.15 to J. B. Blalock, all of Sheffield, Ala., in full payment of all claims and demands for surgical service rendered and material supplied by them to employees of the United States Government who were injured by a premature dynamite explosion while in the performance of duties assigned to them by the Government engineers and while engaged in channel work in the Tennessee River at Cogers Island near Smithsonia, Ala., on the 25th of June, 1914.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ELLA SLONE.

The bill (H. R. 9378) for the relief of Ella Slone was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to Ella Slone, of Pikeville, Pike County, Ky., widow of John Slone, who, while in the discharge of his duties as a posseman, having been duly summoned by and acting with J. M. Potter, a deputy United States marshal, was murdered on April 4, 1913, by violators of the United States internal-revenue laws, $1,000, on account of the murder of her said husband.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BARKHAUSEN COAL & DRY DOCK CO., GREEN BAY, WIS.

The bill (H. R. 11293) for the relief of Barkhausen Coal & Dock Co., of Green Bay, Wis., was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to the Barkhausen Coal & Dock Co., of Green Bay, Wis., $163.17, that being the sum allowed to the company by the Secretary of the Interior to cover cost of coal and hauling charges thereon, for the Pine Ridge Indian School and Agency, S. Dak.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EASTERN TRANSPORTATION CO.

The bill (H. R. 15635) for the relief of the Eastern Transportation Co., of Baltimore, Md., was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The bill had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 4, after the word "Company," to strike out "of Baltimore, Md.," and in line 6, after the word "State of," to strike out "Maryland" and insert "Delaware," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the claim against the United States of the Eastern Transportation Co., a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Delaware, with its principal place of business in the city of Baltimore, State of Maryland, owner of the barge John T. Donohue, for damages alleged to have been caused by collision between the said barge and the United States steamer C-2, in Chesapeake Bay, off Smiths Point, on the 28th day of March, 1913, may be sued for by the said Eastern Transportation Co. in the United States district court for the district of Maryland, sitting as a court of admiralty and acting under the rules governing such court, and said court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine such a suit and to enter a judgment or decree for the amount of such damages and costs, if any shall be found to be due, against the United States in favor of the said Eastern Transportation Co. upon the same principles and measures of liability as in like cases in admiralty between private parties, and with the same rights of appeal: Provided, That such notice of the suit shall be given to the Attorney General of the United States as may be provided by order of the said court, and it shall be the duty of the Attorney General to cause the United States attorney in such district to appear and defend for the United States: Provided further, That the amounts of the losses alleged to have been sustained by the master and crew of the barge John T. Donohue may be included in such decree: Provided, That said suit shall be brought and commenced within four months from the date of the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill read the third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "An act for the relief of the Eastern Transportation Co."

HEIRS OF GEORGE W. CROFT.

The next bill on the calendar was the bill (H. R. 6156) for the relief of heirs of George W. Croft, which had been reported adversely from the Committee on Claims.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the bill will be indefinitely postponed. The Chair hears none.

BORDEN H. MILLS.

The bill (H. R. 8325) for the relief of Borden H. Mills was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to Borden H. Mills, United States commissioner at Albany, in the northern district of New York, $84.50, in payment of the amount of fees earned by him as United States commissioner while performing the duties of such office in connection with the cases of the United States against Lee Ning, Yee Quong, Charles Wong, James Bennett, Arthur Smith, and Lee Ning, alias Charles Lee, the sum being the amount disallowed by the Auditor for the State and Other Departments on the settlement of the quarterly accounts of the commissioner for the quarter ending June 30, 1915.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN H. JANSSEN.

The bill (H. R. 3896) for the relief of John H. Janssen was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay $1,355, in full compensation for all claims, to John H. Janssen, of Woonsocket, S. Dak., found and held to be due him by the Secretary of the Interior under contract of January 15, 1907, for drilling two 6-inch artesian wells on the shores of Lake Andes, in the Yankton Indian Reservation, in Charles Mix County, S. Dak.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

M. KONDO FISHERIES CO.

The bill (H. R. 9172) for the relief of the M. Kondo Fisheries Co. was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to the M. Kondo Fisheries Co., of San Diego, Cal., $7, that being value of rope and anchor which was loaned to the officers in charge of the launch Cape d'Ano, belonging to the United States Immigration Service, and was lost at sea when that vessel was wrecked on April 30, 1915.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CYNTHA RAMEY.

The bill (H. R. 9377) for the relief of Cynthia Ramey was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to Cynthia Ramey, of Praise, Pike County, Ky., widow of Marion Ramey, who while in the discharge of his duties as a posseman, having been duly summoned by and acting with J. M. Potter, a deputy United States marshal, was murdered on April 4, 1913, by violators of the United States internal-revenue laws, $1,000 on account of the murder of her husband.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SARAH S. PLANK.

The bill (H. R. 13785) for the relief of Sarah S. Plank was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay $1,000 to Sarah S. Plank, widow of Ed. S. Plank, who was killed in the discharge of his duties as a United States officer in seeking to enforce the United States laws in the Indian country.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LILLIE B. RANDELL.

The bill (H. R. 6180) for the relief of Lillie B. Randell was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay $975 to the said Lillie B. Randell or her duly authorized agent: Provided, That before paying the same the said Lillie B. Randell shall deliver to the Secretary of the Treasury a good and sufficient bond, with the surety to be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, to indemnify the United States against all losses, costs, or damages incurred by reason of making the said payment.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the preamble will be disagreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask that the Senate return to Calendar No. 553, being the bill (H. R. 6180) for the relief of Lillie B. Randell. The preamble having been rejected, the words "the said," in line 5, on page 4, and the same words in line 7 on that page, should be stricken out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the vote by which the bill was ordered to a third reading and passed will be reconsidered. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

LETITIA W. GARRISON.

The bill (H. R. 6181) for the relief of Letitia W. Garrison, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay $375 to the said Letitia W. Garrison or her duly authorized agent; but before paying the amount the said Letitia W. Garrison shall deliver to the Secretary of the Treasury a good and sufficient bond, with the surety to be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, to indemnify the United States against all losses, costs, or damages incurred by reason of making the said payment.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was rejected.

Mr. GALLINGER subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask to recur to calendar No. 554, being House bill 6181, for the relief of Letitia W. Garrison. The preamble of that bill was also stricken out, and as a consequence the words "the said," in line 5, on page 3, and also in line 7, page 3, should be stricken out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection the vote whereby the bill was ordered to a third reading, and passed, will be reconsidered; and the amendments proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire, in the absence of objection, will be agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

SAMUEL H. WALKER.

The bill (H. R. 9994) for the relief of Samuel H. Walker was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Samuel H. Walker $480, in full compensation for injuries received by him while performing his duties as a laborer in the fireroom of the General Land Office, Department of the Interior.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ESTATE OF JOHN M. WAPLES.

The bill (H. R. 11749) for the relief of the administrator of the estate of John M. Waples was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to the administrator of the estate of John M. Waples, deceased, $130.43, being the amount of accrued pension due the deceased from June 4, 1915, until the day of his death, December 5, 1915.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

OLAF NELSON.

The bill (H. R. 5411) for the relief of Olaf Nelson was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Olaf Nelson $1,200, in compensation for injuries sustained on the Panama Canal while in the discharge of his duties.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COWDEN &amp; COWDEN.

The bill (H. R. 1161) to pay Cowden & Cowden, of Amory, Monroe County, Miss., for the loss of a horse while being used by the Department of Agriculture, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Cowden & Cowden, of Amory, Monroe County, Miss., $135, in full payment for a horse that died while in use by employees of the Department of Agriculture.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MRS. JOSEPH CAMERON.

The bill (H. R. 2554) for the relief of Mrs. Joseph Cameron was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Mrs. Joseph Cameron, widow of Joseph Cameron, $242 for physical and personal injuries sustained by Joseph Cameron while in the employ of the United States Government near Minnehaha Falls, Mississippi River, Minn., and while he was working on Government Dam No. 1 on August 9, 1907.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GEORGE H. HAMMOND.

The bill (H. R. 5185) for the relief of George H. Hammond was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to George H. Hammond, of Dekalb County, Ga., for injuries received in the performance of his duties under the postmaster and in the post-office building in the city of Atlanta, Ga., $1,200.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DR. E. E. JOHNSON.

The bill (H. R. 5729) for the relief of Dr. E. E. Johnson was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Dr. E. E. Johnson, of Cortez, Colo., $512, for expenses incurred and services rendered as physician and surgeon to injured members of deputy marshals in the arrest of renegade Indians at Bluff City, Utah.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

UNION OIL CO.

The bill (H. R. 9173) for the relief of the Union Oil Co., was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to the Union Oil Co., at San Diego, Cal., $10, being the value of one barrel numbered 40467, which was loaned to the officers in charge of the launch Cape d'Ano, belonging to the United States immigration Service, and was lost at sea when that vessel was wrecked on April 30, 1915.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

C. E. ANDERSON.

The bill (H. R. 1975) for the relief of C. E. Anderson was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill has been reported adversely, and, without objection, will be indefinitely postponed.

THOMAS J. BYE.

The bill (H. R. 11377) for the relief of Thomas J. Bye was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Thomas J. Bye, of Sault Ste. Marie, Mich., $500, in full settlement of his claim against the Government of the United States by reason of the loss of his team of horses through drowning while employed on Government work under the supervision of Government officials.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

W. W. BLOOD.

The bill (H. R. 2209) for the relief of W. W. Blood was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to W. W. Blood, of Greenville, Plumas County, Cal., $439.09, in full payment for all work and labor done and performed by him for the Government of the United States or its official representatives at the Indian school near Greenville, Indian Valley, Plumas County, Cal., during the year 1907.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HEIRS OF ELIZABETH BRUCE.

The bill (H. R. 8108) for the relief of the legal representatives and heirs of Elizabeth Bruce, deceased, widow of the late John H. Bruce, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to the legal representatives and heirs of Elizabeth Bruce, deceased, widow of the late John H. Bruce, of Rowan County, Ky., $155, pay and bounty due John H. Bruce for services rendered as a private in Company G, Twenty-second Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Infantry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WALLACE L. BELL.

The bill (H. R. 12267) for the relief of Wallace L. Bell was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Wallace L. Bell $160, for 32 days' automobile hire for the use of the Government as special agent in collecting statistics for the Bureau of the Census in district No. 24, in Georgia, in March and April, 1914.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CLAIMS OF SETTLERS IN SHERMAN COUNTY, OREG.

The bill (H. R. 2534) to adjudicate the claims of certain settlers in Sherman County, Oreg., was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay the following several sums of money to the respective claimants, their heirs, assigns, or legal representatives; the amount to be paid to each settler, his heirs, assigns, or legal representatives:

To Harry Hill, $1,255.
To Hiram E. Powell, deceased, $2,000.
To Otis B. Messinger, $2,000.
To David W. Huff, deceased, $1,440.
To Eliza J. Powell, $1,265.
To Luther E. Hill, $800.
To Alva B. Craft, $1,290.
To Benjamin E. Dougherty, $1,600.
To Theron S. Hill, deceased, $2,000.
To James H. Clements, $1,360.
To Absalom B. Allison, $1,375.
To Edgar Lewis, $1,180.
To Elizabeth A. Bates, $1,385.
To Lena Wegener, $1,280.
To Rufus H. King, $2,000.
To Charles K. Huff, $1,600.
To Grace T. Hill, $1,625.
To John B. Coon, $1,426.41.
To Merit F. S. Henton, $1,500.
To Robert L. Allison, $1,618.
To Clark E. Brown, $1,515.
To Reuben D. Allison, $1,450.
To Adolph Perrault, $2,000.
To Lester A. Heath, $1,830.

To Warren D. Marshall, $1,970.
To Anastasse Perrault, $1,460.
To John Willet, $1,190.
To John W. Willis, $800.
To Diedrich Patjens, deceased, $850.
To Ellen E. McLeod, now Ellen E. Somer, $800.
To George M. Simpson, $800.
To Henry Nachand, $800.
To Cascious W. Fairchild, $855.
To Frank Watkins, deceased, $560.
To William Daugherty, deceased, $1,039.
To Alice M. Coats, deceased, $570.
To Thomas J. Farra, deceased, $1,760.
To Edgar G. Messinger, $1,760.
To Louisa M. Clements, $1,600.
To George D. Clements, $1,605.
To William Krusow, $1,899.72.
To Thomas F. Cochran, $300.
To George Meader, $2,000.
To William H. Andrews, $2,000.
To Charlie W. Barzee, $1,900.
To Joel H. Reed, deceased, $1,370.
To John O. Powell, $1,400.
To Abraham C. Huff, $1,400.
To John D. Wilcox, $1,200.
To Eugene W. Garlick, $1,400.
To Goodrich D. Boardman, $700.
To Elisha T. Vallandigham, $1,080.
To Frank A. Sayrs, $1,900.
To William S. Powell, as transferee of George W. Mark, $1,590.
To Thomas Macken, $1,120.
To James Macken, $1,200.
To Job M. Powell, deceased, $2,000.
To Leon V. Moore, $1,540.
To Fred Krusow, $1,255.
To Uriah Serviss, $2,000.
To Alexander Scott, $1,350.
To Thomas Walsh, deceased, $480.
To Johan Janssen, $1,550.
To Elmer F. Heath, $1,600.
To John Fulton, $1,200.
To Carl Peetz, $2,000.
To John W. Messinger, $2,000.

But no agent, attorney, firm of attorneys, or any persons engaged heretofore or hereafter in preparing, presenting, or prosecuting this claim shall, directly or indirectly, receive or retain for such service in preparing, presenting, or prosecuting such claim, or for any act whatsoever in connection therewith, an amount greater than 5 per cent of the amount allowed under this bill to the person for whom he has acted as agent or attorney, and no purchaser or assignee of the claims of any of the said claimants shall receive therefor a greater amount than was paid to the claimant for his assignment.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I think that I might with propriety offer the amendment to which I called attention a little while ago to this bill, because this bill pays the claims of at least 50 separate individuals. However, I will not offer it, but will venture to suggest that this bill itself is a very good precedent for paying the class of claims to which I have called attention.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MATHILDA HESTERMAN.

The bill (H. R. 11660) for the relief of Mathilda Hesterman was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Mathilda Hesterman, widow of Herman Hesterman, $1,248, on account of the death of Herman Hesterman, which was caused by the negligence of employees of the United States Government at the Brooklyn Navy Yard, in the State of New York, on or about the 28th of February, 1913.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GEORGE W. GAMBLE.

The bill (H. R. 2814) for the relief of George W. Gamble was announced as next in order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill has been reported adversely from the committee. The question is, Shall the bill be indefinitely postponed?

The bill was indefinitely postponed.

ELIZABETH M. DODGE.

The bill (H. R. 7423) for the relief of Elizabeth M. Dodge was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay $1,000 to Elizabeth M. Dodge, widow of Wallace Dodge, in full of all claims she may have against the Government for the death of Wallace Dodge while employed by the United States as teamster in the Quartermaster's Department at the Presidio of Monterey, Cal., where on the 9th of June, 1909, he was shot and killed by a stray bullet from the gun of some member of Troop D, Fourteenth Regiment United States Cavalry, at target practice.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GEORGE B. HUGHES.

The bill (S. 4277) for the relief of George B. Hughes was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The bill had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to George B. Hughes, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,000, as compensation for the loss of his right arm while in the performance of his duties as an electrician in the Government Printing Office during the month of January, 1899.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ALBERT L. REAM.

The bill (S. 2704) for the relief of Albert L. Ream, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The bill had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 2, line 5, after the word "of," to strike out "$25,000" and insert "$3,650," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That there shall be paid, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Albert L. Ream, the sum of $3,650, which, when received by him, shall be in full payment and discharge of all demands of every kind by him against the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

NABOR AND VICTORIA LEON.

The bill (H. R. 5096) for the relief of Nabor and Victoria Leon was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay $780, in such portions and under such regulations as the Secretary of Labor may prescribe, to Nabor Leon and Victoria Leon, being, respectively, the father and mother of Rinaldo Leon, an employee of the United States, who was drowned in the course of his employment on construction work in the reclamation of arid lands at Granite Reef, on Salt River, Maricopa County, Ariz., on February 17, 1909, such sum being the amount to which the above relatives would have been entitled under the provisions of the act of Congress of May 30, 1908, but which they did not receive because the required affidavit of claim was not filed on their behalf within 90 days after the death, as required by section 4 of the said act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JAMES HOUYDE.

The bill (H. R. 3255) for the relief of James Houyde was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to James Houyde, of Morton, Wash., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $858, to compensate him for damages on account of the death of his son, Joseph Houyde, who was killed in the line of his duty while an employee of the United States Forest Service in the Rainier National Forest, and the said sum is hereby appropriated for the purpose above set forth.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM A. HUTSON.

The bill (H. R. 10858) for the relief of William A. Hutson was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to William A. Hutson, of Philadelphia, Pa., the sum of $720, in compensation for injuries received by him while an employee of the Bureau of Standards of the Department of Commerce and Labor in the year 1906.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FRANK P. SAMMONS.

The bill (H. R. 9082) for the relief of Frank P. Sammons was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It appropriates the sum of $100, to be paid to Frank P. Sammons, of Davenport, Iowa, as compensation for injuries received by the said Frank P. Sammons while an employee of the United States Government at the Rock Island Arsenal, on August 24, 1904.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARTHA A. MOFFITT.

The bill (H. R. 11304) for the relief of Martha A. Moffitt was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Martha A. Moffitt, of Randolph County, N. C., widow of E. A. Moffitt, who, while in the discharge of his duties as deputy collector, was murdered by Lee Turner, a violator of the United States internal revenue laws, on the 4th day of December, 1896, the sum of $1,500, on account of the murder of her said husband while in the service of the Government of the United States.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LOUIS JONES.

The bill (H. R. 10642) for the relief of Louis Jones was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Louis Jones $61.50, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for injury sustained on the 28th day of August, in the year 1906, while employed by the United States Government in the Government arsenal at Rock Island, Ill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THOMAS P. SORKILMO.

The bill (H. R. 5864) for the relief of Thomas P. Sorkilmo was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move to strike out the words "there being no dispute about the said sum being due thereon."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, lines 9 and 10, it is proposed to strike out the comma and the words "there being no dispute about the said sum being due thereon," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,848.38 to Thomas P. Sorkilmo, of Dell Rapids, S. Dak., for the balance due him for the construction of a brick hospital at the Canton Indian Insane Asylum under his contract of August 1, 1913.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

GOTTLIEB SCHLECT AND OTHERS.

The bill (H. R. 12742) for the relief of Gottlieb Schlect and Maurice D. Higgins and for the relief of the heirs and legal representatives of Valentine Brasch, was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the bill does not state what these payments are for. Let that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

IMPROVEMENT OF CHANNELS.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 110) providing for method of improving channels giving access to military reservations or fortifications was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that whenever, in the opinion of the Secretary of War, the work of dredging or improving any channel of any navigable water for the purpose of giving access to any wharf on a military reservation or fortification, including any dredging in front of or along such wharf, under any appropriation available for the purpose, can be more economically done by the use of any Government dredge or other plant purchased for river and harbor improvement, or by combining the same with any authorized project for river and harbor improvement, the Secretary of War may, in his discretion, authorize such use or combination upon the reimbursement of the river and harbor appropriation for the actual cost of the work, as determined by the Chief Engineers with the approval of the Secretary of War.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

STEAMBOAT INSPECTION SERVICE.

The bill (S. 6540) to repeal section 4411, Revised Statutes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask that that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I explain the bill to the Senator making the objection?

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will explain it, I shall be glad to have him do so.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think I can do so. From its general title one would not know just what is meant by the bill. Section 4411 of the Revised Statutes requires the publication each year by the Department of Commerce of a list of officers of the merchant steam, motor, and sail vessels. This is a copy of the publication which I hold in my hand. It costs $1,737.53 each year to print this list, and there is no demand for it.

There is no demand for it at all. Anyone at all interested to know who is licensed in that service can obtain the information by simply inquiring of the Department of Commerce, and the requirement of the law to publish this list annually is simply wasting that much money.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is simply a list of the officers?

Mr. FLETCHER. That is all; a list of the officers of the merchant steam, motor, and sail vessels.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will withdraw the objection.

Mr. FLETCHER. The department recommends that it be discontinued.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to repeal section 4411 of the Revised Statutes.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COST OF LIVING IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 91) authorizing and directing the Department of Labor to make an inquiry into the cost of living in the District of Columbia, and to report thereon to Congress as early as practicable, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes and directs the Department of Labor to make an inquiry into the wages paid to wage earners and the cost of living of the same in the District of Columbia, and to report thereon to Congress as early as practicable, and appropriates for this purpose the sum of $6,000; and also provides that the special agents and clerks employed under this appropriation shall be selected from among the persons eligible on any civil-service register.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I want to offer an amendment to this resolution, and I will explain it by saying that this resolution was passed by the House. The amendment that I desire to offer makes it conform to a resolution on the same subject which has been reported from the Committee on Education and Labor of the Senate after a hearing was had, and it is also reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia.

I should say, however, that the report of the Committee on the District of Columbia was on the present resolution. The amendment is to strike out, in lines 4 and 5, the words "the wages paid to wage earners, and," and then the words "the same," on line 5, and to insert "wage earners." That will make this resolution substantially conform to the resolution of the Senate that was reported from the Committee on Education and Labor.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, line 4, it is proposed to strike out the words "the wages paid to wage earners, and," and on line 5, after the words "cost of living of," to strike out the words "the same" and insert the words "wage earners," so as to read:

That the Department of Labor be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to make an inquiry into the cost of living of wage earners in the District of Columbia, and to report thereon to Congress as early as practicable, and that there be appropriated for this purpose the sum of $6,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator from Iowa if, in his opinion, there is a real necessity for this appropriation of money for the investigation specified in the joint resolution?

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I am interested in the same inquiry. What good will it do?

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, hearings were had before a subcommittee of the Committee on Education and Labor, of which the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] was chairman. Evidence was introduced, and that subcommittee felt that there was a necessity for this investigation. Congress some years ago passed a bill introduced by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] limiting the number of hours that women could work in the District of Columbia. That is not of any particular importance unless there is also found out, by investigation, the cost of living of the wage earners.

This measure does not apply to anything but the wage earners. The Department of Labor have indorsed this joint resolution because requests are made upon them for the result of the surveys as to the cost of living of the wage earners in the United States and in the District of Columbia. A bill was considered in the House with relation to fixing a minimum wage for wage earners. There was not sufficient information for an intelligent discussion of that bill.

Mr. President, we have had discussion here on the floor showing that in this country the average wage of the man who labors is something over $500 and less than $600 a year. We are appropriating large sums of money for every kind of thing here. This is merely an appropriation of $6,000 to get at the condition of the wage-earning classes, and is for the benefit of the people who toil. The purpose ultimately, I assume, after this investigation, will be the introduction of a bill for a minimum wage for wage earners in the District of Columbia.

This proposal has received the approval of the Federation of Labor and various labor organizations as a general survey of labor conditions. I do not see why there should be any particular objection to it. It has passed the House, and has received the consideration of two committees of the Senate. I hope the Senator from New Hampshire will not object to it. It is probably the last opportunity to dispose of it. It has been on the calendar for some time.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I inquired for information. My observation is that so far as the cost of living in the District of Columbia is concerned, it is less than it is in the little city in which I live in New Hampshire; and I wondered whether it was necessary to select the District of Columbia for an investigation along those lines. I think it will be "love's labor lost" when we get through inquiring about the cost of living. Again, so far as wages are concerned in this District, it is a fact that it is more difficult to adjust a minimum wage scale in the District of Columbia than any other place that I know of. There is a great deal of semiworthless labor in the District of Columbia. That may not be a happy phrase—inefficient labor, in other words.

Mr. THOMAS. I would suggest to the Senator that he say "good for nothing."

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. And the Senator rather compliments it then.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think so. For people—and I will say colored people—who come here from Maryland and Virginia, the city of Washington is a Mecca, and they are employed more or less. They are glad to work, when they will work, for perhaps less wages than we would give them in New England, or perhaps in Iowa. Now, to fix a minimum for the wage earners in the District of Columbia would be another illustration of compensating the inefficient as highly as you compensate the efficient, and I think it is not a very good policy. But, of course, as the Senator suggests, it will probably require some legislation after the report is made, and when we reach that legislation we perhaps can more properly meet and discuss these matters than on this resolution.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, this resolution, as I have asked to amend it, does not go into the question of wages paid, because the Chief of the Bureau of Labor Statistics has written a letter to Congressman KEATING, who had this bill in the House, saying that the appropriation would not be sufficient for that purpose; so I have asked to strike that out and make it cover simply the cost of living of the wage earner.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator if this subject has not been pretty well covered in the report of the Commission on Industrial Relations?

Mr. KENYON. Not as to the District of Columbia. It has not been covered at all.

Mr. GALLINGER. I took occasion to make an inquiry about this matter because it has seemed to me—and I have given a little thought to it—that we will be spending $6,000 without any adequate return; but other Senators do not agree with me on that point. The Senator from Iowa, who is greatly interested in the matter, does not agree with me. I shall content myself, therefore, with simply saying that I think it is one of those efforts to accomplish something that is not susceptible of accomplishment. The cost of living in the District of Columbia depends on a great many conditions. If a man goes to a grocery store and buys a fish, he pays twice or three times as much for it as he does if he takes the trouble to go down to the wharf, where I go; and so in regard to a good many other things. I do not know how they are going to reach any conclusion that will really be controlling in the minds of Congress; but we have plenty of money, and if it is thought wise to expend $6,000 for an investigation of this kind, there is no reason why I should object.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, investigations into the cost of living of the laboring classes of our country must be productive of ultimate benefit. As to the matter of economy, we have voted here this afternoon for a $325,000 building in a town in Arizona with a population of some 18,000, according to the report. I do not know why it is that when we come to anything that enters into the betterment of the conditions of the people who toil in this country we generally run up against objections to it. That is all this is. It is along the line of the general trend in this country to have surveys of working conditions, of wages, and of the relationship of the hours of toil and the expense of living.

I have said all that I care to say.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I have as many men and women in Missouri who work for a living as the Senator from Iowa has in his State. They are just as good men and women, and no better. I do not exactly fancy the suggestion made by the Senator from Iowa that whenever anything touching labor comes up in the Senate there is a disposition to put it aside under one excuse or another, but that when something else comes up it has the right of way. I do not think that statement is fair to the Senator's colleagues. I have a personal affection for the Senator from Iowa and a high personal regard for him, only I think my good friend does sometimes permit himself to run amuck and get on a toboggan and ride down the line shouting to everybody else to get out of the way.

Mr. President, I think I have just as much regard for the men and women who make a living by honest work in the various lines of human endeavor as the Senator from Iowa. But, Mr. President, here is a resolution to appropriate $6,000 out of the Treasury to make an inquiry as to the cost of living in the District of Columbia. What has that to do with labor, and how will it help a workingman?

I presume a number of people are to be summoned at the public expense to be examined as to what it costs to live, and all that is to be printed in a volume that not one man or woman in a million will read.

What does it cost to live in the District of Columbia? How are you to make up that cost? House rent, meat, potatoes, cabbage, bread, cucumbers, whatever you have to buy. What do you pay for these things. How much does it cost a man to live for a week or for a month in the District of Columbia? It costs one man one amount and it costs another man a different amount, depending upon what he wants, what he pays for, and what he is able to buy.

Mr. President, it seems to me to be utter folly to undertake to say what it costs to live in this District. What is the language of this resolution? It reads:

Directing the Department of Labor to make an inquiry into the cost of living in the District of Columbia.

Whose living? Is it my living? I can tell you approximately what it costs me to live.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President—

Mr. STONE. The Senator can tell pretty well what it cost him to live.

Mr. KENYON. Yes; a man who draws $7,500 a year can get along pretty well. It applies to wage earners.

Mr. STONE. Does it not apply to Senators?

Mr. KENYON. No.

Mr. STONE. Then Senators are excluded? Where do you draw the line? Whose cost of living are you going to inquire about? The "cost of living in the District of Columbia" is what the resolution says. You are going to pick out certain people. I have a man employed to drive my automobile, a chauffeur, whom I pay so much a month, and he eats whenever he wishes to eat at my house at my expense; but he is a married man and lives in a little apartment in another part of the town. Are you going to ask what it costs him to live? Are you going to summon this boy who drives my machine to find out what it costs him to live? I should like to know who you are going to summon and where you are going to draw the line—where begin and where end. Mr. President, it is an absurdity. I object to the consideration of the resolution.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Missouri a question. Has the Senator any knowledge as to the probability of the cost of living being reduced. I notice that the Secretary of Commerce, Mr. Redfield, the other day gave out a statement that the cost of living was about to drop, and we are going to be happier than we have been during the last three years. Does the Senator know anything about that? That relates to the entire country, of course.

Mr. STONE. What particular point has the Senator in mind in asking me that question?

Mr. GALLINGER. The Secretary of Commerce, Mr. Redfield, went into print a few days ago to show that the cost of living was going to drop in the near future; that we were going to get cheaper food and cheaper clothes, I suppose. Has the Senator any knowledge as to the probability of that happening?

Mr. STONE. I know what the Senator tells me. That is the extent of my information on the subject. When Secretary Redfield, whose business it is to study these questions, says so, I have more or less confidence in the fact that it will happen.

Mr. GALLINGER. So we may indulge the hope that the cost of living is to be reduced before this administration comes to an end?

Mr. STONE. We all indulge that hope.

Mr. GALLINGER. And in that way the promise will be redeemed.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made, and the resolution goes over.

Mr. KENYON. I should like to ask, first, if the amendments could not be adopted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. They were adopted.

Mr. PENROSE. Before the resolution is passed over I should like to make an inquiry of the Senator from Missouri as to whether this is the drop in the high price of living which was due two or three years ago on the advent of the passage of the Underwood tariff law?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. There is a limit of five minutes on speeches.

Mr. PENROSE. I have not spoken at all. I understood that drop was coming, and I can only construe the present high cost of living as being psychological in its nature, that it has no real existence in fact, and that following out that line of argument a man might be able to get an ample meal by looking in the window of a restaurant.

Mr. STONE. The Senator, like quite a number of Senators on the other side, is indulging in a little bit of peanut politics. There is not anything to it. I do not care to waste my time.

Mr. THOMAS. Regular order!

The VICE PRESIDENT. The next bill on the calendar will be stated.

NEW ORLEANS, BATON ROUGE & VICKSBURG RAILROAD.

The bill (H. R. 540) for the relief of settlers within the limits of the grant to the New Orleans, Baton Rouge & Vicksburg Railroad Co. was announced as next in order.

Mr. THOMAS. Let the bill go over.

Mr. RANSDELL. I hope the Senator will not object to the consideration of that bill. It is one which has passed the House of Representatives twice. It affects a great many people in my State and I have been trying hard for more than two years to have it acted on by the Senate.

Mr. THOMAS. I am very sorry to object to anything the Senator from Louisiana wants, but I was impressed with the belief that this bill is beyond our constitutional power to enact, and I feel it should be fully discussed. Because of this I filed a minority report. Moreover, there are a number of absent Senators who want to be heard in opposition to this matter when it comes before the Senate. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] and the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] want to be heard. It is well known that purchasers of these lands, living in different parts of the United States, particularly in the States of Michigan, Iowa, Indiana, Illinois, Louisiana, and New York are affected. Under the circumstances, therefore, I am compelled to object to the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. RANSDELL. I hope the Senator will at least assist in getting action on the bill at this session. As I said, it passed the House twice and it affects many people of small means in Louisiana who are hanging on the ragged edge. Hope long deferred in this case has made their hearts very sick. Those who claim against them are big corporations and people of large means. I ask the Senators who are opposing the measure to help me to get it up at this session, and end a controversy which has lasted for 30 years, and can not be settled until it is settled right.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The objection is made, and the bill will go over.

MISSOURI RIVER BRIDGE.

The bill (H. R. 16097) to extend the time for constructing a bridge across the Missouri River near Kansas City, Mo., authorized by an act approved June 17, 1914, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

OLD POST-OFFICE BUILDING AT YORK, PA.

The bill (H. R. 486) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to sell the old post-office building and site thereof at York, Pa., was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to sell the present post-office building and the site thereof, situate at the corner of Philadelphia and Beaver Streets, in the city of York and State of Pennsylvania, either by public or private sale, after proper advertisement, at such time and on such terms as he may deem to be to the best interest of the United States, and to execute a quitclaim deed to the purchaser thereof, and to deposit the proceeds of said sale in the Treasury of the United States as a miscellaneous receipt, but the said property shall not be sold for less than $10,000.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CONSIDERATION OF PENSION BILLS.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The last time we had the calendar up there were two pension bills that I know the Senator from Maine [Mr. JOHNSON] and other Senators are interested in, to which objection was made by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] when they came up. I have seen him and he has removed his objection. I should like to take up those bills. The Committee on Pensions is going to report no more bills at this session of Congress. We have passed bills that have been reported since those, and those two bills should be passed.

Mr. POMERENE. To what bills does the Senator from Michigan refer?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I refer to Senate bill 6369, on page 11, and House bill 16290, on page 18.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I think we ought to go on with the calendar as we are now doing. The Senators can arrange to get at those bills in a day or two.

ALBERT L. REAM.

Mr. KERN. I was called out of the Chamber when the bill (S. 2704) for the relief of Albert L. Ream was taken up. I desire very much to offer an amendment to the amendment of the committee. The bill was passed in my absence with the committee amendment. I ask unanimous consent that the vote whereby the bill was ordered to a third reading and passed be reconsidered, and on the next call of the calendar I will have an opportunity to present the amendment.

Mr. PENROSE. Do it now.

Mr. OVERMAN. It can be considered when we next take up the calendar.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the votes whereby the bill was ordered to a third reading and passed will be reconsidered.

Mr. KERN. I will be very glad to present the amendment now. I thought, perhaps, it had best go over.

Mr. PENROSE. Go ahead and present it now.

Mr. KERN. I offer the following amendment: On page 2, line 5 in the committee amendment, I move to strike out "$3,650" and insert in lieu thereof "$8,650."

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, to be entirely consistent I will be compelled to object to that bill if the amount is to be increased, because I objected to a similar bill under like circumstances a while ago. I have no objection, however, to having the bill remain on the calendar.

Mr. KERN. I do not think the Senator knows what kind of a bill this is.

Mr. OVERMAN. I know it is now proposed to increase the amount the committee reported. As I have said, I objected to a bill in which the Senator from Washington is interested for that reason, and I shall have to object to this bill in order to be entirely consistent. I do not object to letting it remain on the calendar and having it considered at another time.

Mr. PENROSE. Regular order!

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Is it proposed to increase the amount allowed by the committee?

Mr. OVERMAN. It is.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

The bill (H. R. 16290) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The bill had been reported from the Committee on Pensions with amendments.

The first amendment of the Committee on Pensions was, on page 2, after line 20, to strike out:

The name of Richard H. Vanderhoof, late of Company I, One hundred and forty-third Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, after the line 11, to strike out:

The name of Dudley G. Allen, late of Company G, Thirtieth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, line 22, before the words "per month," to strike out "$24" and insert "$12," so as to make the clause read:

The name of Eugenie B. Ballou, widow of Walter Ballou, late of Company D, One hundred and forty-sixth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, line 6, after the word "Artillery," to insert "and former widow of John Pulleyblank, late of Company A, Fifteenth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry," so as to make the clause read:

The name of Mary J. Wickersham, widow of Christopher C. Wickersham, late of First Independent Battery, Indiana Light Artillery, and former widow of John Pulleyblank, late of Company A, Fifteenth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, after line 20, to strike out:

The name of George Moore, late of Company C, Thirty-fourth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $19 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, line 1, before the words "per month," to strike out "$30" and insert "$24," so as to make the clause read:

The name of Charles Stone, late of Company G, Forty-seventh Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, line 12, after the surname "Shroyer," to insert "widow of James W. Shroyer, late of Companies G and H, Fourteenth Regiment West Virginia Volunteer Infantry, and," so as to make the clause read:

The name of Belle Shroyer, widow of James W. Shroyer, late of Companies G and H, Fourteenth Regiment West Virginia Volunteer Infantry, and former widow of Benjamin Jones, late of Company B, Sixth Regiment West Virginia Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, line 22, before the words "per month," to strike out "$36" and insert "$24," so as to make the clause read:

The name of John A. Foster, alias John A. Bump, late of Company H, First Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Heavy Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 15, line 5, before the words "per month," to strike out "$36" and insert "$24," so as to make the clause read:

The name of Albert G. Ingraham, late of Company A, One hundred and ninety-fourth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 18, after line 2, to strike out:

The name of Laura R. Warner, widow of Andrew J. Warner, late of Company F, One hundred and forty-second Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 24, line 15, before the words "per month," to strike out "$20" and insert "$25," so as to make the clause read:

The name of Maria C. Sinclair, widow of Sidney F. Sinclair, late of Company G, One hundred and eighty-eighth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 24, line 17, after the initial "D.," to strike out the surname "Lenman" and insert "Leuman," so as to make the clause read:

The name of Calvin D. Leuman, late of Company A, Twelfth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 26, after line 8, to strike out:

The name of David W. Bogard, late of Company H, Sixteenth Regiment United States Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 28, to strike out: The name of Reuben Clark, late of Company I, Forty-fifth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 28, line 11, before the words "per month," to strike out "$36" and insert "$30," so as to make the clause read:

The name of Thomas Stubbs, late of Company H, Seventeenth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I hope that amendment offered by the committee will not be adopted. I have examined the record, and I am perfectly satisfied that the claim is a just one. I ask that the amendment be disagreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was rejected.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Pensions was, at the top of page 30, to strike out:

The name of William A. M. Streeter, alias Henry Stanley, late of the United States Revenue-Cutter Service, and pay him a pension at the rate of $22.50 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 30, line 18, before the words "per month," to strike out "$30" and insert "$24," so as to make the clause read:

The name of John H. Burnett, late of Company H, One hundred and eighty-ninth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 31, line 17, after the surname "Orr," to insert "widow of Harvey H. Orr, late of Company K, One hundred and ninety-fifth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and," so as to make the clause read:

The name of Elizabeth White Orr, widow of Harvey H. Orr, late of Company K, One hundred and ninety-fifth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and former widow of John H. White, late of Company D, One hundred and fifty-second Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 36, line 20, before the words "per month," to strike out "$24" and insert "$12," so as to make the clause read:

The name of Samantha Taylor, former widow of John Scott, late of Company H, Fiftieth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 36, line 24, before the words "per month," to strike out "$25" and insert "$24," so as to make the clause read:

The name of Mildred J. Stolp, widow of Edwin A. Stolp, late of Company E, Eighty-eighth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 37, line 4, after the word "now," to insert "receiving," so as to make the clause read:

The name of Anna Kirk, widow of Charles P. Kirk, late of Company F, One hundred and twenty-fourth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 37, after line 13, to strike out:

The name of William Welsh, late of Company B, Fourth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $21 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 38, line 19, before the words "per month," to strike out "$36" and insert "$30," so as to make the clause read:

The name of Jasper Tillbery, late of Company B, One hundred and twenty-ninth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 39, after line 9, to strike out:

The name of Rebecca Roszell, helpless and dependent child of Charles M. Roszell, late of Company B, Seventy-sixth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 39, after line 17, to strike out:

The name of Jeduthian Weller, late of Company F, Eleventh Regiment Illinois Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 41, after line 4, to strike out:

The name of Nancy E. Dermitt, widow of William Dermitt, late of Company D, First Regiment Colorado Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 44, after line 21, to strike out:

The name of George G. Richle, late of Company H, Fifty-eight Regiment Pennsylvania Militia Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 47, after line 16, to strike out:

The name of Henry Hertzner, late of Company F, Fifty-first Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 51, line 7, after the word "pay," to strike out "him" and insert "her"; so as to make the clause read:

The name of Bridget Trainor, widow of Michael Trainor, late of Company F, Sixty-ninth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 52, after line 2, to strike out:

The name of Charles Christian, late of Company H, Sixth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 52, after line 14, to strike out:

The name of Mary A. Winsor, widow of Albert C. Winsor, late of Company A, Tenth Regiment Rhode Island Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 54, after line 14, to strike out:

The name of Ida M. Satterfield, widow of Sidney W. Satterfield, late of Company A, Sixth Regiment West Virginia Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 55, line 13, after the word "Artillery," to insert "and dependent mother of John R. Welch, late of Company M, Sixteenth Regiment United States Infantry, War with Spain," and in line 17, after the word "receiving," to strike out "as dependent mother of John R. Welch, Company M, Sixteenth United States Infantry, War with Spain," so as to make the clause read:

The name of Annie E. Welch, widow of John H. Welch, late of Battery B, Pennsylvania Volunteer Light Artillery, and dependent mother of John R. Welch, late of Company M, Sixteenth Regiment United States Infantry, War with Spain, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 55, line 23, before the words "per month," to strike out "$25" and insert "$24," so as to make the clause read:

The name of Elizabeth Botinier, widow of William Botinier, late of Company C, Thirteenth Regiment United States Colored Heavy Artillery, and pay her a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 56, line 12, before the words "per month," to strike out "$25" and insert "$24," so as to make the clause read:

The name of Sarah D. Wood, widow of Jonathan E. Wood, late of Company H, Seventh Regiment Tennessee Volunteer Mounted Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 56, line 21, before the words "per month," to strike out "$25" and insert "$24," so as to make the clause read:

The name of Ellen Davenport, widow of Edwin L. Davenport, late of Company F, and first lieutenant and adjutant, Fifty-second Regiment United States Colored Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 57, line 1, after the surname "Clapper," to insert "widow of Jacob Clapper, late of Company F, Eighth Regiment Vermont Volunteer Infantry, and," so as to make the clause read:

The name of Mary Clapper, widow of Jacob Clapper, late of Company F, Eighth Regiment Vermont Volunteer Infantry, and former widow of Marshall G. Hardy, late of Company I, Fifty-seventh Regiment Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 58, after line 2, to strike out:

The name of Sarah Katharine Dodge, divorced wife of Edmond H. Dodge, late of Company B, Forty-seventh Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and Company D, Fourth Regiment Michigan Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 61, after line 16, to strike out:

The name of Ernestine W. Shetrone, widow of Martin H. Shetrone, late of Company B, First Battalion, Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 62, line 15, after the word "Cavalry," to insert "and former widow of Clement Chivington, late of Company E, One hundred and fifty-second Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry," so as to make the clause read:

The name of Nora Dickerson, widow of Lyman W. Dickerson, late of Company F, Sixth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Cavalry, and former widow of Clement Chivington, late of Company E, One hundred and fifty-second Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 63, after line 9, to strike out:

The name of John C. Toombs, late of Company H, Fourteenth Regiment Maine Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 66, line 21, before the words "per month," to strike out "$30" and insert "$24," so as to make the clause read:

The name of Daniel Stevenson, late of Company F, Fifty-first Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 67, line 4, after the word "Infantry," to insert "and chaplain, Sixth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain," so as to make the clause read:

The name of Thomas J. Harbaugh, late of Company F, Eighty-first Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and chaplain, Sixth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 69, after line 3, to strike out:

The name of Catherine R. Reader, widow of W. A. Reader, late of Company G, Sixth Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, I will ask what was done with the amendment on page 54 striking out lines 15, 16, 17, and 18, being the item proposing to grant a pension of $20 per month to Ida M. Satterfield, widow of Sidney W. Satterfield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, that is certainly a meritorious case, and I should like to know why it was stricken out.

Mr. OVERMAN. The chairman of the committee is not present.

Mr. CHILTON. I desire to ask unanimous consent—

Mr. OVERMAN. It will go to conference if it is stricken out.

Mr. CHILTON. Well, I prefer to have it go to conference in a different form. I ask unanimous consent to reconsider the vote by which the Senate agreed to the amendment reported by the committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the vote whereby the amendment was agreed to is reconsidered. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I again desire to call the attention of the Senate to Calendar No. 483 and Calendar No. 484, being, respectively, Senate bills 6369 and 6370. They are both pension bills, and I ask that they be taken up now, as that will clean up the calendar so far as pension bills are concerned, as I understand, for the session.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I shall not object, and I understand the Senator who heretofore raised the objection does not now object. We have disposed of pension bills of a similar nature coming later on the calendar, and it seems to me fair that we should also dispose of the two bills to which the Senator from Michigan has referred.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Then I ask, first, that Senate bill 6369 be considered.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 6369) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and of wars other than the Civil War, and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors. It proposes to pension the following-named persons at the rates stated:

Fred Burnstead, late of Company A, Twenty-third Regiment United States Infantry, War with Spain, $12 per month.

Mary A. Johnson, widow of John Johnson, late of Company H, Twenty-fourth Regiment United States Infantry, and Troop K, Ninth Regiment United States Cavalry, Regular Establishment, $12 per month and $2 per month additional on account of each of the minor children of said John Johnson until they reach the age of 16 years.

Alan P. Wilson, late of Company I, Second Regiment Virginia Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Mary L. Munyon, widow of William F. Munyon, alias William Anear, late of the United States Navy, Regular Establishment, $12 per month.

Walter B. Hockett, late of Company M, Second Regiment Oregon Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, $12 per month.

Elizabeth Dunn Howe, widow of Walter Howe, late brigadier general United States Army, Regular Establishment, $30 per month.

Hepsie C. Holway, widow of Wesley O. Holway, late chaplain, United States Navy, Regular Establishment, $20 per month.

Joshua E. Howard, late of Company C, Second Regiment United States Infantry, Regular Establishment, $30 per month.

Anna Neff, widow of William L. Neff, late of Band Sixteenth Regiment United States Infantry, War with Spain, $12 per month.

Ione I. Bell, widow of William H. Bell, late of U. S. S. Yantic, United States Navy, Regular Establishment, $12 per month.

Hillory M. Wilder, late surgeon, First Regiment North Carolina Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, $30 per month.

John O. McMahon, late of Company F, Thirty-third Regiment Michigan Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, $15 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Benjamin H. Meadows, late of Company E, Second Regiment North Carolina Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, $12 per month.

Charles H. Dorman, late of Company A of Instruction, General Service, United States Army, Regular Establishment, $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Jotham B. Jacobs, late of Troop H, Eighth Regiment United States Cavalry, Regular Establishment, $17 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Sarah A. Workman, widow of Andrew J. Workman, late of Company B, Mormon Battalion, Iowa Volunteers, War with Mexico, $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

Lucy Cole, widow of James B. Cole, late of Company D, Mormon Battalion Volunteers, War with Mexico, $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

David W. Herriman, late of Company B, Twelfth Regiment United States Infantry, War with Spain, $12 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Eddy J. Workman, late of Battery I, First Regiment United States Artillery, War with Spain, $20 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Henry Schlobohm, late of Troop K, First Regiment United States Cavalry, War with Spain, $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Mabel McCauley, widow of Thomas W. McCauley, late of Company C, One hundred and sixtieth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, $12 per month.

Louis Hines, late of Company K, Seventh Regiment, and Company D, Fifteenth Regiment, United States Infantry, Regular Establishment, $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

George W. Dawson, late of the United States Marine Corps, United States Navy, Regular Establishment, $17 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Emma E. Boswell, widow of Benjamin D. Boswell, late second lieutenant Twenty-ninth Regiment United States Infantry, Regular Establishment, $25 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

Kate K. Henry, widow of James M. Lake Henry, late second Lieutenant, Second Regiment United States Infantry, War with Mexico, $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

Mary A. McElroy, widow of Jackson C. McElroy, late first Lieutenant Company E, Third Regiment Tennessee Volunteers, War with Mexico, $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

Frank Lintz, late of Company F, Fourteenth Regiment United States Infantry, Regular Establishment, $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Charles H. Skillings, late of Company M, First Regiment Maine Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, $16 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Mary Miller, widow of John W. Miller, late of Company K, Thirty-fifth Regiment United States Infantry, Regular Establishment, $12 per month.

Mary J. Nolan, widow of Joseph F. Nolan, late of United States Marine Corps, War with Spain, $12 per month, and $2 per month additional on account of the minor child of said Joseph F. Nolan until he reaches the age of 16 years.

James M. Brown, late of Troop C, Third Regiment United States Cavalry, Regular Establishment, $16 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Henry T. Hertslet, late of Company A, Thirteenth Regiment United States Infantry, Regular Establishment, $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

David Noe, late of Company H, Seventeenth Regiment United States Infantry, Regular Establishment, $12 per month.

Hannah C. Leary, widow of Cornelius Leary, late of Company C, Twenty-first Regiment United States Infantry, Regular Establishment, $12 per month.

Joseph W. Hicks, late of U. S. S. Quinnebaug, United States Navy, Regular Establishment, $12 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I now ask that Calendar No. 484, being Senate bill 6370, be considered.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 6370) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors. The bill proposes to pension at the rates stated the following-named persons:

Anne M. Seaver, widow of George T. Seaver, late of Company D, Eighteenth Regiment Connecticut Volunteer Infantry, $20 per month, in lieu of that she is now receiving.

Mary E. Stanton, former widow of Samuel Greenwood, late of Company F, Twenty-fourth Regiment Connecticut Volunteer Infantry, $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

Mary E. Northend, widow of John Northend, late of Company A, Thirteenth Regiment Connecticut Volunteer Infantry, $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

Sarah H. Pidge, widow of Frank L. Pidge, late of Company A, Seventy-fifth Regiment New York Veteran Volunteers, $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

Elmira H. Cowles, widow of Lester W. Cowles, late of Companies D and K, First Regiment Connecticut Volunteer Cavalry, $24 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

Fannie M. Cutting, widow of John R. Cutting, late of the Ninth Independent Company, New York Volunteer Sharpshooters, $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

Mary A. Clark, widow of Milton D. Clark, late of Company B, Twenty-second Regiment Connecticut Volunteer Infantry, $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

Sarah A. Brown, widow of John Patrick Brown, late of Company E, First Regiment Connecticut Volunteer Heavy Artillery, $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

Belle Palmer, widow of David G. Palmer, late first lieutenant and quartermaster First Regiment Michigan Volunteer Sharpshooters, $12 per month.

Henry Swain, late of Company A, One hundred and twenty-eighth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, $15 per month.

Jennie Moul, widow of John Moul, late of Company K, Seventh Regiment Illinois Volunteer Cavalry, $12 per month.

Lydia Keatley, widow of John H. Keatley, late first lieutenant, Company E, One hundred and fourth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, $12 per month.

Sarah M. Thompson, widow of John F. Thompson, late of Company F, Thirty-fourth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, $12 per month.

Mary J. Hayes, widow of James Hayes, late of Company H, Second Regiment New York Veteran Volunteer Cavalry, $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

Jesse Abbott, late of Company G, Fifty-fifth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Mounted Infantry, $12 per month.

Charles H. Miel, late of Company F, Twenty-first Regiment Michigan Volunteer Infantry, $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Maggie E. Russell, widow of Benjamin F. Russell, late first Lieutenant Company F, Tenth Regiment New Jersey Volunteer Infantry, $12 per month.

Sarah J. Erdman, former widow of Charles W. Andrews, late of Company K, Second Regiment Minnesota Volunteer Infantry, $12 per month.

James H. Kimberlin, late of Company D, Fifty-second Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Edgar Ogan, late of Company A, One hundred and fiftieth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Andrew S. Mendenhall, late of Company K, Eighteenth Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry, $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Virginia C. Crawford, widow of William A. Crawford, late of Company G, Forty-second Regiment Missouri Volunteer Infantry, $12 per month.

George W. Johnson, late of Company H, Forty-eighth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

John C. Matheny, late of Company H, Fourth Regiment West Virginia Volunteer Infantry, $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Jeremiah Hurley, late of Company B, Thirty-first Regiment Maine Volunteer Infantry, $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Thomas F. Green, late of Company H, Fourth Regiment Maine Volunteer Infantry, $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Henrietta R. Young, widow of Oren C. Young, late of the U. S. S. Sabine, Colorado, and Vandalia, United States Navy, $12 per month.

Laura E. Eby, widow of Elias H. Eby, late of Company A, First Regiment Michigan Volunteer Engineers and Mechanics, $12 per month.

Ida Critchell, widow of Charles Critchell, late of Company G, Forty-eighth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

Amos Reynolds, late of Company H, One hundred and eighty-sixth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Samuel McCord, late of Company E, Forty-sixth Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry, $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Annie B. Buell, widow of Matthew Buell, late of Company E, Thirty-seventh Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, $12 per month.

William A. Sutton, late of Company B, Thirteenth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

George W. Kimball, late of Company K, One hundred and forty-sixth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, $27 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

John Wilson, late of Company A, One hundred and thirtieth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Melvina J. Davis, widow of Samuel B. Davis, late of Company D, Ninth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Cavalry, and former widow of Enos W. Hathaway, late of Company F, Ninth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Cavalry, $12 per month.

Henry G. Pickett, late of Company G, Forty-first Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Diantha A. Batting widow of John T. Batting, late of U. S. S. Sabine, Niagara, and North Carolina, United States Navy, $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

Charles L. Chappell, late of Company B, Twenty-sixth Regiment Connecticut Volunteer Infantry, $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Hannah Clift, widow of Amos Clift, jr., late of Company G, Eighth Regiment Connecticut Volunteer Infantry, $24 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

Ann Corey, widow of Paris H. Corey, late of Company C, Third Regiment Rhode Island Volunteer Heavy Artillery, $20 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Sarah B. Davis, widow of Phineas W. Davis, late of Company G, Eighth Regiment Connecticut Volunteer Infantry, and Battery K, Third Regiment United States Artillery, $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

Harriet A. Fairbanks, widow of Alexander H. Fairbanks, late of Company K, Sixty-first Regiment Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

Francis J. Hart, widow of Orville A. Hart, late of Company G, Thirty-sixth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

George A. Howard, late of Company D, Battalion, Seventy-seventh Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Rachel R. Gwyn, widow of William T. Gwyn, late of Company E, Third Regiment Illinois Volunteer Cavalry, $12 per month.

James M. Harrison, late of Company K, Forty-sixth Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry, $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Wesley Desart, late of Company E, Ninth Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry, $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Emma M. Newmyer, former widow of George H. Newmyer, late of Company F, Twenty-first Regiment Missouri Volunteer Infantry, $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

James B. H. McDaniel, late of Company G, One hundred and forty-eighth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

William H. Finney, late of Company C, Fourteenth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Susie M. Gilbert, widow of Franklin T. Gilbert, late lieutenant colonel Fifteenth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Cavalry, $12 per month.

John S. Fite, late of Company C, Eighty-first Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

John S. Gilmore, late of Company I, Twenty-sixth Regiment Maine Volunteer Infantry, $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Darius S. Sanborn, late of Company D, Maine Volunteer Coast Guards, $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Kate M. White, widow of Henry A. White, late of Company C, Sixteenth Regiment Connecticut Volunteer Infantry, $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

Henry R. Huntley, late of Company B, Fourteenth Regiment Maine Volunteer Infantry, $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Caroline L. Ackley, widow of Delos Ackley, late of Company C, Twenty-fourth Regiment Connecticut Volunteer Infantry, $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

William Mower, late of Company H, Twenty-eighth Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry, $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Mary J. Roach, widow of John H. Roach, late of Company G, Ninth Regiment Delaware Volunteer Infantry, $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

Mary A. Newman, widow of William Newman, late of Company F, Ninth Regiment Tennessee Volunteer Cavalry, $12 per month.

Mattie Tryon Spangler, widow of John M. Spangler, late of Company C, Seventh Regiment Iowa Volunteer Cavalry, $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving, and $2 per month additional on account of each of the minor children of the said John M. Spangler until they reach the age of 16 years.

Ledroit C. Prosser, late of Company G, Second Regiment Missouri Volunteer Cavalry, $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Albert L. Pickett, late of Company B, First Regiment Michigan Volunteer Light Artillery, $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Julia Churchill, widow of James F. Churchill, late of Company D, Eighth Regiment California Volunteer Infantry, $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

Anna W. Sapp, widow of John A. Sapp, late of Company I, and second lieutenant Company C, Second Regiment Ohio Volunteer Heavy Artillery, $12 per month.

William H. Grafton, late of Company C, Eighty-second Regiment, and Company H, One hundred and seventy-ninth Regiment, Ohio Volunteer Infantry, $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Albert W. Kelley, late of Company F, Eighth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Cavalry, $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Martha Crowley, widow of Patrick H. Crowley, late of Companies I and B, Sixth Regiment United States Infantry, and Battery E, First Regiment New Jersey Volunteer Light Artillery, $20 per month.

David Bethurum, late of Company G, Nineteenth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Zilpha A. Bush, former widow of George W. McElroy, late of Company B, Thirteenth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, $12 per month.

Laforest A. Norton, helpless and dependent son of William W. Norton, late of Company K, Eleventh Regiment Maine Volunteer Infantry, $12 per month.

Charles Harris, late of Company B, Tenth Regiment Maine Volunteer Infantry, $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

David F. Pierce, late of Company I, Fourteenth Regiment Maine Volunteer Infantry, $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Frederick N. Ames, late of Company L, Second Regiment Maine Volunteer Cavalry, $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

William B. Brooks, late of Company B, Eighty-second Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

David McConnell, late of Company D, Thirty-third Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Levi A. Ross, late captain Company K, Eighty-sixth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Michael Archer, late of Company B, Twenty-fifth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and Company C, Twentieth Regiment Veteran Reserve Corps, $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Martha T. Scott, widow of James H. Scott, late of Company A, Fifty-second Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

Julia S. Brown, widow of Charles A. Brown, late of Company H, Sixteenth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

George McDowell, late of Company H, Twenty-fifth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Thomas Williams, late of Company D, First Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Cavalry, and Company H, Second Regiment Pennsylvania Provisional Volunteer Cavalry, $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Robert L. Hamill, late of Company D, Fourth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Cavalry, $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

David Smail, late of Company A, One hundred and thirty-fifth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Henry Bohall, late of Company B, First Battalion California Mountaineers Volunteer Infantry, $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Miranda A. Wheelock, widow of Lewis L. Wheelock, late first lieutenant Company B and captain Company C, One hundred and sixtieth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

Harvey B. Stout, late of Company I, One hundred and thirty-second Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

John Eaton, late of Company K, Fifty-second Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

George Jeffs, late of Company D, Ninth Regiment Vermont Volunteer Infantry, and Company M, First Regiment Vermont Volunteer Heavy Artillery, $30 per month.

Catharine Burgett, widow of Albert G. Burgett, late of Company E, Seventy-eighth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and former widow of Peter Rynard, late of Company D, First Regiment Oregon Volunteer Cavalry, $12 per month.

Joseph O. Bovard, late of Company G, Eleventh Regiment Pennsylvania Reserves Volunteer Infantry, and Company C, One hundred and ninetieth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Marion Bradford, late of Company D, Second Regiment North Carolina Volunteer Mounted Infantry, $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Irvine Carman, late of Company K, Seventy-eighth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Eaton Smith, late of Company E, Fifty-eighth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Samuel Feldner, late of Company G, Sixty-third Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Julia A. Parker, widow of Jackson V. Parker, late captain Company B, Seventh Regiment Vermont Volunteer Infantry, $25 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

Ebenezer Ricketts, late of Company D, Sixth Regiment Maine Volunteer Infantry, and Company K, First Regiment Maine Veteran Volunteer Infantry, $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Nancy J. Willey, widow of William H. Willey, late of Company F, Ninth Regiment Delaware Volunteer Infantry, $12 per month.

Laura E. Knox, widow of David Knox, late of Company K, Eighth Regiment Maine Volunteer Infantry, $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

Francett Dickinson, former widow of Charles E. Leighton, late of Company A, Ninth Regiment Maine Volunteer Infantry, $12 per month.

Charles F. Delong, late of Company D, One hundred and seventy-fourth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

India Reisner, widow of Eliphaz Reisner, late of Company K, Thirty-eighth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, $12 per month.

John Hornback, late of Company D, Eleventh Regiment Missouri Volunteer Cavalry, $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Sadie M. Likens, former widow of David I. Washburn, late of Company H, Eleventh Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and widow of William W. Likens, late captain Company H, Forty-third Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, $24 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

Avril Harris, late of Company A, Eighty-ninth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Charles L. Wehe, late of Company I, Twenty-fourth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Homer H. Throop, late of Company D, Second Regiment Ohio Volunteer Cavalry, $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Mary L. Jeffers, widow of Dennis B. Jeffers, late captain Company C, Third Regiment West Virginia Volunteer Infantry, $24 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

William W. Tibbets, late of Company B, First Regiment Maine Volunteer Heavy Artillery, and Company F, Fourteenth Regiment Veteran Reserve Corps, $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Sadie L. Elliott, widow of William F. Elliott, late of U. S. S. Ohio and Huron, United States Navy, $12 per month.

Warren B. Monroe, late of Company G, First Regiment District of Columbia Volunteer Cavalry, and Company I, First Regiment Maine Volunteer Cavalry, $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Edwin B. Lampson, late of Company K, First Regiment District of Columbia Volunteer Cavalry, $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Samuel Lockwood, late of Company H, One hundred and eleventh Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Susan G. Snowden, widow of John P. Snowden, late of Company E, Eleventh Regiment Pennsylvania Reserves Volunteer Infantry, and Company K, Fifteenth Regiment Veteran Reserve Corps, $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

Edwin Ayers, late of Second Battery, Vermont Volunteer Light Artillery, and Company B, Seventh Regiment Vermont Volunteer Infantry, $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Phillip Rabuck, late of Company A, Seventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Cavalry, $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Ira Chamberlain, late of Company H, Twenty-fifth Regiment Missouri Volunteer Infantry, $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

William Grogan, late of Company D, Twenty-eighth Regiment, and Company K, Fourteenth Regiment, New Jersey Volunteer Infantry, $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Ellen Billcock, widow of John Billcock, who served in Company A, Ninth Regiment Vermont Volunteer Infantry, $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

Arthur M. Clark, helpless and dependent son of Lewis M. Clark, late unassigned, Thirtieth Regiment Maine Volunteer Infantry, $12 per month.

Charles Ralley, late of Company C, Seventh Battalion District of Columbia Militia Infantry, $21 per month.

Marilla Barnes, widow of George H. Barnes, late of Company E, Twenty-sixth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, $12 per month.

Sarah M. Monroe, widow of John I. Monroe, late of Company D, Seventy-seventh Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and Battery K, Fifth Regiment United States Artillery, $24 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving: Provided, That in the event of the death of Alma M. Monroe, helpless and dependent child of said John I. Monroe, the additional pension herein granted shall cease and determine: And provided further, That in the event of the death of Sarah M. Monroe the name of the said Alma M. Monroe shall be placed on the pension roll, at $12 per month from and after the date of death of said Sarah M. Monroe.

Henry Carl, late of Company B, Twenty-fourth Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry, and Unassigned Veteran Reserve Corps, $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Rebecca Ramsey, widow of William W. Ramsey, late of Company C, Second Regiment North Carolina Volunteer Mounted Infantry, $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

Nellie Loucks, widow of Jerome B. Loucks, late of Battery G, First Regiment New York Volunteer Light Artillery, $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

Soren V. Kalsen, late of Company C, Seventh Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry, $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Thomas M. James, late first lieutenant, Company D, First Regiment Ohio Volunteer Heavy Artillery, $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Morgan W. Jones, late of Company F, Twenty-third Regiment Michigan Volunteer Infantry, $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Harriet A. Streeter, widow of Merrick L. Streeter, late of Company E, Fifty-first Regiment Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

John W. Erwin, late of Company B, First Regiment Vermont Volunteer Cavalry, $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

David Roach, late of Company K, One hundred and fortieth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Mary F. Knowles, widow of Hiram Knowles, late of Company D, Fourteenth Regiment Maine Volunteer Infantry, and former widow of Charles A. Knights, late of Company G, Fourth Regiment Maine Volunteer Infantry, $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

Alfred W. Bussell, late of Company A, Twenty-second Regiment Maine Volunteer Infantry, $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Oscar D. Nutton, late of Company G, Second Regiment Michigan Volunteer Cavalry, $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Elmore T. Montgomery, late first lieutenant Company C, One hundred and first Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Thomas S. Henderson, late of Company M, First Regiment Maine Volunteer Heavy Artillery, $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Corydon L. Cole, late of Company E, Seventeenth Regiment Maine Volunteer Infantry, and Company E, First Regiment Maine Volunteer Heavy Artillery, $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Saloma V. Bedell, widow of Albert J. Bedell, late of Company A, Eleventh Regiment Vermont Volunteer Infantry, $12 per month.

William Mitchell, late of Company H, Seventh Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Winfield S. Webster, late of Company L, Eighth Regiment Michigan Volunteer Cavalry, $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Robert Hedrick, late of Company F, Eighth Regiment Virginia Volunteer Infantry (subsequently Company F, Seventh Regiment West Virginia Volunteer Cavalry), $50 per month.

Anna L. Warren, widow of James D. R. Warren, late of Company A, Fifth Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry, $12 per month.

Francis E. Pellett, late of Company A, First Regiment Connecticut Volunteer Cavalry, $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Rose L. Gibbon, widow of Homer E. Gibbon, late of Company F, Eighty-fifth Regiment, and Company E, One hundred and twenty-ninth Regiment, Ohio Volunteer Infantry, $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

Gerret G. Seger, late first lieutenant Company E, Seventy-third Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Hannah A. Holden, widow of Simeon A. Holden, late of Company D, First Regiment Maine Volunteer Cavalry, $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

Lewis B. Crout, late of Company C, One hundred and thirty-third Regiment Ohio National Guard Infantry, $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Catharine E. Wilson, widow of George F. Wilson, late of Company D, Third Regiment Delaware Volunteer Infantry, $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

Frances A. Kniffin, widow of Robert J. Kniffin, late of Company G, Twenty-fifth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

John Condon, late of Company B, First Battalion Maine Volunteer Infantry, $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Stanford H. Chase, late of Company C, First Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Heavy Artillery, $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Mary Lynch, widow of Patrick Lynch, late of Company I, Ninth Regiment Maine Volunteer Infantry, $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

Simeon H. Haskell, late of Company E, Twenty-third Regiment Maine Volunteer Infantry, $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Henry M. Bennett, late of Company A, Ninth Regiment Maine Volunteer Infantry, $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Lucy M. Settle, widow of James C. Settle, late of Company I, Eleventh Regiment Ohio Volunteer Cavalry, $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

Eliza Jane McCoy, widow of James R. McCoy, late of Company F, Thirteenth Regiment West Virginia Volunteer Infantry, $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

Ezra A. Miller, late of Company H, Twenty-sixth Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry, $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Joseph Burton, late of Company C, Second Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Cavalry, and Company K, First Regiment Pennsylvania Provisional Volunteer Cavalry, $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Alanson V. Dean, late of Company A, Fifth Regiment Michigan Volunteer Infantry, $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Zimri Stearns, late of Company C, Thirteenth Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

John W. Yount, late of Company I, Second Regiment Iowa Volunteer Cavalry, $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

James Dunn, late of Company I, Twenty-seventh Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Richard M. Clark, late of Company E, Seventy-ninth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

John W. Johnston, late of Company I, Thirteenth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Cavalry, $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Richard Scanland, late of Company G, Seventieth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Levi A. Waikle, late of Company G, One hundred and first Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Harvey Martin, late of Company D, Thirty-eighth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Charles H. Clay, late of Company H, Ninety-sixth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, $46 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

John F. Nicholes, late of Company A, Eleventh Regiment Indiana Volunteer Cavalry, $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Eri O. Smith, late of Company C, Twelfth Regiment Michigan Volunteer Infantry, $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Henry J. Porter, late of Company B, First Regiment Vermont Volunteer Heavy Artillery, and Company G, Second Regiment

Veteran Reserve Corps, $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Alonzo Rose, late of Sixth Battery, Wisconsin Volunteer Artillery, $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Hetty R. Lynch, widow of Peter Lynch, late of Company A, Ninth Regiment Delaware Volunteer Infantry, $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

Mary J. Yocum, widow of Samuel H. Yocum, late of Company M, Eighth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Cavalry, $24 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving: Provided, That in the event of the death of George W. Yocum, helpless and dependent child of said Samuel H. Yocum, the additional pension herein granted shall cease and determine: And provided further, That in the event of the death of Mary J. Yocum the name of the said George W. Yocum shall be placed on the pension roll at $12 per month, from and after the date of death of said Mary J. Yocum.

Stephen Rice, late of Company A, Second Regiment North Carolina Volunteer Mounted Infantry, $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

John A. Jones, late of Company C, First Regiment Arkansas Volunteer Cavalry, $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Nathaniel Minks, late of Company B, Forty-second Regiment Missouri Volunteer Infantry, $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Fritz Brendler, late of Company F, Fourth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Cavalry, $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Sarah E. Aldridge, widow of Benjamin Aldridge, late of Company H, Fifth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Cavalry, $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

Sybilie Grossart, widow of Frederick W. Grossart, late of Company C, Forty-first Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and Company D, Twenty-second Regiment Veteran Reserve Corps, $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

Henry H. Thomas, late of Company C, Forty-eighth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

John C. Hughes, late of Company I, Nineteenth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Mary A. Williams, widow of James A. Williams, late of Company B, Fourteenth Regiment Missouri State Militia Cavalry, and former widow of James Ferrell, late of Company E, Hickory Battalion, attached to Osage County (Missouri) Home Guards, $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

Joshua M. Roller, late of Company C, Twenty-fourth Regiment, and Company F, Eighteenth Regiment, Ohio Volunteer Infantry, $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Priscilla M. Lamphier, widow of Wesley J. Lamphier, late of Company E, Seventh Regiment Vermont Veteran Volunteer Infantry, $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

Lizzie B. Williams, widow of Leland J. Williams, late of Company C, Tenth Regiment, and Company C, Fifth Regiment, Vermont Volunteer Infantry, $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

Annie E. Rock, widow of William Rock, late of Company K, Twelfth Regiment Vermont Volunteer Infantry, $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

Lydia A. Lane, widow of Joseph H. Lane, late of Company E, Eighth Regiment Vermont Volunteer Infantry, $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

Isabell Johnson, widow of Henry Johnson, late of Company B, Second Regiment Vermont Volunteer Infantry, $12 per month.

Erastus T. Cressey, late of Company H, Second Regiment Minnesota Volunteer Infantry, $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Helen Slade, widow of Ozro D. Slade, late of Company E, Second Regiment New York Volunteer Heavy Artillery, $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

Mary E. Hart, widow of Samuel S. Hart, late of Company B, Twenty-first Regiment New Jersey Volunteer Infantry, $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

Annie Davis, widow of Daniel Davis, late of Company G, First Regiment Maine Volunteer Heavy Artillery, $12 per month.

James Kelley, helpless and dependent son of William Kelley, late of Company B, Seventeenth Regiment Maine Volunteer Infantry, $12 per month.

Eugene A. Libby, late of Company E, First Regiment Maine Volunteer Cavalry, $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Nora E. Danforth, widow of Otis Danforth, late of Company A, Fourth Regiment Massachusetts Volunteer Cavalry, $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

Abbie M. Fernald, widow of Joseph Fernald, late of Company B, Twenty-ninth Regiment Maine Volunteer Infantry, and Company A, Eleventh Regiment Veteran Reserve Corps, $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

Charles G. Bridges, late of Company D, Thirty-first Regiment Maine Volunteer Infantry, $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Gustavus A. Thompson, late of Company K, Third Regiment, and Company B, Seventeenth Regiment, Maine Volunteer Infantry, $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

James Fairbrother, late of Fifth Unassigned Company, Maine Volunteer Infantry, and Company I, Nineteenth Regiment Maine Volunteer Infantry, $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Joseph H. Knox, late of Company E, Eleventh Regiment Maine Volunteer Infantry, $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

George W. Butterfield, late of Company B, Seventh Regiment Maine Volunteer Infantry, $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Thomas J. Dill, late of Company E, Eighth Regiment Minnesota Volunteer Infantry, $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

William E. Cunningham, late of Company A, Fifth Regiment Maryland Volunteer Infantry, $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Aaron O. Houghton, late of Capt. Wardwell's unattached company, Maine Volunteer Infantry, $17 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Albion K. P. Marston, late of Company D, Thirty-second Regiment, and Company D, Thirty-first Regiment, Maine Volunteer Infantry, $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Elias A. Lothrop, late of Company G, Seventh Battery, First Battalion, Maine Volunteer Light Artillery, $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Hiram Ellis, late of Companies K and E, Ninth Regiment Maine Volunteer Infantry, $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Thomas Brown, late of Company B, Eleventh Regiment Missouri Volunteer Infantry, $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Mary A. Miller, widow of Henry H. Miller, late of Company C, Eleventh Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

Mary C. Kessinger, widow of Henderson Kessinger, late of Company G, Thirtieth Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry, $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

Thomas McDonald, late of Company H, Second Regiment Minnesota Volunteer Infantry, $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Elize King, widow of Newell D. King, late of Company C, Twenty-first Regiment Connecticut Volunteer Infantry, $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

Nathan S. Martin, late of Company F, Forty-second Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Reuben J. Powell, late principal musician, One hundred and twenty-eighth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

John W. Shepherd, late of Company H, Thirty-fifth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Insley Cook, late of Company I, Fourth Regiment Provisional Enrolled Missouri Militia, $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Mary A. Gillogly, helpless and dependent daughter of Thomas Gillogly, late of Company I, First Regiment Missouri State Militia Volunteer Infantry, $12 per month.

Julius C. Wright, late of Company C, Thirty-sixth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

William H. Waltman, late of Company C, Sixty-third Regiment, and unassigned One hundred and twelfth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Mary E. Roberts, widow of Richard Roberts, late of Company H, Twentieth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, $12 per month.

Nelson Barber, late of Company I, Twelfth Regiment Michigan Volunteer Infantry, $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Rufina M. Sutton, widow of Reuben Sutton, late of Company L, Third Regiment Rhode Island Volunteer Heavy Artillery, $12 per month.

Thaddeus Cross, late of Company A, Tenth Regiment Maine Volunteer Infantry, $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Charles E. Cook, late of Company F, Fifth Regiment Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Florence M. Moore, widow of Merrill Moore, late of Company F, Sixth Regiment, and Company E, Twenty-eighth Regiment Maine Volunteer Infantry, $12 per month.

Truman F. Maxim, late of Company E, Ninth Regiment Maine Volunteer Infantry, $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Horatio P. Abbott, late of Company E, Thirteenth Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Alma Frambes, helpless and dependent child of William A. Frambes, late of Company K, Twenty-seventh Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and Company C, One hundred and fifty-third Regiment Ohio National Guard Infantry, $12 per month.

John S. Kephart, late of Company C, Third Regiment Indiana Volunteers, War with Mexico, and second lieutenant Company F, Fifth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Cavalry, $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Edward Foster, late of Company C, Ninth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Leo J. Emery, helpless and dependent child of Charles F. Emery, late of Company D, Thirty-ninth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, $12 per month.

John Ferguson, late of Company H, Eleventh Regiment Connecticut Volunteer Infantry, and Company C, Sixth Regiment Veteran Reserve Corps, $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Mary E. Gilbert, widow of Philip H. Gilbert, late of Company G, First Regiment Massachusetts Volunteer Heavy Artillery, $12 per month.

Charles Apple, late of Company D, Sixty-eighth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Adolphus B. Capron, late first lieutenant Company K, and first lieutenant and adjutant One hundred and eleventh Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Madeline A. Rowell, widow of George H. Rowell, late captain Company H, Second Regiment Missouri Volunteer Cavalry, $24 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

Eliza M. Flint, widow of James F. Flint, late of Company A, Thirty-ninth Regiment Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

George L. Wait Wiltbank, alias George L. Wait, late of Company K, Twenty-fifth Regiment United States Colored Volunteer Infantry, $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Daniel A. Ray, late of Company B, One hundred and twentieth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

George Ellars, late of Company A, One hundred and thirteenth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

James E. Bresett, late of Company E, Forty-eighth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and Twenty-first Battery Indiana Volunteer Light Artillery, $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

John McGuire, late of Company E, One hundred and eighty-eighth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Ludwig N. Anderson, late of Company A, First Regiment Minnesota Volunteer Heavy Artillery, $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

George W. Bolster, late of Company B, Tenth Regiment Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, and First Battery Vermont Volunteer Light Artillery, $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Esteller Barrows, helpless and dependent daughter of Isaac C. Barrows, late of Company E, Fourteenth Regiment Connecticut Volunteer Infantry, and Forty-first Company, Second Battalion, Veteran Reserve Corps, $12 per month.

John W. Bash, late of Company D, Ninth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Cavalry, $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Tillie E. Reeves, widow of Orange D. Reeves, late of Company I, Thirteenth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Cavalry, $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

Horace G. Maloon, late of Company A, Fifteenth Regiment Maine Volunteer Infantry, $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

John H. Lowell, late of Company A, Twenty-seventh Regiment Maine Volunteer Infantry, $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Leroy Harding, late of Company I, Fourteenth Regiment Maine Volunteer Infantry, $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Helen F. Goodwin, former widow of Andrew J. Harmon, late of Company I, Seventeenth Regiment Maine Volunteer Infantry, $24 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving, and $2 per month additional on account of Lucina H. Harmon, helpless child of said Andrew J. Harmon: Provided, That in the event of the death of Lucina H. Harmon, helpless and dependent child of said Andrew J. Harmon, the additional pension herein granted shall cease and determine.

Elizabeth C. Henderson, widow of Robert R. Henderson, late of Company C, One hundred and sixty-eighth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

Clementine M. Gilbert, now Denslow, former widow of Adam F. Gilbert, late of Company C, Fourteenth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Cavalry, $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

Melissa L. White, widow of Chancey White, late of Company C, Seventy-fourth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

Ellen H. Croggon, widow of William J. Croggon, late of Company D, Fourth Battalion District of Columbia Militia Infantry, $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

Austin Osmanson, late of Company C, One hundred and forty-second Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Mary F. Ewing, widow of Addison L. Ewing, late captain Company I, Sixty-third Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, $24 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

William C. McLaughlin, late of Company G, Sixth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Jesse Watkins, late of Company H, Sixty-third Regiment Enrolled Missouri Militia, $18 per month.

Daniel W. Smith, late of Company C, Twentieth Regiment Maine Volunteer Infantry, $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Owen Stacy, late of Company I, Seventeenth Regiment Maine Volunteer Infantry, $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Mary A. Hanson, widow of Daniel Hanson, late of Company A, Tenth and Twenty-ninth Regiments Maine Volunteer Infantry, $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

Azupah J. Batman, widow of Andrew J. Batman, late of Company D, One hundred and forty-fourth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, $24 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving: Provided, That in the event of the death of Walter L. Batman, helpless and dependent child of said Andrew J. Batman, the additional pension herein granted shall cease and determine: And provided further, That in the event of the death of Azupah J. Batman, widow of Andrew J. Batman, the name of said Walter L. Batman shall be placed on the pension roll at $12 per month from and after the death of said Azupah J. Batman.

Hannah Dowd, widow of Oliver Dowd, late of Company H, Seventh Regiment Rhode Island Volunteer Infantry, $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

Eaton Ferrin, late of Company C, Twenty-eighth Regiment Maine Volunteer Infantry, $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

John A. Hawksley, late of Third Battery, Maine Volunteer Light Artillery, $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Benjamin King, late of Company B, Eighth Regiment Maine Volunteer Infantry, $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Elsina H. Rickard, widow of Henry A. Rickard, late of Company D, Second Regiment Vermont Volunteer Infantry, $12 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CLAIMS OF MAIL CONTRACTORS.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, we have made a good many poor souls happy this afternoon by passing many little relief bills, and I desire to ask unanimous consent to consider at this time Calendar No. 638—House bill 11150—which is a bill providing for the payment of old post-office claims. The total amount is only $196,000. The claims have been due, some of them, for 60 years, and they range in amount all the way from $1.00 up to two or three thousand dollars.

Mr. CHILTON. Is there any sum appropriated to pay these claims?

Mr. VARDAMAN. There are several hundred of the claims, as I said, ranging from $1 up to—I think probably the largest claim in the whole list—

Mr. CHILTON. The bill does not seem to carry an appropriation.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Yes, sir; it carries a total appropriation of $196,000.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Mississippi yield to me?

Mr. VARDAMAN. I will.

Mr. ROBINSON. These claims have all been audited by the department, and they have been due for a long time. They ought to be paid and disposed of.

Mr. VARDAMAN. If the Senate is going to give consent for the consideration of them, I will ask that the bill be read. The provisions of the bill safeguard any possible fraud upon the Government, and, as the Senator from Arkansas has said, the books of the Government show that the amounts are due. There is no question about that. It is an obligation which the Government has owed for the last half century, and many of the people are in very impecunious circumstances and really need this little pittance. It is a very short bill.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, some of these claims are very ancient. The Government would be bankrupted if every claim of this character were presented here to be cashed.

Mr. VARDAMAN. But, if the Senator will pardon me, the Government of the United States is not a bankrupt; and even if it is a little hard pressed the Government ought not, I submit, to withhold from the character of people who hold these claims against the Government that which is justly due them. If the Government needs any money to settle these claims it would be very well to issue some bonds, if it has not any cash available. But the Government has ample funds with which to meet all of its obligations.

Mr. PENROSE. As I understand, this bill carries nearly $200,000.

Mr. VARDAMAN. It carries a total amount of $196,000.

Mr. PENROSE. Of course, that is an insignificant sum of money compared with the disbursements which have been lavishly authorized during the present Congress; but, still, the antiquity of these claims almost compensates for the moderation of the bill in presenting many objectionable features. I should like to ask the Senator whether there is any provision in this bill to the effect that the money shall be paid directly to the claimants and not to attorneys?

Mr. VARDAMAN. Yes, sir. The bill explains how that shall be done.

Mr. PENROSE. Where is that found?

Mr. VARDAMAN. Every safeguard is put around both the claimants and the Government, so as to prevent the possibility of fraud.

Mr. PENROSE. My experience, extending over a considerable period, is that claims of this character are purely the proposition of some Washington attorney, who has been incubating for many years on matters of this sort—

Mr. VARDAMAN. If the Senator will pardon me a moment—

Mr. PENROSE. If the Senator will permit me to finish—who makes a business of incubating, through a long period of years, over propositions of this character, hoping to find some favorable opportunity for his own advantage. Thirty-nine thousand dollars of this money will go to attorneys. Now, I am going to object to the consideration of this bill to-night for the purpose of having an opportunity to examine it, and with a view of preparing an amendment to provide that these payments shall be made directly to the claimants, and no money whatever shall be allowed for attorneys' fees.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, there is a provision in this bill limiting the amount which shall be paid to attorneys to 20 per cent. That is in the last section of the bill.

Mr. PENROSE. I see that. Nearly $40,000 of this appropriation is to be paid to some attorney, I do not know whom, probably located here in Washington.

Mr. ROBINSON. I call the attention of the Senator to the fact that in most of these instances the attorneys have contracts which entitle them to some compensation.

Mr. PENROSE. Of course they have. It is the old story.

Mr. ROBINSON. In many instances they have rendered service extending over a period of many years. A number of these bills have passed either one House or the other for several sessions of Congress; and it is the fault of Congress, and not that of the claimants, that the claims have not already been paid.

Mr. PENROSE. I do not begrudge any man trying to make an honest living; but the only service these attorneys have rendered is to hunt up these claims, hunt up the claimants, get contracts with them, and then haunt these corridors and lobby with Senators and Congressmen to get the claims through. I should like to be informed as to how many of these claims are to be paid to the principals themselves.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I want to say to the Senator that no attorney has spoken to me about it.

Mr. PENROSE. I do not suggest in the slightest degree that any attorney has influenced the Senator from Mississippi. I really think, however, that if the Senator from Mississippi had been longer in Washington, and knew more about the methods pursued in starting these claims, he would have hesitated a long while before he introduced this measure, because there are attorneys back of it. What work have they done? No work except to hunt up the claims, hunt up the principals or their descendants, get contracts, and then wait here year after year until they can find a favorable opportunity to put the burglar's tools into the Public Treasury. It would have been cheaper to pay them their $40,000 fee, and stop at that, for all the good it will do the original parties concerned.

Can the Senator from Mississippi inform the Senate how many of these original claimants are now alive?

Mr. VARDAMAN. The Senator from Mississippi can not. I will say to the Senator from Pennsylvania that there are several hundred of these claimants living in the States of Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Arkansas, Louisiana, Texas, Kentucky, Missouri, and Tennessee. There are several hundred of them.

With reference to what the Senator said about attorneys representing these people, the Senate passed a bill here a few days ago making an appropriation of twenty-three or four hundred dollars for people living in Mississippi, and I was very much surprised to find they had no attorney at all. I have a letter from the Treasury Department, received yesterday, saying that appropriations had been made for the payment of two other claimants who made no application for it. Now, I do not know. Perhaps attorneys represent some of these people; but they have not appeared to me. Of course, if the attorneys have rendered any service—though I do not know what service they have rendered—they ought to be given fair compensation. I agree with what the Senator from Pennsylvania says, that some of them do wait around the Capitol like cormorants and grab up these little crumbs and devour them, but that does not in any way absolve the Government's obligation to these people for the work which they have done for the Government. If the Congress shall refuse to pay these honest claims, it puts the Government on a dead level with the little shyster lawyer who would rob his clients. That the Congress can not afford to do.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, there are hidden away in the pigeonholes of attorneys' offices here in Washington a billion dollars of claims against the Government, waiting to be presented from time to time, as favorable opportunities may offer. This bill on its face is a comparatively moderate but at the same time a flagrant case, in my opinion, of attorney graft. It means giving these lawyers $40,000, with no evidence whatever that the principals are involved or that even their descendants are involved.

Mr. VARDAMAN. What provision or limitation would the Senator put upon the bill to prevent that? Would he limit it to 10 per cent? I am willing to accept any reasonable suggestion; but I desire that the debts of the Government shall be paid.

Mr. PENROSE. I should be inclined to forbid any attorney's fee unless the money can be paid directly by the Secretary of the Treasury to the principal or his descendant or legal heir. Unless that can be done the claims ought not to be paid, in my opinion.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator from Mississippi a question about the phrase in the bill found on page 2, line 4:

Provided, That amounts which have been paid by the United States, and amounts which were paid by the Confederate States Government, or the State of Arkansas, as shown by records filed in the office of the Auditor of the Post Office Department, shall not be again paid.

It would seem, from that language, that the Confederate States acknowledged the validity of these claims.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Some of these claims were paid by the Confederate States, probably out of money that was retained by the State which belonged to the Federal Government. The whole record is set out and in the possession of the United States, and that provision is to prevent the payment again. That is all that language means. There is no possible way by which the Government of the United States is to be defrauded.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. CHILTON. I understood that the Senator from Pennsylvania had objected. Am I right about that?

Mr. VARDAMAN. I do not think so.

Mr. PENROSE. I object, Mr. President. The hour of adjournment has arrived. I should like to continue the discussion of this bill, but it is half past 6, and there is not a quorum present.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I move that the Senate adjourn until to-morrow morning at 10 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, August 1, 1916, at 10 o'clock a. m.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, August 1, 1916.

The Senate met at 10 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we seek Thy grace and favor that we may have the power that comes out of the consciousness of a purpose to serve our fellow men. We thank Thee that Thou hast brought to us the vast resources that make it possible to realize the dreams and visions of the fathers of this great Nation. Putting the resources at our command Thou dost invite us to enter into the larger inheritance of the day.

We pray that with unalloyed purpose and motive we may address ourselves to these tasks, realizing in a fuller, finer, and diviner measure than ever before the great brotherhood of national life and justice and freedom as the foundation of our national structure. Guide us this day according to Thy will and by Thy word through Thy Spirit. For Christ's sake. Amen.

THE JOURNAL.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

RELIEF OF FLOOD SUFFERERS.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I desire to introduce a joint resolution and to ask unanimous consent for its consideration. It is an emergency measure.

Mr. GALLINGER. Pending that, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Clapp	Husting	Overman	Smith, Md.
Culberson	Johnson, S. Dak.	Page	Smoot
Cummins	Jones	Penrose	Sterling
Curtis	Kern	Pittman	Taggart
Dillingham	Lane	Robinson	Thompson
Fletcher	McLean	Shafer	Underwood
Gallinger	Martin, Va.	Sheppard	Vardaman
Hardwick	Martine, N. J.	Sherman	Wadsworth
Hitchcock	Myers	Simmons	Works
Hollis	Nelson	Smith, Ga.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Thirty-nine Senators have answered to the roll. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the roll of absentees.

The Secretary called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. BRYAN, Mr. KENYON, Mr. NORRIS, Mr. RANDELL, Mr. REED, Mr. SAULSBURY, Mr. SMITH of South Carolina, and Mr. WILLIAMS answered to their names when called.

Mr. JAMES, Mr. CHAMBERLAIN, Mr. THOMAS, Mr. ASHURST, Mr. BECKHAM, Mr. LA FOLLETTE, and Mr. GRONNA entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-four Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. The Senator from Alabama introduces a joint resolution out of order and asks unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 160) appropriating $540,000 for the relief of flood sufferers in the States of North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Florida, and Mississippi, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title.

Mr. SMOOT. It must be a joint resolution, of course.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It is a joint resolution. I should, before the request is put, like to have an opportunity to make a statement in reference to it.

Mr. President, a day or two ago the governor of Alabama sent the following telegram to Washington:

[Telegram.]

Data gathered by me show that more than 418,000 acres of cultivated lands have been inundated. Green and Marengo Counties unheard from and not included in the above. The crops on these lands are total loss, estimated more than $3,500,000, leaving 23,000 people destitute. I have issued a proclamation calling upon the citizens of the State for relief to the destitute, naming John D. Durr, of Montgomery, chairman, and W. C. Hooper, of Selma, treasurer, relief committee.

CHAS. HENDERSON, Governor.

Mr. President, when these reports in reference to the overflowed lands in Alabama and the other Southern States came in, I requested the Secretary of War to make an investigation. There has been a most lamentable condition in Alabama and other Southern States. I believe Alabama has borne the brunt of the flood conditions. Unfortunately, we are not in that area of territory that is covered by the Associated Press dispatches, there were no large cities involved in the overflow, and the public press of the country has published very little information in reference to the condition. If it had been in the East or the Middle West, where there are lines of active communication, the newspapers of the country would have been ablaze with the condition that has happened in the South in this overflow. We have not lost many lives, but so far as property damage and overflow conditions are concerned, it has been practically as disastrous as the Ohio floods a couple of years ago.

The unfortunate part of this condition is that, as the governor says, in Alabama there are 23,000 destitute people. There is no chance for them to go back to their homes. The Alabama River at Selma rose 54 feet, and up to a few days ago had fallen only 3 feet. These people have been driven from their homes to the hillsides and their crops are totally destroyed. Unfortunately, a large proportion of the 23,000 people in Alabama who have been driven from their homes are the negro population. They are unable to take care of themselves. They have no reserve forces, no accumulated supply. Ordinarily their white neighbors would take care of them until the acute situation is over, but the year before we had a terrible boll-weevil condition in those States that largely destroyed the cotton crop; the year before that the war conditions had depressed the price of cotton from 12 cents to 6 cents, with the result that this flood condition coming on top of it has practically bankrupted the local merchants and the local white farmers, and they have not the money to take care of their own situation, much less the thousands of negroes who are homeless and destitute.

With that in view, Mr. President, I asked the Secretary of War to investigate the situation and report to Congress. Mr. HAY, having a joint resolution before the Committee on Military Affairs of the House, sent a resolution down and asked the Secretary of War to make a similar investigation. That investigation was made carefully by the engineer officers of the Government, reporting the exact conditions. I have in my hand a copy of a letter sent to Mr. HAY, as chairman of the House Military Committee, from the Secretary of War, stating what the conditions are and what relief is needed. I ask that the letter may be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, July 29, 1916.

HON. JAMES HAY,
Chairman Committee on Military Affairs,
House of Representatives.

SIR: I have the honor to bring to your attention facts concerning the effects of recent floods in the South, and to urge that appropriate action be taken by Congress looking to the temporary relief of persons that have been rendered destitute.

The areas affected include parts of the States of North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, and Mississippi. The conditions in the various districts of these States, concerning which complaints of suffering and destitution have been made, were investigated by the Engineer Department, and the reports received are transmitted herewith. These reports show that in some sections there is extreme destitution now existing that calls for immediate relief, and, moreover, that in many sections the destruction of the crops has been so extensive that great suffering is liable to occur before the full crops of another year can be harvested, unless relief of some kind can be afforded in the meantime.

The people most affected are the small tenant farmers. These people usually cultivate the land on shares, or in some form by which practically all the crop is mortgaged or pledged before it is harvested, and sometimes even before it is planted, so that the credit of these small farmers is exhausted.

In some cases, as on the Alabama River, the situation is made more desperate by the fact that this loss was preceded by two years of unfavorable conditions, which left not only these tenants but the landlords in much more straitened circumstances than usual. In some cases the landlords are still able and willing to give aid, but in many cases are unable to do so, as their own property is so heavily pledged that they can not obtain further credit. In some localities local agencies have been affording relief, but their means are about exhausted, and great suffering will result unless some outside assistance is given.

In general the homes of the flood sufferers have not been affected, so that there is no need for the issuance of tents.

There are two measures of relief that appear to be called for. One is to supply seeds, so that the devastated lands can be planted with quick-growing crops to provide food for the population and animals. It is stated, for instance, by the district officer at Montgomery, Ala., that turnips, rape, collards, peas, beans, and sorghum can still be grown in the flood district on the Alabama River, and he estimates that there are 4,955 families in that district that should be supplied with seeds, at a cost of about $13,000. Another method of relief is to supply the destitute with some form of employment at a moderate rate of pay, which will enable them to secure provisions and other necessities until they become self-supporting, either through the growing of new crops or other private employment.

It appears advisable to issue some rations, but only for the period necessary for the planting of seeds referred to above. After this the women and children can care for the crops, and the men should be offered work on the county roads, under the supervision of Federal officers and in cooperation with the local officials, at a rate of pay somewhat less than current wages. Under these conditions it is probable that only those in need who can not otherwise supply means of support would apply for employment, and the number to be aided in this manner would tend to diminish as the men secure more lucrative employment in other ways. In some cases it will be practicable to employ some of the destitute in clearing drift, overhanging trees, etc., from navigable streams, but the main reliance, apparently, should be placed upon road work as affording the quickest and the most generally useful form of relief work. Such emergency work on roads would not, of course, be as effective as if the improvements were carefully planned in advance, but some good results should be accomplished, and the principal end would be achieved of requiring work in return for funds expended.

Two estimates have been made covering necessary relief work—one for the first period of 30 days, to meet the most urgent and immediate needs, and one for such time thereafter as some form of relief work must be continued. These estimates are as follows:

For first 30 days.....	$240,000
For subsequent time.....	300,000

It is probable that some of the local communities affected can assist in the relief work outlined above, but there are doubtless some where the destruction of property has been so great that they will be unable to participate in the provision of the necessary funds.

Should Congress deem that Federal aid should be extended, it is recommended that an appropriation of $540,000 be made, and that its application along the lines indicated be authorized, contingent upon the consent and cooperation, as far as practicable, of local authorities. The necessary Federal supervision of relief work can be undertaken by this office, or such other Government bureau as may be selected by Congress for the purpose.

Very respectfully,

NEWTON D. BAKER,
Secretary of War.

MR. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, the joint resolution which I have introduced is entirely in conformity with the recommendations made by the Secretary of War. I do not believe that the sums recommended by the Secretary of War will be sufficient to afford the immediate relief that is needed in the five States named. As a matter of fact, I think that the conditions in Alabama would warrant the expenditure of that much money for immediate relief. There is no effort here being made to take care of permanent relief, but it is to give those people food and some work to do until conditions can be brought about where they can get permanent employment and be taken care of.

The local authorities of my State—and I have no doubt it is true in the other States to which this joint resolution refers—are doing all they can; but the people in the immediate neighborhood are as destitute as are the negro tenant farmers, by reason of the boll-weevil condition, the low price of cotton two years ago that grew out of the European war, and the flood conditions to-day, which have wiped out all they have.

MR. WORKS. Mr. President—

THE VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from California?

MR. UNDERWOOD. Yes.

MR. WORKS. I should like to know whether or not anything has been done for the relief of those people by the State?

MR. UNDERWOOD. The governor has no power, so far as the State itself is concerned, and the legislature is not in session in any of these States, but the local people immediately raised funds. Those people would be starving to-day but for the funds that have been raised in Alabama. The governor, as I have said, has issued a proclamation calling for relief throughout the State, which is being responded to, but that is slow in coming in. It will take a long time to take care of those people.

This condition is most severe in the flood regions of Alabama. I will say that I saw the engineer's map the other day which showed the area of the territory affected by the flood condition—not that it is all overflowed, but that affected—and it covered two-thirds of the State of Alabama. The area is nearly as large in the Carolinas, and it pervades throughout the entire South.

I would not urge this condition on the Senate in this way if it did not require immediate action. If we are going to grant this relief, it ought to be done at once, because these people are suffering.

This is not as large or as great a calamity as that presented by the earthquake conditions in San Francisco that we relieved, but proportionately it is as great. There are as many people affected by it as were affected by the conditions at Salem, Mass., that we relieved a few years ago. We have often granted similar relief to other sections of the country. We immediately acted in reference to the Ohio floods; and, as I say, the only difference is that we suffer under a great handicap in cases of this kind because we are so far from the general line of travel, from the general line of communication, that these conditions take place and there is no general publicity given to them. If this great flood had happened in the Middle Western States or in the East, every newspaper in the country would have been full of it.

I knew I could not bring this matter to Congress when it was not given publicity unless I had an official report. I therefore got the Secretary of War to send the Engineer officers of the Government there. This proposed action is based on their report as to actual conditions. The joint resolution which I have offered calls for exactly what the Secretary of War recommends and nothing more, although I do not think it is adequate.

Mr. President, those are the conditions. We have more than 23,000 people in actual destitution in Alabama whom we are having great difficulty in relieving. The official report shows that the same conditions exist in other States of the Union.

This joint resolution does not apply to Alabama alone, but it applies to all the flood States. These negroes are driven from their fields, though not from their homes, which are on the hilltops, so they are not actually driven from their homes. If this resolution passes, their immediate needs will be taken care of for a few weeks, and the Agricultural Department can cheaply, quickly, and readily furnish them with seed. They can get them immediately and can plant some classes of food crops—not corn and cotton, not money crops—but something to carry them and carry their cattle through the winter. If, however, immediate action is not taken, the time will pass, and we can accomplish no result. Therefore, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, with all of the railroads washed away for miles and miles, all of the rural routes obliterated for a time, and the telegraph lines down, we did not hear of the terrible floods in western North Carolina until two weeks after they had occurred. It is impossible to get the mails through. These people are walking and carrying mails for miles and miles in order that the outside world may learn the sad news of this terrible catastrophe. Not only all the bottom lands have been seriously injured and the crops on them destroyed, but they have been covered with sand and will be utterly useless for 20 years. The tenant who had his home on the little mountain side has had that home destroyed. Strange to say, for the first time in the history of that State there have been great slides like the snowslides of Switzerland. The water in the soil was so deep that it spouted out and carried down from the great mountains trees, houses, and debris, stopped up all the streams, and washed all the bridges, county roads, and railroads away. The Southern Railroad for 40 miles was so destroyed that it will take weeks and months to rebuild.

These people are absolutely helpless. My State has generously subscribed very large sums of money, and is sending money into that region now to help those poor people. We should do something to put them to work, to help rebuild the roads, the rural routes, though they are nothing but trails now; and a man can not go with a horse and buggy or with a wagon anywhere in that mountain country where the floods were so destructive. Along the Yadkin, the Catawba Valley, the Broad River, and the Wateree region, comprising an area of 20,000 square miles, that entire area was practically covered by the floods, and the people living on those areas are suffering.

I merely wish to state to the Senator from Alabama that I knew nothing of the true conditions in North Carolina until the news came through some one walking for days and days in order to get to some place from which he could send a letter off in the mail to his friend, for we have no telegraph wires in that region to tell us the conditions.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I have, I think, an unusual interest in this resolution. I can not forget the lesson that came to the people in the Middle West in the spring of 1913. I was through the flood-stricken district of Ohio; I know of the pictures of desolation and despair which were to be seen upon every hand.

On occasions of this kind it is not of so much importance that we give a great sum as it is that we give it quickly for the immediate relief of those who are in distress. I judge from what I have heard from the Senators from the Southern States, as well as from the press and from other sources, that perhaps the only difference between the flood situation in 1913 and the situation which the resolution is designed to relieve is in the number of people who have been driven out of house and home and have had their property destroyed. I hope the resolution may be adopted.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I have no doubt whatever that the disaster in the Southern States to which reference has been made is severe, but I should like to ask the Senator from Alabama, who has introduced the resolution, whether he considers it the settled policy of this Government to make appropriations for every case of distress due to floods wherever they may occur in the United States?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Why, no; I do not consider it the settled policy of the Government, I will say to the Senator, but I do consider this: In many instances in the past—and I presume similar action will be taken in the future—where immediate relief was needed, where the destitution was so pronounced and the horror of the conditions so great that it was impossible for the local communities to immediately take care of the situation, the Federal Government has granted temporary, not permanent, relief; and, of course, permanent relief is not asked in this case, as the Senator can see from the amount of this appropriation. Thousands and thousands of people are destitute; and the purpose of the joint resolution is merely to take care of a temporary situation. That has been done in numerous cases in the past; and I think when there is a calamity that is so great and so far-reaching that the local community to an extent is paralyzed, then the Federal Government is only following the precedents of the past in taking temporary charge of the situation. That is all I am asking in this case.

Mr. PENROSE. Well, Mr. President, I have every sympathy with those who have suffered by reason of the calamity. I know that we live in an era of many novel and untried ideas, and that we are spending money with a reckless and lavish hand. The $500,000 or $600,000 proposed to be appropriated by the joint resolution will be little or nothing compared with the vast amounts which are being spent for what, in my opinion, are unnecessary and ill-advised projects. I did not know, however, but that part of the new philosophy was that the Government should on all occasions extend temporary relief in case of floods from one end of the country to the other.

It would seem to me, Mr. President, that the governor of Alabama should call a special session of the legislature of that State, and show some willingness on the part of the local authorities to remedy the dreadful conditions prevailing.

A few years ago we had in Pennsylvania the Johnstown flood, a rather famous disaster, in which thousands of people lost their property and many hundreds lost their lives; but the legislature appropriated the many hundreds of thousands of dollars that were necessary to meet the disastrous conditions arising from the breaking of that dam. A few years afterwards the Susquehanna River rose, as it frequently does, until it forced through the streets of Williamsport, a large and thriving town in Pennsylvania, a wall of water from 12 to 20 feet high, as indicated by appropriate inscriptions on the buildings to-day, with the consequent destruction of a vast amount of property; but no one came to Congress or, even in that case, to the legislature to ask relief.

If after due consideration the Senate shall conclude to pass this resolution, I shall make no very great amount of opposition to it; but I was a little curious to know whether the party now in power intends to meet all cases of floods with the same liberal disbursement of the public funds. Doubtless the Allegheny and the Monongahela Rivers will again overflow their banks, as they have done almost every spring, or the Susquehanna or the Delaware may again rise and destroy property along their banks, and I did not know but that I might have the support of the Senator from Alabama and other Senators in having a resolution passed appropriating perhaps a million dollars to compensate the unfortunate sufferers who live along those streams.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I regret that there should be even the appearance of injecting politics into this matter, which the Senator from Alabama in a spirit of humanity has brought before the Senate. I believe that this is the first time, except in connection with floods on the Mississippi, when it has been proposed that the Federal Government shall appropriate money to relieve against a situation of disaster or destitution in the South. Since I have been in the Senate and previously there have been appropriations of very large sums for the purpose of relieving against situations certainly no worse when you consider the ability of the stricken section to afford relief from its own resources and when you consider the class of people who have suffered. In past years, before the Democratic Party assumed control of the Government, we were in the habit of appropriating money from the Federal Treasury in similar cases.

The Senator from Alabama has alluded to the case of the earthquake in San Francisco. I remember how readily Senators on both sides of this Chamber joined the Senators from that stricken region in gladly voting funds for temporary relief. In other instances the same thing has been done.

Mr. President, this is not a request, as the other cases to which I have referred and to which the Senator from Alabama has referred were not requests, for indemnity against loss, not a request for compensation for damage from the visitations of God, but it is a mere appeal to humanity. It is the same sort of appeal that we are hearing to-day from the other side of the water. It is the same sort of appeal that came to us from Belgium. It is the same sort of appeal that is coming to us to-day from Poland, and we are answering it in such way as we can—answering it by public help and answering it by private charity.

Mr. President, it would be difficult for me to describe the situation that exists in the mountain regions of my State as the result of the flood. The Senator from Alabama has told about the conditions in his State. I suppose, from what the Senator says, that they are very similar to those which have been brought about in my State. However, there is some difference. In the mountain sections of my State, Senators will remember that the Appalachian Range rises higher than at any other point. Farming is the chief occupation of the people, and the farming is confined entirely to the valleys of these mountain ranges. These valleys sometimes spread out many miles. Sometimes they are very narrow. While there are some rich people in those valleys, the majority of the people who cultivate those farms and who own those valley lands are poor people. Many of them own just a few acres. They raise fruits, they raise a little stock, they raise grain, they live very frugally. Some of those lands, however, are cultivated by small tenant farmers. In this region, as in other parts of the South where lands are cultivated by tenant farmers, the tenant is generally very poor. Very frequently he has eaten up his crop before he gathers or harvests it. He borrows at the beginning of the year for the purpose of supplying his family from month to month, from day to day. It is a bad condition, but it exists. It even exists upon the lowlands. It exists in the section of the State near the coast where I live among the tenant farmers, especially the colored farmers. When these floods came, as my colleague has stated to the Senate, they swept everything before them. In some, yea, in many, instances it swept away the little homes of those people on the mountain sides; carried away the stock, the hogs, and the cattle; carried away the farming implements; carried away the growing crop; and not only left the ground barren of crop and vegetation, but, in some cases, actually took the land, the fertile part of it, the upper soil of it, and carried that away and deposited it somewhere else.

As a result, Mr. President, these people who had made their arrangements for their supplies during this year, based upon the credit of the crop they expected to make, find themselves in the middle of the year unable to secure further supplies, because the security for these advances is gone and they are in a state of destitution.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me?

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not desire to be interrupted right now by the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Not only that, Mr. President, but as the result of this flood in my State 83 lives have been lost. I do not think I could bring the situation in my State more graphically to the attention of the Senate than to state one fact with reference to Asheville, N. C. Most people in the country who are in the habit of traveling about, who go to resorts, have heard of Asheville, and many have been to Asheville. I have no doubt many Senators here have been to Asheville. Those who have been there will recall the splendid depot of the Southern Railway—the Union Depot—just on the outskirts of Asheville, located upon the French Broad River, upon an elevation which was supposed to be ample protection against the highest floods. And yet, Mr. President, where that depot is located the waters were 6 feet high right upon the floor of the main building; and the hotel which is located a few yards away, probably a hundred yards away, known as the Glenn Rock Hotel, was flooded to the third story, and two men lost their lives in trying to bring succor to people who were marooned in the third story of that hotel.

That is a mere illustration as to the height the waters attained in these valleys where practically all the people who live in those mountains reside. Not only were 83 lives lost and the crops swept away, but the very soil upon which the crops were, was in some cases washed away or covered with sterile sand and rendered almost valueless.

A gentleman told me that he knew of a friend of his who had a beautiful and fertile tract of valley land before this flood worth $100 an acre for agricultural purposes, now covered with white sand deposited by these floods, from 5 to 10 feet deep, and its value destroyed.

Mr. President, we are not asking for permanent relief against this situation. We do not conceive that the Government would have the power to do that; we only ask aid to relieve against temporary want and suffering. The Government has without cavil heeded appeals of this sort in the past, and why should Senators object to its doing it in this case? The Senator speaks about the conditions in Pennsylvania and says they were relieved by the State and by the local communities. The communities in which the disaster in his State happened, I presume, were communities in which the sufferers were, themselves, or their neighbors, in the main, people of means. It was not the poorer classes that sustained the heaviest loss in those communities. It was the richer classes that sustained the heavier loss.

The Southern Railway, which penetrates this section of my State, has sustained a heavy loss, but of course the Southern Railway is asking no assistance. The landowners are asking no assistance, nor are we asking it for them. We are simply asking help for these poor tenants or the very small landowners, the men who in the beginning of the year mortgaged their crops or little homes to get the bread with which to feed their families from day to day. We are asking help for them. That is all we are asking, Mr. President.

The people of my State are responding generously to their appeal. Our State legislature is not in session now. If it were, I have no doubt it would respond. The commissioners in the various counties are responding to the extent of their ability, and in such ways as they can, and the people throughout the State, responding to the appeal of the governor of the State, are contributing liberally and sending them help, but the territory affected is nearly a third of the State of North Carolina. It is a part of the State that is tolerably thickly settled. The number of persons affected is great—the damage is tremendous. As my colleague has just said with reference to the roads, they tell me that in all that mountain country in these rich and thickly populated valleys the roads have almost disappeared—washed away. They are mere trails. You can not ride horseback on some of them, and it is impossible to traverse many of them with a vehicle.

I had a letter only yesterday from a gentleman of my State who happened to be at one of the resorts in the mountains when this disaster occurred. He was marooned there for days. The roads washed until impassable and bridges gone he was reduced to the necessity of walking 25 miles to get back to his home.

Mr. President, we are asking nothing, we would take nothing, except to assist temporarily in taking care of these people until we can otherwise provide for them or they can provide for themselves. We will provide for them as soon as we can. We are making every effort to provide for them now. This particular section of my State, though well to do, is not rich. The people are mostly farmers—and small farmers. The commissioners of the affected counties are doing what they can to meet the situation; they are preparing to build roads and bridges, and so forth, and give these people work. The burden upon the municipalities is great and their means and resources limited, but they are doing the best they can to give them a chance to help themselves. It is not like it is in the case of a great city or manufacturing section where laboring men, if they can not get work in the factories in one city, can go to the next city and find it there. In this part of the country almost the only occupation of the people is farming. When there is no demand for labor on the farm it is difficult for these people to find employment, and until they can do so they must suffer privations.

Mr. President, I apologize to the Senate if for the time I have taken too much of the morning hour with this matter. A great misfortune has befallen my State, and naturally I feel deeply for the distress of the unfortunate victims, and naturally I want to do what I can to alleviate the situation which has been created. I hope the resolution of the Senator from Alabama will pass.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I have not received a request from the people of Mississippi to ask for Government aid. I know, however, that the eastern part of the State has suffered tremendously as the result of the floods, and I know that among the class of people who will suffer most are the small white farmers and the negro tenants. I know the assistance is needed—badly needed—and I hope the succor may be given. If Senators understood the character of the negroes—their improvidence, their failure to lay up something for a rainy day—they could understand the situation in the sections of the South where the country has been devastated by the heavy rains.

Now, the planter as a general rule prefers to take care of his own labor, to provide for his own tenants in times of stress like this, if he is able to do it; but when the burden falls as it has fallen on a great many of them in this instance, he finds himself absolutely unable to do it. As has been so clearly and fully stated by the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], the purpose of this resolution is not to restore to the people that which they have lost by the ravages of the flood, but it is simply to give bread to the hungry—not to furnish shelter, no; not to restore to the lands the soil that has been washed away; not to buy teams, horses, and mules that have been drowned in the floods, or cattle and hogs that have been killed—not that; but it is to furnish bread and meat, and probably in some instances raiment, where they have been destroyed or lost, to the hungry and the naked. That is all there is to it.

Mr. President, I have never permitted a human being who came to me and asked for bread to go away hungry if I could supply him with it. There is no joy so satisfying to the normal human heart as that which grows out of the consciousness of having added to somebody else's happiness. The people of this great Republic, whose representatives we are here in this body, are always willing to extend the hand of help to those in distress. Thank God, my sympathies with my fellow man in the hour of trial are not bounded by geographical lines. One of the most agreeable duties that I have performed since I came to the Senate was to vote for and urge the passage of a resolution giving relief to suffering humanity in one of the rich cities of the great State of Massachusetts.

As I said at the outset, my State fortunately has not been a sufferer to the extent which the States of Alabama, North and South Carolina have suffered, but these people need help. This Government is able to give them that help; and I can not see how any Senator can find it in his heart to deny this appeal for bread.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I join most heartily in the support of the joint resolution introduced by the Senator from Alabama. I think this relief ought to be given. I have no doubt the calamity is a fearful one, involving suffering and distress to many people, and it is only by such collective efforts as the Government itself can make in supplying not only the funds but the means of a system for its distribution that the calamity can be adequately met.

I wish to say, however, that I deem this not an unfitting moment to call the attention of the Senator from Mississippi and other southern Senators to the fact that for 10 years a bill has been urged in this body providing for river regulation and flood control, intended to change, as the President so happily phrased it, these floods from a menace into a blessing, by controlling the waters as they fall from the heavens in such a way as to put them to beneficial and compensatory uses instead of leaving them to mass together for the destruction of large agricultural areas and communities and towns.

I wish to call the attention of Senators also to the obliviousness of the Members of Congress from the South to the principal economic need of the time, and their failure to respond to the sentiment which exists elsewhere throughout the entire country in favor of a broad and comprehensive measure that will take care, not simply of the lower Mississippi or the lower Sacramento, but will embrace every watershed in the country in a system of plans and of works which will ultimately secure control over these waters, mitigating their destructive effects, and at the same time putting them to use as creators instead of destroyers of wealth.

I feel that the South has been singularly oblivious to this great menace, and to the economic demand of the time, that all waters should be controlled and beneficially utilized, that navigation should be restored, that arid-land reclamation and swamp-land reclamation should be secured, and that water in falling from one level to another should be made to develop electric power which will extend its energizing influence throughout the entire country in the distribution of electric energy.

Mr. President, though the great parties have for the last eight years been declaring themselves in no uncertain tones upon this subject in their party platforms, legislation has not yet responded to the popular demand. Recently in the House a Flood Control Committee was organized. We had reason to hope and to expect that that committee would frame a broad and comprehensive measure that would meet the demands of every section of the country and every watershed of the country. Instead of that we found its attention almost entirely directed to protecting the lower Mississippi and the lower Sacramento from the effects of devastating floods, without regard to the wealth-creating power of water if conserved by scientific methods. They seem content to permit these floods to come down to the lower reaches, willing that they should come down, but insistent that the United States Government should, out of its Treasury, spend large sums in protecting the adjoining areas from their menace of destruction.

Mr. President, the Senate has the opportunity to correct this mistake, to broaden out the narrow policy enunciated by the House of Representatives into a broad and comprehensive policy that will include every watershed in the country, and include contemporaneous works and plans in every section of the country. Such a bill, I believe, can be framed as a substitute for the House bill, which will include all the essential provisions of the House bill, but will have national provisions that will make the bill as broad as the Union in its beneficial features instead of a sectional bill as it is to-day.

Mr. President, I have spoken often upon this subject to unheeding ears. There is no section of the country that is so rich in its possibilities for water development as the South. The South contains within its borders the lower reaches of most of the great waterway systems of the country, and also contains within its borders independent systems of waterways entirely confined to it. The elevated character of a large part of the South and the mountainous character of the streams afford opportunity for the utilization of the power of water in falling from one level to another to create an electric energy that will be the marvel of the world, giving opportunity in their own interest to broaden out their action; and instead of contenting themselves with the old spoils system of waterway development, which gave a waterway project as a prize to the energy of a particular Congressman or a particular Senator, we can substitute the broad and comprehensive system to which I have referred and from which untold blessings will come to the South.

I hope, Mr. President, before many years to see substituted for the present system of sporadic waterway development in the South, interrupted by occasional appeals to the benevolence and charity of the country, a businesslike and scientific system, meeting the great economic requirements of the land; and I take this opportunity of asking my southern friends to unite with us of the Northwest, who from experience know what we are talking about, in making these great waters creators and not destroyers of wealth.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, the calamity which occasions this joint resolution is most deplorable, but, as the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] has stated, it is one of not unusual occurrence. The joint resolution, therefore, refers to a subject concerning which resolutions of similar import in the past have been considered and is designed to bring immediate relief to the sufferers by making it the subject of a Federal appropriation. The purpose, of course, is a most beneficent one, which appeals to the sympathies of every Senator, and the passage of the resolution doubtless would meet with the approbation of the public, as they have in the past.

But, Mr. President, I very seriously apprehend that what seems the established custom for the Government to come to the rescue of communities and individuals with appropriations from the Treasury whenever some unusual calamity occurs is transforming the Government from a political into an eleemosynary institution of enormous dimensions, and the drain upon the Treasury now so noticeable will be multiplied many times. Especially in this fiscal year 1916 is the fact noticeable that the demands upon the National Treasury are increasing to an alarming degree, some of them being, of course, due to the expanding activities of the Government, but the bulk of it to the present widespread demand for so-called preparedness, and some which might well be postponed to a more convenient season.

But however that may be, Mr. President, because of these increases the necessity of securing increased revenue is an acute problem of the hour and one which, while essential, is made, as is always the case, the more difficult because of the objections and protests of those who will be required to bear the added burden.

Mr. President, before this joint resolution is finally acted upon it may be well for a moment to call attention specifically to the condition of the public revenue, and particularly to the enormous increase which up to this time has characterized our appropriations.

I have been favored with a statement from the Treasury Department, the date of which I am unable to give but which I received two or three days ago, which purports to give the appropriations for 1916, the present condition of the 1917 bills, and the increase for 1917 over 1916.

I might with propriety occupy the time of the Senate by reading the entire statement, but I do not think it is essential. I shall therefore content myself with calling attention to the summaries which are disclosed by the statement.

The total annual appropriations up to this time, including bills that have become laws, bills which have passed the Senate, and bills which have been favorably reported to the Senate, show the following totals:

The total annual appropriations for 1916, including the Panama Canal, were $1,114,937,012.02.

The present condition of 1917 bills, as explained, aggregates $1,613,874,829.54.

Increase of 1917 over 1916, $498,937,617.52.

If from these appropriations are deducted those for postal purposes and for sinking-fund requirements and to those for 1917 are added bonds authorized by the shipping bill and for the nitrate plant, the totals are as follows:

For 1916, $739,968,373.63.

For 1917, $1,297,402,920.72.

Shows an increase from 1917 over 1916 of $557,434,547.09, or an increase up to this time of more than half a billion of dollars over the appropriations for 1916.

Mr. President, it is, of course, obvious that the great bulk of this increase is due to recent Army and Navy legislation, but that does not alter the fact that the burden of this increase must be borne by the taxpayers of the United States. I think it is perhaps safe to say that if Congress remains in session 60 days more, which is highly probable, this increase may swell beyond the total of $800,000,000.

In an address made by one of the most eminent citizens of the United States last evening in the city of New York the plan of so-called preparedness as outlined in the bills which have recently passed this body was severely criticized as incomplete and inadequate, which would indicate that in the event of a change of administration these enormous appropriations for military and naval purposes will be largely increased with, of course, a consequent increase in taxation.

So, Mr. President, we are facing the coming year with a certainty that we shall be obliged to make provision for added revenues which are, I think I am safe in saying, practically the equivalent of three quarters of a billion dollars, much of which must be met by resorting to new sources and by expanding current sources of revenue.

In view of the situation, I question, Mr. President, the propriety of making appropriations for the relief of citizens and communities, no matter how dire their distress may be. I question the propriety of making any appropriation which is not made absolutely necessary by the public exigencies of the hour. If there ever was a time, Mr. President, when the subject of expenditures should receive the first consideration of Congress, the time is now. If there ever was a time when the matter of appropriations should be retired to the rear in our deliberations, that time is the present, and yet, Mr. President—

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President—

Mr. THOMAS. Just a moment.

Mr. CLAPP. Very well, I will wait.

Mr. THOMAS. And yet we are, on both sides of the Chamber, with a cheerful disregard of inevitable consequences, as it appears to me, entertaining every day and passing new appropriations for new purposes, without regard to the enormous aggregate of increased appropriations with which the country is confronted and for which Senators on both sides of the Chamber are equally responsible. Now, I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I simply rose to say that, as I understand the Senator from Colorado, he says that if there ever was a time when the matter of appropriations ought to be seriously considered it is now. Do I understand him correctly?

Mr. THOMAS. If there ever was a time when economy in expenditures should be seriously considered it is now, and if there ever was a time when appropriations should be subordinated to frugality in legislation that time is the present. I see no indications of a change.

Mr. CLAPP. I simply want to express dissent to the Senator's statement and to say that, in my humble judgment, the time more important than now to have considered these matters was some months ago, before we had imposed upon the country the obligation of these vast and unnecessary appropriations.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I quite agree that the entire session might well have been devoted to the consideration of retrenchment, rather than to extension of expenditures; but the Senator from Minnesota knows that the great majority of his associates on the other side of the Chamber and the great majority of my associates on this side of the Chamber have been a unit in the matter of extreme preparedness; they have cooperated; and if the country is in the danger which they seem to think it is they have properly and patriotically cooperated in devising measures and making appropriations for the national defense. Upon the assumption that they are correct—and I certainly would be the last to impugn either their motives or their patriotism—they have acted wisely. It may be true that they are subject to the criticism, so frequently heard in recent times, of indifference to the aggravating character of the public danger and have not outlined a scheme of preparation which the dangers menacing the country actually demand. I think and have always thought otherwise.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I would not impugn any man's motives; it is the judgment that I criticize. If we had considered this matter of economy months ago, if we had had the tax bill before us months ago; if we had had our desks piled up, as they are every morning now, with appeals "Do not tax me"; "do not tax this"—if that had occurred months ago, I think there would have been a lessened amount of appropriations indulged in by Congress.

Mr. THOMAS. No, Mr. President, I do not think that is so. Mr. CLAPP. Well, I do.

Mr. THOMAS. My impression is that Congress and the people have been swept from their logical moorings; that they have bidden adieu for the time being to reason and have been legislating through the influences and the impulses of their aroused fears and apprehensions. If I am correct, the introduction of proposed revenue measures at any time would not have sufficed to stem the tide of that inevitable policy which is the consequence of a national hysteria.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President—

Mr. THOMAS. I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will ask the Senator from Colorado if he has before him a statement of the increase caused by the military and naval appropriation bills over like appropriations for the fiscal year ending the 30th of June, 1916?

Mr. THOMAS. Yes.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to have those increases stated.

Mr. THOMAS. Of course I should premise by again saying that this table is made up not only of bills enacted but also of bills which have passed the Senate, and in one or two instances of bills which have only been reported to the Senate.

The Army appropriation for 1916 was $101,974,195.87. The Army bill for 1917 which passed the Senate carried $313,970,447.10, being an increase of $211,996,251.23.

The appropriation for the Navy in 1916 was $149,661,864.88.

The Navy bill for 1917 which passed the Senate carries an appropriation of $316,726,556.54, or an increase of $167,064,691.66.

The fortifications appropriation for 1916 was $6,060,216.90. The fortifications bill for 1917 has been enacted into law and carries $25,747,550, or an increase of $19,687,333.10.

Mr. SHERMAN. The total, then, Mr. President, if I caught it in a general way, without being mathematically accurate, is that there is something like $300,000,000 increase over the year 1916?

Mr. THOMAS. The total is about $390,000,000, in round numbers.

Mr. SHERMAN. That would mean something like $110,000,000 increase devoted to civil purposes?

Mr. THOMAS. Something like that; yes.

Mr. SHERMAN. That would be a rough estimate?

Mr. THOMAS. Yes.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator says we are all responsible for that. I take my share of the responsibility.

Mr. THOMAS. And I can not evade mine.

Mr. SHERMAN. Now, I should like to inquire whether, if the revenue bill prescribing the methods of taxation designed to raise this enormous increase had been presented here, it would not have had a sobering influence upon the Senate? I should like to inquire further whether it is a good time to be talking economy in the face of a public calamity such as is brought to the attention of the Senate by the Senator from Alabama, calling for the relief of citizens of our country who are in distress? For my part, I should be very glad, so far as unanimous consent can come from me, to give consent in order that proper relief may be afforded to the suffering citizens of Alabama.

Many parts of the Northwestern section of the country, and particularly some parts of the State which I have the honor in part to represent, have in the past been visited by very severe public afflictions. The Government has been quite liberal and the State authorities outside of my own State have been liberal and have made appropriations through their general assemblies, giving relief in such cases. What I particularly wish to inquire is, whether, on the unanimous consent asked by the Senator from Alabama, this is a fit time or the best time to be bringing questions of economy, as compared with liberal expenditures, before the Senate? I should rather have such questions raised on some other occasion, because I am very much in favor of granting to the people of Alabama the relief which has been asked for.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, the Senator has asked me several questions all of which I will try to answer. I do not think these expenditures would have been in the slightest degree influenced by the presence or even the consideration of the proposed revenue measure, because I believe that the response which Congress has made to the apparent demand of the country for preparedness would have been made in any event.

Now, the Senator asks me whether this is an appropriate time to be talking economy when there is pending a resolution for the relief of a section of the United States which has recently been afflicted by the visitation of an unusual flood. Candidly, I do not know. I have on many occasions called attention to similar conditions, and on most of them I have been asked whether it was an appropriate time to consider economy. I am hunting for some such occasion. If the Senate thinks this is not one, I shall subside; but I notice, Mr. President, that when a note of warning regarding our extravagances and our expenditures is sounded—and it must be sounded during the consideration of appropriation measures if at all—it is always met with the statement that "this is not the particular measure" or "this is not the occasion" on which to advocate retrenchment or call attention to the condition of the public finances. I have reached the conclusion, Mr. President, that though there is said to be a time for all things there is no time, no occasion, for inculcating these doctrines, much less to expect their recognition and application by the Senate.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President—

Mr. THOMAS. As I have said, I hesitate to speak against a resolution for the appropriation of money for a cause like this, and yet I must call attention to the fact that if the public moneys are used to relieve people, cities, and communities whenever they are the subjects of some great calamity, the entire character of our institutions will have been changed, and the purposes and objects of Government either very largely extended or entirely transformed. I now yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I am interested in the remarks of the Senator as to when economy is to commence. It seems like an iridescent dream to suppose that it will ever commence. I ask the Senator if he noted that on yesterday the Senate passed a bill appropriating $325,000 for a public building in a town which one of the Senators from the State in which the town is located only claims to have a population of 20,000, and which the census for the year before showed to have a population of 18,000. Would that have been an appropriate time to commence a little economy, or will that time ever come?

Mr. THOMAS. No, Mr. President; it would not, for it would be said that it was merely a local matter and the sum itself comparatively unimportant. I was aware of the passage of the measure to which the Senator refers only because I heard him speak of it yesterday afternoon. I was not in the Senate at the time the bill was reached and passed. But, Mr. President, that is only one of many instances.

Mr. KENYON. That is too trivial a sum, I assume, to pay any attention to.

Mr. THOMAS. That is simply a bagatelle.

Mr. KENYON. A mere bagatelle.

Mr. THOMAS. We handle millions here with the cheerful abandon that characterizes the millionaire who lights his cigar with a five-dollar bill.

Mr. CLAPP. No; it is the abandon that characterizes the man who is voting away the money of some one else.

Mr. THOMAS. Well, of course, that is involved; but I did not intend to refer to it. It is the easiest thing in the world to expend the public money, although we are trustees of the fund; it is the easiest thing in the world to devote it to anything which our constituents demand, and who are more responsible than we are for the extravagancies that characterize our financial administration.

Mr. CLAPP. I can not agree that the responsibility should be thrown off on some one else; it is upon us.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President—

Mr. THOMAS. I yield to the Senator from California.

Mr. WORKS. I should like to ask the Senator from Colorado if it does not seem to him that an appropriate time to suggest economy is when we are proposing to make an appropriation that is entirely illegitimate and unauthorized, and which amounts simply to the giving away of public money as a matter of charity? Of course, these appeals reach Senators individually and we hesitate to object to appropriations of this kind, but I think every Senator realizes that they are illegitimate.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, there was a time when I would have agreed with the Senator absolutely, as I do now in the abstract, both as to the legitimacy of this sort of an appropriation and as to our authority to make it; but the Senator knows that this is one of a series of similar appropriations made under similar circumstances on frequent occasions in the past, and which have ripened into—I was going to say "precedent," but I will say which have ripened into a custom, the mere questioning of which is now a cause of criticism—perfectly proper criticism—coupled with the query as to whether this is the time to talk economy.

Mr. President, there must be some limit to the power of Congress to make appropriations. Of course, there is one which we all recognize, and that is the period of exhaustion or protest or revolt of the taxpayer. I do not know whether we are approaching that period or not, but if our naval and military expansions shall continue, as we seem to be assured that they will be should political changes occur, I indulge the hope that the taxpayers of the United States may organize for their protection as the taxpayers have long ago done in every section of the country, and who in consequence make, and for years have made, deliberate and organized demands upon Congress for appropriations, which in nine cases out of ten are acceded to without regard to party.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President—

Mr. THOMAS. I again yield to the Senator from California.

Mr. WORKS. The unfortunate condition of the people who have become the victims of this storm appeals to my sympathies very strongly, and I think there is just as much reason for making this appropriation as there was for making many others that have been made by Congress. If we are to be governed by what has been done in the past, there is no reason why this appropriation should not be made, as I see it.

Mr. THOMAS. None in the world.

Mr. WORKS. But I do not know where it is going to stop.

Mr. THOMAS. It had its beginning, Mr. President, in that policy which requires or has persuaded the Government to assist in the establishment of business industries and also in the building of huge lines of transportation. To my mind one is quite as appropriate as the other, and if business institutions and railway concerns are to be aided by the Government in the exercise of our appropriate functions I can see no reason why the policy should not be extended to communities and to individuals.

Mr. President, I have talked longer than I intended, and consequently I have said a great deal more upon the subject than was perhaps necessary. My sole purpose at this time was to call attention to the state of the appropriations and also to the nature of our revenues and to inquire to what extent these appropriations were to be continued.

Mr. RANDELL. Mr. President, I wish to address a very few remarks to the Senate this morning in support of this resolution.

I live in a section of the Mississippi Valley which at times has suffered very much from floods. My home is on the banks of that river, and I have often seen the accumulated waters which fall in 31 States sweep down on the people of that devoted section to do untold damage. I am therefore in the position of one whose fellow feeling makes him wondrous kind to those who are suffering from floods in the other Southern States at this time.

I can not see why this appropriation should be different from others. It is the well-settled, well-established policy of this Government to make appropriations from time to time to relieve people who are suffering from unusual cataclysms of nature, and that is what this terrible storm was. These people have suffered far beyond their own power to relieve themselves, beyond the power of the local communities or even the States, when the legislatures are not in session; and we have always, so far as my recollection goes, given relief in similar cases.

I will not go back further, Mr. President and Senators, than the great floods of 1912 and 1913 in the Ohio and Mississippi Valleys, when terrific waters poured down them, doing incalculable damage. I have before me the statute passed in 1912 showing that the War Department, through the Quartermaster General, received, for providing tents and other necessary supplies and services, the sum of $402,179.65 for the relief of flood sufferers in the Mississippi and Ohio Valleys. The Commissary Department the same year received for the relief of flood sufferers in those same valleys—the Ohio and Mississippi Valleys—$837,000; a total of $1,239,179.65. That was for tents, for provisions of different kinds, for medical supplies, various and sundry absolute necessities of life, given to people who were suffering from floods in the States bordering on the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers during the year 1912.

In 1913, as appears in the act approved October 22, 1913, the Navy Department was reimbursed for expenditures on account of the relief of flood sufferers in the States of Ohio and Indiana and on the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers and their tributaries, $140,940.38. That same year, as I see in the Statutes at Large for 1913, there was a total of $654,448.49 appropriated for the relief of sufferers from floods, tornadoes, and conflagrations in the Mississippi and Ohio Valleys, Peachtree, Ala., and in Nebraska. Then there was another small appropriation of $18,175 for flood relief made in 1913.

The total during those two years for the States of Ohio and Indiana and the lower Mississippi States—that is, Missouri, Arkansas, Kentucky, Tennessee, Mississippi, and Louisiana—was $2,032,744.21. I do not think anyone questions the wisdom of those appropriations and certainly no one questions the fact that the local communities suffered many times as much as this amount which the National Government gave to help them in their distress. I know that in the Mississippi Valley, where I live, the amounts which from time to time have been given by the National Government were much less than the local and State contributions. The pittance of $540,000 which it is now proposed to distribute among the people suffering from great floods in five Southern States will give very little relief. It will help some. It will furnish seed to replant some of the flooded lands, but it is not going to feed the people nor to restore their damages, which run into a great many millions.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, has not Congress appropriated large sums of money to aid and relieve sufferers in foreign countries time and time again?

Mr. RANSDELL. I understand that it has, very great sums; and we surely ought not to hesitate to give this small amount.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, if ever there was a time when such assistance as is proposed in the recommendations of the War Department was needed this is the time. I had occasion to visit my State since the storm that began on the 14th of July and lasted until the 16th, including the night of the 14th, the day of the 15th, the night of the 15th, and part of the day of the 16th, in which that tropical hurricane, accompanied by an unprecedented rainfall, swept over the entire State from the Pee Dee River on the northern and eastern sides to the Savannah on the western and northwestern sides. I think that the purpose of this joint resolution, expressed in the recommendation of the War Department, is along the right line; that is, to furnish, as far as may be, seed to the small tenants and to those who have been entirely ruined so far as their crops are concerned.

It is hard for one to realize the effect of a rainfall of 14 inches in 36 hours, accompanied by a hurricane, on the tender growing crops even on the uplands. That, extending clear into the mountains and into the foothills, of course brought down an unprecedented flood throughout the coastal plains, so that the farms along the banks of these streams were practically wiped out. That, in conjunction with the disastrous conditions to the crops on the uplands, intensified the disaster.

It is not too late for them to recoup themselves somewhat by having an abundance of seed to sow those crops that may mature before frost, and which also will grow during and after the frost period has come. I have received but very few requests for aid on the part of the Government. I think one reason for that, perhaps, is that the condition is so universal—and the reports in our papers have not even approximated the damage done—that the people in the States afflicted by the storm of July 14 were reasonably sure that some action would be taken. I do not think that it would be necessary, perhaps, for an effort to be made to furnish food. Of course that will be largely determined by the officer who has gone down and inspected the situation. But I do not think Congress should hesitate a moment to appropriate money for the relief of such a far-reaching, disastrous effect by forces over which none of us have control and which affects those upon whom the common prosperity of all the country depends. Were it a little community, it might be absorbed by the aid of neighbors; but where it covers the entire State, as in the case of my State, extending over other States, I think it is a matter that appeals to the National Government.

I sincerely hope that this resolution will pass and that the distribution of whatever funds are appropriated will be made under the proper supervision and bring what relief this small appropriation may bring. It can only apply, and should only apply, to those small farmers who are absolutely helpless. The damage wrought goes into the millions. I have never in all my observation of weather disasters seen anything to approximate, in my State and in parts of North Carolina, the damage wrought by this storm; and I do not think it is necessary for me to stand here and even make a plea. It covers the entire State. There are those who can recoup themselves; there are those who can supply themselves; but there are those who are going to suffer, and suffer the more if they are not supplied with the means through which they can aid themselves between now and the frost time.

I sincerely hope the resolution will pass. We have contributed at other times to sufferers even in foreign lands, where the disaster, perhaps, was not greater than that in our own.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to the request for present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I understood that the Senator from Utah [Mr. Smoot] wanted to say something on this joint resolution. He is not in the Chamber.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I understand that it is practically agreed that the joint resolution may go to the committee and that the committee will act upon it at once. That is what the Senator from Utah was going to insist upon, and if there is no objection to that, it seems to me that would be the better way to proceed. The Senator is here now, however.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I shall ask that this joint resolution be referred to the Committee on Appropriations. I will say to the Senator from Alabama that similar resolutions have been offered in the Senate before. One of them, I remember very distinctly, was a resolution in the passage of which I was deeply interested, and I insisted upon that going to the committee. I believe that is the proper course for the Senate to pursue. The chairman can call a committee meeting and act upon it, and I do not believe it will result in any particular delay. Therefore I shall ask that the joint resolution go to the committee.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I ask, then, that the joint resolution be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That action will be taken.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, before the reference is made I want to make my position clear.

I do not intend to object to this appropriation, although there are other States which have recently suffered to a much greater extent than some of the States referred to in the resolution during the present month; but it does seem to me that the time has come for us to consider the condition of the Treasury. In a short time the Republican minority will at least make an effort to show that notwithstanding whatever revenue bill may be passed by the majority, the Treasury of the United States is bound to face a deficit. There is hardly a day that we do not report out some appropriation involving a large sum of money—$2,000,000 the other day for victims of tuberculosis, this morning again $500,000, and so on, day after day.

Having recorded my note of warning, I will allow the joint resolution to take its natural course.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 4654) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and of wars other than the Civil War and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 5914) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and of wars other than the Civil War and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

CIVIL WAR CLAIMS.

Mr. SHIELDS, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. 3700) to amend an act entitled "An act to repeal section 3480 of the Revised Statutes of the United States," reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 750) thereon.

HUDSON RIVER BRIDGE, NEW YORK.

Mr. SHEPPARD. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 16554) to extend the time of the Hudson River Connecting Railroad Corporation for the commencement and completion of its bridge across the Hudson River, in the State of New York, and I submit a report (No. 749) thereon. This bill ought to be passed at once. All arrangements have been made for the construction of the bridge, and the bill has passed the House. I ask for its immediate consideration.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. WILLIAMS:

A bill (S. 6731) for the relief of the heirs of Charles F. McLean; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. CLAPP:

A bill (S. 6732) granting an increase of pension to Horace M. Holbrook; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. FLETCHER:

A bill (S. 6733) for releasing and quitclaiming of all claims of the United States to arpent lot No. 28 in the old city of Pensacola, Fla.; to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. JONES:

A bill (S. 6734) granting an increase of pension to Riley Damon (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 6735) granting an increase of pension to Elizabeth Bellion (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. MARTIN of Virginia:

A bill (S. 6736) to amend an act relating to the Public Utilities Commission of the District of Columbia, approved March 4, 1913 (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. MYERS:

A bill (S. 6737) for the relief of A. J. Lowary; to the Committee on Public Lands.

A bill (S. 6738) for the relief of Joseph E. Lamb; to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 6739) granting a pension to David W. Beaver; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SHIELDS:

A bill (S. 6740) to correct the military record of Matthew C. Butler, jr. (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. NORRIS:

A bill (S. 6741) granting an increase of pension to John K. Mayo; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SMOOT:

A bill (S. 6742) granting an increase of pension to R. F. Hedrick (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SMITH of South Carolina (for Mr. GORE):

A bill (S. 6743) granting a pension to Calvin Sharpnack (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

BARKHAUSEN COAL & DOCK CO.

Mr. BRYAN. I desire to move to reconsider the vote by which the Senate passed on yesterday the bill (H. R. 11293) for the relief of the Barkhausen Coal & Dock Co., of Green Bay, Wis. The report of the Committee on Claims was adverse to the bill. That fact was overlooked.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Florida.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 4654) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and of wars other than the Civil War, and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

Mr. SMOOT. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendments of the House and request a conference with the House, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. HUGHES, Mr. TAGGART, and Mr. SMOOT conferees on the part of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 5914) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and of wars other than the Civil War, and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

Mr. SMOOT. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendments of the House and request a conference with the House, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. HUGHES, Mr. TAGGART, and Mr. SMOOT conferees on the part of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15957) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War and to widows of such soldiers and sailors, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. SMOOT. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and agree to the conference asked for by the House, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. HUGHES, Mr. TAGGART, and Mr. SMOOT conferees on the part of the Senate.

FORT ASSINNIBOINE MILITARY RESERVATION.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3646) to amend the act of February 11, 1915 (38 Stat. L., p. 807), providing for the opening of the Fort Assinniboiné Military Reservation.

Mr. MYERS. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendments of the House and request a conference with the House, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. MYERS, Mr. SMITH of Arizona, and Mr. SMOOT conferees on the part of the Senate.

NATURALIZATION CASES IN MONTANA.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 4594) to validate certain declarations of intention to become citizens of the United States, which were, on page 2, line 2, after the word "six," to insert "and that the petitions for naturalization dismissed on account of such invalidity in the declaration of intention shall be given a rehearing without additional cost, upon informal application therefor by the candidate for citizenship to the clerk of court upon notice to the Bureau of Naturalization," and on page 2, line 4, after the word "legalized," to insert "and that this act shall apply only to those persons who have heretofore made homestead, desert-land, or timber and stone entries."

Mr. MYERS. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATIONS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning hour has expired, and the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is House bill 15774.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 15774) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Mr. President, in regard to this bill, I wish to say that its progress practically stands where it stood last Friday. I think it is important that the bill should be passed, and I hope the Senate will cooperate with the committee to bring about as speedy a passage of the bill as is reasonable. I certainly hope that there will be no obstacle thrown in the way of its passage and that we may have the cooperation of the Senate in disposing of it.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Certainly.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I should like to ask the Senator if he now proposes to keep the bill before the Senate until it is passed, or if he is going to allow it to be laid aside for the consideration of other measures?

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. It is my intention to keep it before the Senate until it passes. We have given way and a great deal of time has been spent in connection with the bill, and I think Senators ought certainly now to cooperate in its passage and not throw any further obstacles in the way. I will say to the Senator that I propose to keep it before the Senate until it is passed.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I have already taken up some considerable time in the discussion of the amendment I have proposed to the bill. I should not take up further time if this were a mere question of dollars and cents, but it presents itself to me as a fundamental constitutional question that ought to be taken a good deal more seriously by the Senate than it has up to the present time.

I think the objects and purposes and the provisions of what is called the organic act have been very generally misunderstood, and I assert here now, without the fear of successful contradiction, that this act has never been followed in legislation in the making of appropriations; that it is not followed by either the House provision in the pending bill or the proposed amendment of the Senate committee.

I propose now in order to arrive at a better understanding of the provisions of the act of 1878 and of the real situation that is presented by the three provisions that are before the Senate to take up for a little while the provisions of the acts of 1874 and 1878.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, there are I think a number of Senators who wish to be present at this time who are not here. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOLLIS in the chair). *The absence of a quorum is suggested, and the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bankhead	Hughes	Norris	Smith, S. C.
Beckham	Husting	Overman	Smoot
Borah	James	Page	Sterling
Bryan	Johnson, S. Dak.	Penrose	Stone
Chamberlain	Jones	Pittman	Swanson
Clapp	Kenyon	Poincexter	Taggart
Clarke, Ark.	Kern	Pomerene	Thomas
Culberson	La Follette	Ransdell	Thompson
Cummins	Lee, Md.	Reed	Townsend
Curtis	Lippitt	Robinson	Underwood
Dillingham	McLean	Shafroth	Vardaman
Fletcher	Martin, Va.	Sheppard	Wadsworth
Gallinger	Martine, N. J.	Shields	Walsh
Gronna	Myers	Simmons	Williams
Hardwick	Nelson	Smith, Ga.	Works
Hollis	Newlands	Smith, Md.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I wish to state that the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD] is absent on public business.

I desire also to announce the absence of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON] on public business. The Senator from West Virginia is paired with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-three Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present. The Senator from California will proceed.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, two acts of Congress have been enacted dealing with the organization of the District of Columbia that have been commented upon in this debate. As I said in opening the discussion, the experiment of a separate municipal organization had been tried and proved to be a failure. It left the District in debt something over $20,000,000. It was found necessary to reorganize the District in some form. There was an act passed in 1874 growing out of that condition of things, which provided among other things—

That the President of the United States, by and with the consent of the Senate, is hereby authorized to appoint a commission, consisting of three persons, who shall, until otherwise provided by law, exercise all the power and authority now lawfully vested in the governor or board of public works of said District.

And so forth. The effect of that was simply to substitute these three commissioners for the government that then existed. There were certain provisions made in the act to preserve those conditions until further legislation might take place. In order that this might be done there was this further provision in section 5 of that act:

Sec. 5. That a joint select committee shall be appointed, consisting of two Senators, to be appointed by the presiding officer of the Senate, and two Members of the House, to be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives, whose duty it shall be to prepare a suitable frame of government for the District of Columbia and appropriate drafts of statutes to be enacted by Congress for carrying the same into effect, and report the same to the two Houses, respectively, on the first day of the next session thereof; and they shall also prepare and submit to Congress a statement of the proper proportion of the expenses of said government, or any branch thereof, including interest on the funded debt, which should be borne by said District and the United States, respectively, together with the reasons upon which their conclusions may be based; and in the discharge of the duty hereby imposed said committee is authorized to employ such assistance as it may deem advisable, at an expense not to exceed the sum of $5,000; and said sum, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated for that purpose.

It required something like four years for that joint committee to perform its duty and to report a bill reorganizing the District. That bill is the act of 1878, which has been referred to frequently during the discussion of this question.

As all Senators know, the act of 1878 provided for an organization consisting of the three commissioners of the District, who constituted the executive authority, and other officers necessary to the collection of the funds and the assessment of taxes and various other things. But one thing is significant—there is no provision made for such an office as treasurer. As I said in the beginning, the District of Columbia has never had any funds; it has never had any treasury; it has never had any such officer as treasurer of the District.

In order to bring directly before the Senate just what is provided by this act, so far as it relates to the matter now under discussion, namely, the collection of taxes and appropriations to be made by Congress, I desire to read a portion from section 3 of that act. It provides that—

The said commissioners shall submit to the Secretary of the Treasury for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879, and thereafter, for his examination and approval—

Now, mark the fact that this report of the commissioners is to be made not to a District officer, not to the treasurer of the District, but to the Secretary of the Treasury for his approval—a statement showing in detail the work proposed to be undertaken by them during the fiscal year next ensuing, and the estimated cost thereof; also the cost of constructing, repairing, and maintaining all bridges authorized by law across the Potomac River within the District of Columbia, and also all other streams in said District; the cost of maintaining all public institutions of charity, reformatories, and prisons belonging to or controlled wholly or in part by the District of Columbia, and which are now by law supported wholly or in part by the United States or District of Columbia; and also the expenses of the Washington Aqueduct and its appurtenances; and also an itemized statement and estimate of the amount necessary to defray the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the next fiscal year: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed as transferring from the United States authorities any of the public works within the District of Columbia now in the control or supervision of said authorities. The Secretary of the Treasury shall carefully consider all estimates submitted to him as above provided, and shall approve, disapprove, or suggest such changes in the same, or any item thereof, as he may think the public interest demands; and after he shall have considered and passed upon such estimates submitted to him, he shall cause to be made a statement of the amount approved by him and the fund or purpose to which each item belongs, which statement shall be certified by him and delivered, together with the estimates as originally submitted, to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, who shall transmit the same to Congress.

Mr. President, this constitutes an act of the Federal Government. These commissioners are simply acting as the agents of the Federal Government in making the estimates, which must be submitted to a Federal officer and must have his approval before any further action can be taken upon the matter. Then follows:

To the extent to which Congress shall approve of said estimates, Congress shall appropriate the amount of 50 per cent thereof; and the remaining 50 per cent of such approved estimates shall be levied and assessed upon the taxable property and privileges in said District other than the property of the United States and of the District of Columbia; and all proceedings in the assessing, equalizing, and levying of said taxes, the collection thereof, the listing return and penalty for taxes in arrears, the advertising for sale and the sale of property for delinquent taxes, the redemption thereof, the proceedings to enforce the lien upon unredeemed property, and every other act and thing now required to be done in the premises shall be done and performed at the times and in the manner now provided by law, except in so far as is otherwise provided by this act: Provided, That the rate of taxation in any one year shall not exceed $1.50 on every $100 of real estate not exempted by law; and on personal property not taxable elsewhere $1.50 on every $100, according to the cash valuation thereof.

The only power that is given Congress to deal with this question is to appropriate 50 per cent of the amount estimated by the commissioners and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury. Congress is given no authority to deal with District matters at all; it is given no power to make any appropriation out of the funds of the District; but it is left to the taxing officers to collect an amount equal to the 50 per cent by taxation.

How do they do it? Congress compels the assessor to levy taxes at a rate of one dollar and a half upon not less than the two-thirds value of the taxable property. So the amount to be paid by the taxpayers of the District is not fixed by the estimates at all under this statute; it is fixed by an iron-clad rule that is laid down by the act itself, and from that has resulted the so-called overtaxing of the taxpayers of the District. Two years ago the amount realized under that law of taxation exceeded the one-half by more than a million dollars.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator yield to me? I do not think the citizens of the District are being overtaxed. I know from my own experience that the taxes here on real estate are much less than they are in the State of Minnesota, and as to credits there are a large lot of credits on which taxes are never paid at all. It is a sort of rich man's paradise where they get in here and stay here to escape taxation. If they were taxed on their credits as they ought to be, and taxed even more on real estate than they are, they still would not have any ground of complaint.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, in order to sustain the position of the Senator from Minnesota he is compelled to abandon the half-and-half system, because the half-and-half system fixes the amount that the people shall be taxed in this District under this statute, and that is measured by one-half of the estimate. That is exactly what I am complaining of. If the people of the District are taxed more than one-half of the estimate made by the commissioners, then under the law that controls they are overtaxed, and there is no escape from the fact. That is one of the reasons why I say that this half-and-half system ought to be abrogated. It does not make any difference, I will say to the Senator from Minnesota, whether in his judgment or mine these people are not paying the taxes that they should pay, they are paying more than they are required to pay by the terms of the statute.

Now, why has Congress during all these years attempted to legislate the amount of money that shall be paid by the District of Columbia? The District of Columbia acquires no revenue. It has no treasury; it has no power to collect money; it has no power to pay it out. It is absolutely devoid of any power of that or any other sort.

The Commissioners of the District in dealing with this question are authorized, as the agents of the National Government, to estimate the amount that must be raised, one-half by the Government and one-half by taxation, and that is subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury and of Congress, and that fixes the liability and the total extent of it. Congress is given no authority to deal with it in any way whatever.

Now, let us see what they are trying to do under that provision that simply authorizes Congress to appropriate one-half of the estimated amount of the expenses. The House provision is as follows:

That hereafter all appropriations made for the support of the government of the District of Columbia, including all sums appropriated in any general appropriation act indicated to be paid out of the District of Columbia revenues, except amounts to pay the interest and sinking fund on the funded debt of said District—

There are no revenues of the District. It never has had any revenues. All the money collected by taxation goes directly into the National Treasury, and I will show a little further along the way it is dealt with after it goes into the Treasury:

shall be paid out of the revenues of the District of Columbia to the extent that the same shall be sufficient therefor and the remainder out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

That, of course, is a distinct departure from the half-and-half system. It attempts to place the burden primarily upon the taxpayer and not upon the Government, but simply provides that after that is done and as much realized as can be done under the assessment for that purpose, then the Government is to put up the balance.

Of course under the statute of 1878 the taxpayer should be compelled to pay one-half only of the estimated amount of the expenses. This provision goes further:

The following sums are appropriated out of the revenues of the District of Columbia to the extent that they are sufficient therefor and the remainder out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated in full for the following expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, namely:

Besides the fact that they are attempting to compel the taxpayers to pay more than their share under the statute in existence, they are undertaking to legislate with respect to that half of it where the statute gives them no authority to deal with it in any way whatever. It simply leaves it to the tax collector and other officers of the Government to collect the necessary taxes. As I have said, it is not at all governed by the half-and-half system, because the exact amount that is to be collected, dependent upon the assessment made, is fixed by the statute itself, without any reference to the half and half. The result has been that sometimes the amount of the assessment has realized less than one-half and at other times it has realized a good deal more than one-half, neither of which is in compliance with the statute.

I do not know what the result is going to be. This year, I suppose, as governed by the statute, there will be overtaxation of the taxpayers within the city. Two years ago it was considerably over the one-half. It ran above $1,000,000.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ROBINSON in the chair). Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. WORKS. I do.

Mr. KENYON. I wish to ask the Senator where the situation arises that the amount from taxation in the District is more than one-half, as in the case the Senator speaks of, where it was over $1,000,000 in excess; what is done with that excess?

Mr. WORKS. It simply remains in the Treasury of the United States Government, to be dealt with as the Government may choose.

Mr. KENYON. That is to say, if the budget was $12,000,000 and the District raised $8,000,000, the Government would still pay $6,000,000, and the $2,000,000 would not be applied in any way to the expenses but would remain in the Treasury?

Mr. WORKS. That would be the effect if the statute was carried out.

Mr. KENYON. Is it not carried out?

Mr. WORKS. It never has been carried out. It has averaged about one-half for several years that it has been in force until two years ago, and then the assessor raised the valuation of real estate, as the result of an investigation that was made here showing undervaluations and assessments, and the taxpayers were overassessed, if the matter is to be controlled by the statute, by something over $1,000,000.

Now, let us see what the Senate committee proposes to do in place of what is proposed by the House. Their provision is that—one half of the following sums, respectively, is appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and the other half out of the revenues of the District of Columbia, in full for the following expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, namely:

Under the statute that appropriation of one-half by the Government is legitimate. It is not logical; it is, in fact, absurd when you follow out the conditions that result from it; but it is within the power of Congress. But Congress has no power under this statute to provide that the other half shall be paid out of the revenues of the District of Columbia.

Now, what is going to be the result of it? This money, as I shall show directly, all goes into the Treasury of the United States. There is appropriated one-half of it to be paid out of the Treasury. There is appropriated the other half of it out of the revenues of the District. That assumes to deal with the revenues of the District of Columbia which are also to be paid out of the National Treasury, because there is no other treasury, there is nowhere else to raise it.

But in dealing with it in that way, if the taxpayers have paid in more than one-half of the amount, then the Government appropriates to its use the balance of the money that has been collected in that way, which is a distinct violation of the statute and an injustice to the taxpayers of the District.

That result is absolutely unavoidable, for the reason that I have stated—that the collection of taxes is not based at all upon the amount that should be raised, but is the result of the fixed rate of taxation and the assessment that is provided for by law. It may be millions of dollars above what is required under the statute, or it may be millions of dollars below it.

So, Mr. President, if we are going to deal with this question justly and fairly and not illogically, there is but one way to deal with it, and that is to provide for the payment of these expenses out of the National Treasury. That is what is done in effect now.

The whole thing is confused, and all of this controversy has arisen between the taxpayers and the Government because of the fact that we are trying to do something that is impossible under the statute. The taxpayers very naturally say when it runs above the one-half—and they have a right to say it—that they are being overtaxed. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] says they are not paying as much as other people are paying in other cities, and therefore they are being undertaxed. So there you are. The only logical way, however, to deal with this question is to pay these expenses out of the National Treasury, and then to assess upon the property of this District a reasonable amount, as the Senator from Mississippi insists upon, and collect it in order to pay those expenses. In some years it may amount to more than the one-half that comes from taxation, but that does not affect the situation in the slightest degree if the amount assessed against them is a reasonable and fair amount, and they have no reason to complain of that. They are not paying any more to support the Government than are the people in other cities of the country. Therefore there is no injustice in it.

But, singularly enough to me, Senators insist upon holding on to the half-and-half principle. The people of the District, led by some men who, I think, are misleading the District, insist upon maintaining the half-and-half principle by which for the last four years they have been largely overtaxed. The very statute that they are insisting upon maintaining has been violated by forcing upon them the payment of over a million dollars more than they were obligated to pay under the statute.

I assert, Mr. President, that the half-and-half system can not be supported upon any basis of reason or justice. Some Senators cling to it simply because it is old; they abhor a change. But by reading somewhat from the testimony of witnesses before the special committee to which I have referred I am going to show just exactly how the affairs are conducted in practice. I had this testimony introduced and printed in the Record the other day without reading, but now, after hearing the discussion indicating what I think is a complete misunderstanding of the so-called organic act, the provisions following it, and the practices under it, I feel called upon to deal with this question a little bit more specifically.

Let me read from the statement made by Mr. Brownlow, one of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, who dealt directly with this question and who spoke from knowledge and experience. He says:

I believe that the National Government should assume full and sole responsibility for the National Capital, meeting its every expense by a direct appropriation from the Federal Treasury; that the people here should contribute toward the national expenses an amount equal to the taxes paid by citizens of other American cities of approximately the same size—

That is the contention of the Senator from Minnesota, with which I fully agree—

The people here will gladly bear such a burden; the Nation will not willingly ask them to bear more.

After a study of this problem for several years as a citizen, and after a careful examination of the question for a short time from the position of a commissioner of the District, I have reached the conclusion that no adequate presentation of the problem in all its phases can be made unless it is based upon the fundamental facts.

Then he proceeds:

The act of 1878 provided that the commissioners should annually make estimates of the expenditures proposed for the next ensuing fiscal year; that they should be submitted to the Secretary of the Treasury, who, in turn, should, after revision, if it be necessary, transmit the estimates to Congress. The act then says:

"To the extent to which Congress shall approve of said estimates Congress shall appropriate the amount of 50 per cent thereof, and the remaining 50 per cent of such approved estimates shall be levied and assessed upon the taxable property and privileges in said District, other than the property of the United States and of the District of Columbia."

Since that time the annual appropriation act for the District of Columbia, immediately after the enacting clause, says:

"That one half of the following sums, respectively, is appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and the other half out of the revenues of the District of Columbia."

Notwithstanding the mandatory character of this legislative language, I shall, I believe, be able to show you that the expenditures of the District of Columbia have not been made on the half-and-half basis and that, as a matter of fact, there is no such thing as the half-and-half system.

It is purely a legislative fiction. When the collector of taxes of the District of Columbia, at the end of his day's work, deposits with the Treasurer of the United States his collections for the day he is given a receipt by the Treasurer which reads as follows, to read from an example I have before me:

"I certify that Ben L. Prince, collector of taxes, District of Columbia, has this day deposited to the credit of the United States $27,681.77, on account of collections, District of Columbia, for which I have signed duplicate receipt."

Every cent collected from the taxpayers of the District of Columbia goes into the Treasury to the credit of the United States; there is no account of the District of Columbia in the Treasury Department; and Congress is at liberty to do with the moneys collected from the taxpayers of the District anything it may do with the money collected at the customhouses, or the offices of the internal-revenue collectors anywhere in the Republic. Because it is necessary for the purpose of supporting my views to clearly establish these facts, I shall go into them in some detail.

These daily deposits remain in the hands of the Treasurer until the close of each month, at which time the accounting officers of the Treasury prepare what is known as a covering-in warrant, which takes not only the moneys deposited by the District but moneys deposited by all Federal agents out of the hands of the Treasurer and covers the amount into the Treasury, where the Federal accounting and bookkeeping system begins. No distinction is made as to the money collected by Federal agencies and the amount collected by the District, the whole amount being covered into the credit of miscellaneous receipts of the United States.

There is not on the books of the Treasury Department any account between the United States and the District of Columbia which shows or purports to show that there is any such class of moneys in the Treasury Department held as a trust fund or otherwise known as the revenues of the District of Columbia. As a matter of fact, the accounting officers of the Treasury hold that there is nothing contained in any act of Congress which calls for or requires the provision upon the books of the Treasury of an account dealing with revenue of the District of Columbia or the maintenance of a trust fund in the Treasury for such moneys.

And the Treasurer is precisely right. There is no such provision; there is no trust fund; there is nothing in the statute that distinguishes this from other money that comes into the National Treasury.

Senator WORKS. If there was an attempt to carry out the provisions of that appropriation act there would not be any revenue to apply to it, would there? There is not any District revenue in the Treasury?

Commissioner BROWNLOW. There is none, and never has been since the passage of the act of 1878.

The fact about it is, that the very appropriation that Congress makes payable out of the revenues of the District is nugatory, because there is no such money to be found there. If we adhered to the bill as it reads, there would be an appropriation of only half the amount that is necessary for carrying on the affairs of the District of Columbia. Mr. Brownlow had referred to a decision that was made by the Comptroller of the Treasury. He said:

The comptroller further says that if the municipal corporation of the District of Columbia were considered as a distinct legal entity, independent of the United States in its relations to such revenue, this would indicate that the revenues were to be kept separate and apart in the Treasury and accounted for as the revenues of the municipal corporation of the District of Columbia and not as a part of the general fund in the Treasury arising from the revenues of a particular source. For the reason stated by the comptroller in his decision he declined to permit an account to be kept on the books of the Treasury as a trust-fund account showing the payment into the Treasury of revenues of the District of Columbia, thus indicating that the account of the District of Columbia shall be kept only as a personal account between the United States and the District and that all revenues paid into the Treasury shall be treated as payments on account and credited to the District as such. The revenues of the District of Columbia in the Treasury Department are just as separate as and no more separate than are the customs collected by the collector of customs of the port of New York or the excise taxes collected by the collector at Peoria, Ill.

Senator WORKS. In other words, in that capacity he is simply an officer of the Government collecting the funds of the Government and paying them into the Treasury. Then, where is your District? Commissioner BROWNLOW. Fiscally, there is no such thing.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from California a question?

Mr. WORKS. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. If I understood the Senator's remark and the quotation from the act of 1878, the District Commissioners are authorized to lay out the work and prescribe what is to be done in the way of public-improvements in the city. Is that within the purview of that act?

Mr. WORKS. They make estimates and report what improvements shall be made; and that, as I have stated, is subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury; and, then, it is subject to the approval of Congress, of course.

Mr. NELSON. But is not one glaring vice of the law, that it practically, in the first instance, leaves it with the commissioners to decide what shall be done in the way of public improvements in the District?

Mr. WORKS. Oh, yes. That was commented upon during the hearings which were had. To be quite frank about it, the whole thing is illogical from beginning to end. It ought to be absolutely ripped up and new legislation enacted that would put the affairs of the District upon some sort of a business basis. That is one of the things for which I am striving. I want, first, to get it into the hands of the Government, where it belongs, and not leave it to some outside parties who have no authority to deal with it. Then, such legislation could be enacted by the Congress as would bring it into some businesslike form. The whole thing is absurd.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. WORKS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. KENYON. I should like to ask the Senator what is the particular divinity that seems to surround the half-and-half plan? If anybody makes any suggestions about it, he seems to be regarded as an enemy of the District. The Senator, I take it, from his remarks does not feel that the District is particularly benefited by the half-and-half plan, and that it would be in better condition if the Government carried on the whole work. There seems to be, however, some divinity that surrounds the half-and-half plan which I have never been able to understand.

Mr. WORKS. It has no divinity in my estimation. I believe it is exceedingly hurtful to the District, and, besides being illogical and leading us into these inconsistencies and resulting controversies, it takes out of the hands of the Government, or attempts to do so, the business that belongs to it. The Constitution in express terms gives the Congress of the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the District. It is the National Capital, and it ought to be dealt with by Congress and by nobody else.

Quoting a little further from Commissioner Brownlow, he says:

At the end of this present fiscal year, according to the best obtainable estimate, the District revenues will exceed one-half of the appropriations by $1,136,286.03.

That results from the fact that the assessments are not at all founded upon one-half of the estimates. It is absolutely fixed and unalterable by law that the rate shall be $1.50 a hundred, and that the assessed valuation shall be not less than two-thirds of the real value of the property. That assessment may bring more or bring less than the one-half. It has no connection with it at all.

Mr. NELSON. What is the rate on personal property?

Mr. WORKS. The rate on personal property is the same. Continuing the quotation:

For convenience it is customary to term this balance a surplus, but, as a matter of fact, it will be a part of the moneys of the United States, and will be available for the purposes of any appropriation made by Congress for any purpose whatsoever. Thus it will be seen that, in so far as it works at all, the half-and-half plan works against the District and not for it.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. WORKS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. CURTIS. While that statement may be true, is it not a fact that the books of the District of Columbia show the amount of money paid in, and that it would be no trouble at all to establish the fact that there was that much money due the District?

Mr. WORKS. Of course; but that would do no good whatever. It would not alter the situation in the least. The money is there and belongs to the Government, and the Government can do what it pleases with it. That is entirely immaterial, to my mind.

Mr. CURTIS. Still, the District can call upon the Government for that amount of money.

Mr. WORKS. Not at all. There is no provision or authority for its calling upon the Government. That money could not be returned to the District. There is no provision for that anywhere.

Mr. CURTIS. Could not Congress, in any appropriation that it might make for the benefit of the District, give the District credit for that much revenue?

Mr. WORKS. Congress, of course, has power to do almost anything it pleases with the money, but it never has done anything of that kind yet, and it is not very likely to do so, I am afraid, and, in fact, it could not do so without violating the terms of the half-and-half statute. Proceeding with the reading:

Mr. WORTHINGTON. What power has the Government to ask us to pay the expenses of the United States Government?—

A very pertinent inquiry—

Commissioner BROWNLOW. I am not going into what power it has. I am just stating here what the facts are. It has been suggested here, I believe, that the Government could not tax the District at all, but it has been doing it.

That was one of the contentions that was made before the committee in a very able speech made in favor of the position that the Government had no power at all to tax the residents of the District—

I firmly believe that all of our troubles with respect to this problem would be ended if the next appropriation bill, instead of reading "that one-half of the following sums, respectively, is appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and the other half out of the revenues of the District of Columbia," should be changed to read: "That the following sums are appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated."

If the amendment that is now before the Senate is not approved, I shall offer just that amendment, that the money shall be paid out of the National Treasury, which will present that question squarely.

Further along Commissioner Brownlow says:

If you could get this hard and fast half-and-half rule out of the way, this unjust and inequitable rule, there would not be any reason on earth why the patriotism and civic pride of men from Oklahoma, North Dakota, Maine, and South Carolina might not meet and blend with the civic pride of the men from Georgetown, Chevy Chase, Anacostia, and Brookland. They are all Americans, and it doesn't make anyone the less an American because he happens to live in the District of Columbia instead of Pennsylvania. He may still vote in Pennsylvania. He is an American, and the Pennsylvanian is an American, and they are both equally interested in developing the District of Columbia into the most magnificent Capital that any nation has ever had, because unless it is the most magnificent Capital on earth it can not express the aspirations of the great Republic of all times.

This most unfortunate condition I believe is due to the pernicious psychological influence of the half-and-half. Holding as I do that the half-and-half is but a legislative fiction, that its effects and influences are altogether psychological, conceding as I do its one-time benefit, I say that now it is almost altogether harmful. It is breeding distrust of the District in Congress; it is breeding distrust of Congress in the District; it is fomenting a feud that, if carried on to fruition, will result in dire disaster.

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] has asked the very pertinent question of what there is about the so-called organic act that appeals to the people of the District or to anybody else. I covered that phase of the question in my opening discussion. There are two troubles. One is the fear of the people of the District that they will be overtaxed if the half-and-half plan is abolished, but the half-and-half system affords them no protection in this respect. The other is the fear that the Government will not appropriate sufficient to improve the city as it ought to be improved, unless it is forced to do so by continuing in force the half-and-half system. There is the whole matter in a nutshell.

If the Congress of the United States lacks the patriotism to improve its own capital it is a sad condition of things, is it not? And if the Congress of the United States is unjust enough to impose upon the taxpayers of the District more than a fair and legitimate burden of taxation they are violating their duty and their oaths as representatives of the District. I have the feeling very strongly in my mind that if this duty were imposed upon Congress, where it belongs under the Constitution, the Members of Congress would feel the responsibility of making this city what it ought to be. Now they have the opportunity to shirk that responsibility by saying that the statute only provides that Congress shall put up one-half of the amount after the estimate has been made by the Commissioners and pared down by us until we can approve it. There is no justice in it.

I want, in this connection, to read very briefly what was said on this subject by Justice Siddons, who was for, I think, about 18 months one of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and who, as he says, gave this matter very careful consideration. He says:

First of all, with respect to the question which I suppose underlies this inquiry, whether or not the so-called half-and-half principle should be either repealed or modified.

My own conclusion, based upon observation of its operation over a considerable period of years, with a brief official connection with the administration of District affairs as a commissioner for some 18 months, is that the repeal of the half-and-half plan is eminently to be desired in the interests both of the people of the District of Columbia and the great legislature which enacts our laws.

I have reached that conclusion for the following, among other reasons: I believe that in the process of the years that have passed since the enactment of the so-called half-and-half plan it has become a fruitful source of vexation and irritation, both on the part of the citizens of the District and of Congress, more particularly those Members of the House and Senate whose official duties charge them with the care and supervision, legislatively, of the affairs of the District of Columbia.

I believe it is now objectionable because it proceeds on what seems to me to be a fixed, narrow, and arbitrary method of determining what should be the contribution upon the part of the local taxpayers and what should be the contribution from the Federal Government.

I say that because, in my humble opinion and judgment, there is but one power, one governing power, in the District of Columbia, and that is the Congress of the United States; I mean, of course, with respect to District affairs. Constitutionally it has supreme and exclusive power, and with that lodgment of supreme and exclusive power follows necessarily a heavy responsibility on the part of Congress to so legislate that the National Capital may be developed as every man and woman who loves his country would wish to see it developed and grow.

I have no disposition at all to pass judgment upon what has taken place in the past, either in respect to specific legislation from time to time, or the attitude of some of our citizens with respect to such legislation. I only can repeat that my observation has been that for a long period, at least 15 years, in Congress and out, the existence of this so-called half-and-half principle has been forever the cause of the irritation and vexation that I have adverted to, and in addition to that there is never a piece of legislation proposed for the District of Columbia that involves expenditure of money that the old wrangle over the half-and-half principle does not make its appearance.

I believe the existence of that irritation on both sides can hardly be gainsaid, as a matter that has been very unfortunate in its effect upon the District of Columbia in this, that it has postponed over and over again the enactment of desirable and necessary legislation.

Another reason why I have reached the conclusion that the half-and-half principle should be repealed is this: I have observed the influence of its existence and operation in several different ways, with respect especially to the matter of assessments for purposes of taxation in the District of Columbia, and with respect to the estimates submitted year by year by the commissioners to Congress, as they are required to do, and in the approach in Congress to consideration, either in the matter of appropriation or legislation.

I believe that Commissioner Brownlow, in his recommendations to this honorable committee, has probably suggested the wise course. Before I read his statement to the committee I had been very greatly impressed by the resolution offered, I think, by the honorable Senator from California, as to what, in his judgment, would be a wise disposition of the matter.

That proposition is the one that I am now presenting to the Senate.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. WORKS. Will the Senator wait just a moment until I complete the reading?

Mr. GALLINGER. I merely want to ascertain from what the Senator is reading; that is all.

Mr. WORKS. I am reading from the statement of Justice Siddons, who was formerly a commissioner of the District. He continues:

It has seemed to me that it will never be possible to frame legislation that will be really permanent in its character which proceeds upon the theory of a partnership between the local taxpayers on the one side and the Federal Government, represented by the Congress of the United States, on the other.

I find no warrant for any such conception, either in the constitutional provision under which Congress operates or in the legislation of Congress from time to time.

I find none in the act of 1878, which established the so-called half-and-half principle.

Mr. President, I have no more interest in this question than any other citizen of the United States. I have had some glimmering hope that I might, before leaving the Senate, be instrumental in extricating the District of Columbia from the unfortunate condition in which it now finds itself, growing out of this half-and-half system. The hope is a very faint one, I confess. When I look around and see the empty seats in the Chamber when I am doing the best I can to explain my views on this subject, and point out the reasons why I think this law should be changed, I am satisfied that Senators have very little interest in this question; and yet I think it is a fundamental question that ought to interest the mind of every Member of this body.

I know that the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] has discovered a great many difficulties, in his own estimation, in the way of making this slight change, which, practically speaking, amounts to very little; but those difficulties are purely imaginary. They do not exist. The Senator says there are, I believe, 111 statutes in existence that deal with this question of the half-and-half system, providing the proportions in which the amounts shall be paid. After all, Mr. President, they simply amount to this in practice: That these moneys are all paid out of the National Treasury; and all that is done by the amendment that I offer here is to provide that just that thing shall be done and authorized by law to be done.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. WORKS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator quoted from Justice Siddons, who for a brief time was a Commissioner of the District of Columbia. Justice Siddons says that there has been trouble all along the line, and that every time an attempt was made to get an appropriation for the District of Columbia this question came up, and there was a wrangle over it.

Mr. President, I was a member of the Committee on the District of Columbia for 22 years, and I was chairman of the committee for 12 years. During that time we passed hundreds and hundreds of bills through our committee, and I never heard the question raised. Only a few weeks ago we appropriated a million dollars for a bridge across the Potomac River, to take the place of the old Aqueduct Bridge, and it is provided that it shall be paid on the half-and-half principle. Nobody objected. There was no row about it. Last year we passed the Borland amendment, a very important amendment affecting the people of the District—

Mr. WORKS. And a very bad piece of legislation.

Mr. GALLINGER. I agree with the Senator; but nevertheless it was not the cause of any riot in the District of Columbia. Not long ago we made a large appropriation to build a reformatory at Occoquan, and it is in process of construction now. The half-and-half principle is recognized in that legislation. So that Justice Siddons is drawing upon his imagination when he says there has been trouble all along the line whenever we try to legislate for the District of Columbia. It is not so.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, Justice Siddons did not say it was so, either. The Senator has misunderstood what Justice Siddons said. He was speaking about these appropriations. Of course, Mr. President, when it came to enacting a statute providing for the payment under the half-and-half system, the people who are raising the trouble dared not object, because that is what they have been insisting on, very unwisely, I think; and the people who have believed that the half-and-half system was a bad thing have never been saying much, but if we proposed to touch the half-and-half then there was a row. Justice Siddons would not have come before this committee except that we asked him to come. That was true of the others who testified against the half-and-half system, because it was understood by everybody that the majority of the people in the District of Columbia wanted the half-and-half system, and they had a committee of 100 of the leading citizens of the District to come before that committee and insist upon the maintenance of the half-and-half plan. That was why these people were not complaining and did not complain whenever legislation of the kind mentioned by the Senator from New Hampshire was enacted, because it was in accordance with their wishes; but whenever the general appropriation bills came up, and any disposition was shown to change this system and abolish the half-and-half plan, then the trouble commenced, and the war has been on ever since I have been in the Senate, nearly six years.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. WORKS. I do.

Mr. STERLING. I should like to ask the Senator from California if any agitation has ever been started by the people of the District of Columbia in opposition to the half-and-half system.

Mr. WORKS. No; and I am not at all surprised at that. They have been willing to let the thing run along until they were asked whether they believed in the system or whether it was beneficial or not; but I am perfectly satisfied in my own mind, from the testimony that was given, that more than half of the people in this District would rather see the half-and-half plan abolished.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, the Senator spoke a while ago about the unfortunate condition in which the people of the District of Columbia now found themselves because of the half-and-half system. I did not think that the people of the District of Columbia regarded that system as putting them in any unfortunate condition at all, but I thought it was the agitation against the half-and-half system which they deplored.

Mr. WORKS. Oh, well, this agitation has been at the instance of a very few people, and they have worked up a sentiment of that kind in favor of the half-and-half plan, and they have based it absolutely and exclusively upon their own fears, which ought to have no foundation whatever.

I care very little, Mr. President, whether the District of Columbia wants it or does not want it. That is not the question. The question is whether this is just and fair legislation. If the people of the District of Columbia do not realize their misfortune, that is no reason why the Congress of the United States ought not to correct it if it is wrong. I am dealing with the merits of it, not with somebody's fears or somebody's desires. Not only is it unfortunate to the people of the District, but it is unfortunate to the Government. We are not having the appropriations here that we ought to have. This city is not what it should be to-day, and the cause of it has been the attempted enforcement of the half-and-half system that has limited the appropriations made by Congress. If the hands of Congress had been free, if the responsibility had been placed wholly upon the Congress of the United States, as it should be, and is, under the Constitution of the United States, I am perfectly satisfied that many appropriations that have not been made would have been made under such a system.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, in what way have the hands of the Government been tied?

Mr. WORKS. By limiting the appropriations to one-half of the estimates made by the Commissioners of the District and approved by the Treasury.

Mr. GALLINGER. But the Congress has not responded to the terms of the law, and has been unwilling to make those appropriations.

Mr. WORKS. Very well.

Mr. GALLINGER. Now, who is at fault, the District of Columbia or Congress?

Mr. WORKS. If Congress has not responded, then we had better abolish the half-and-half plan.

Mr. GALLINGER. We had better abolish Congress—that is, so far as our parsimony is concerned.

Mr. WORKS. Ah! That is begging the question, Mr. President.

I am not going to consume more time in discussing this question. I have done what seems to me to have been incumbent upon me, after the very thorough examination I made of this question as a member of a committee appointed by Congress. As I said, it is a matter of no particular consequence to me. I shall soon be going out of the Senate and will not be affected by it in any way. I shall be 3,000 miles away. Maybe sometimes I shall come to the Capital. If I do, I should like to see it looking better than it is to-day. In my judgment, until this system is changed it will be a third-rate city, just as it is now.

Mr. President, the appeals of the Senator from New Hampshire, repeated over and over again, that the Senate shall stand by the committee, are to me rather pathetic. If this legislation can have no better standing in the Senate than that it has very poor support. I might just as well say that Congress has raised a joint committee of the two Houses to deal directly with this question, and that committee has determined against the half-and-half plan, and appeal to Congress to stand by their committee that they appointed for the specific purpose of determining this question. But that is not the question, after all. Each Senator must judge of this matter upon his own conscience and judgment of what is right or wrong. He should not be influenced by somebody else's judgment, unless it conforms to his own. I think it was incumbent upon the Senators to at least read the report of the committee that was appointed by Congress. They have not done that, with a very few exceptions, as I demonstrated the other day; much less have they read the evidence that was taken at the hearings.

I am morally certain that if Senators would investigate and study this question as I have done, and if they were free and unbiased in their judgment, they would come to the same conclusion that I have reached, that the half-and-half system ought to be abolished. There would be a few exceptions, probably, of Senators like the Senator from New Hampshire, who is firmly and conscientiously convinced that the half-and-half system is the thing in the interest of the Government and in the interest of the District of Columbia; but I think there are very few Senators who, if they would examine this matter with perfectly open minds, would not come to the conclusion that under all the circumstances it would be infinitely better, both for the people of the District of Columbia and for the Government itself that this system should be abolished.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, when I first entered the Senate I was placed upon the District of Columbia Committee. I felt then that those who came from States that do not have so many local interests to look after should constitute the membership of that committee, and I tried to get off of it; but I was kept on the committee, and am still a member of that committee.

I have endeavored to do the very best I could to secure legislation for the best interests of the District and of the people of the District. I looked upon Washington City—and when I say that, I use the term as applying to the District of Columbia—as the Capital of the Nation, and I thought that it ought to be made the most beautiful city in the United States. I hoped that it might be made the most beautiful city in the world. I believe that nothing should be spared to make the Capital of this great country of ours fully commensurate with the wealth and power and standing of the country of which it is the Capital; and if we should do that, then Washington City would be the most beautiful city in the world.

I have felt that the people of the country would like to see that done. I have been convinced that the people of our country look upon Washington City as their own city; that they are interested in it as much as, if not more than, the people who live here. Washington City and the District of Columbia are not for the people who live here, but they belong to all the people of the entire country; and, in my judgment, they are more interested in their beautification and all those things that tend to make a splendid city and a happy people than even the people who are here.

A year or two ago we had quite a controversy on the floor of the Senate with reference to the half-and-half proposition. It was criticized very severely. It was charged that the people here are not paying the taxes that they ought to pay. It was alleged that Washington City and the District of Columbia had become a haven for those who do not desire to pay taxes, or those who would evade the payment of taxes upon their property and their means.

It seemed to me that that was aside from the issue, but that there was some room for controversy over the proposition that the people here might not be paying a sufficient amount of taxes, and that the half-and-half plan was unfair to the people of the country. I did not think so myself; I did not believe that the people of the country were objecting to paying 50 per cent, at any rate, of what was necessary to run this city or the District of Columbia; but for several years we have had quite a controversy, especially between the Senate and the House of Representatives, over this half-and-half proposition, the one insisting upon abolishing it and the other insisting upon maintaining it.

In view of the controversy that we had here in the Senate, which resulted in the appointment of the special committee, of which the Senator from California was a member, I concluded that last summer I would spend my vacation in talking a little about Washington City and its government and find out how the people, at least of my State, felt with reference to their relation to the National Capital, and try to find out whether or not they thought they were paying too much for the maintenance of this Capital. In order to make the matter more interesting to those that I might talk to, and to make it a little bit easier for myself, I gathered together some hundred and odd slides of Washington City showing the parks and the streets—

Mr. BORAH. Did the Senator have "movies"?

Mr. JONES. I did not have any "movies," because moving-picture apparatus was too complicated to take around, but I had slides showing the parks and the monuments and the streets and the statuary and the different buildings that we have, both the exterior and the interior. I had a very pleasant time myself, as well as a very profitable one; and I discussed, in connection with these pictures, the National Capital. I expressed my views as to what I thought we ought to make of it. I told the people the outlines of the plan of government, and how the expenses were met, and then stated to them that, so far as I was concerned, unless they took a very strong position to the contrary, I proposed to vote at every opportunity to make Washington City the most beautiful capital city in the world, upon the theory that it was the Capital of our country, in which all of our people were interested, in which every section of the country had an interest, and that it ought to be made commensurate with the country of which it was the Capital.

That sentiment met with very hearty approval everywhere. Everybody seemed to agree with it. I stated that under the present plan Congress appropriated out of its own funds 50 per cent toward defraying the expenses of the development of the Capital and that the other 50 per cent was raised out of taxes from the city, and that there were some who contended that the local people ought to pay more. I stated that, so far as I was concerned, unless they felt that they were paying too much, I would not vote to make the people of the District pay any more than 50 per cent; that I believed that that was enough and I was not so sure but that the National Government should pay more than that. But I invited any persons who might think that they were being required to pay too much toward defraying the expenses of this city to let me know their views. I have never received a single communication, either oral or written, from anyone in my State saying that he thought he was required to pay too much toward defraying the expenses of the National Capital; and so I am satisfied that the people of the country, at any rate, are not objecting and will not object to paying whatever is necessary to make this Capital what they would like to see it, and that they do want to see it made the most beautiful capital city in the world.

The people come here from every section of the country. They come here because it is their capital city, and they come here to see its buildings and its parks and streets and all the various governmental matters in which they are interested; and, in my judgment, the more beautiful we can make our city the better will every citizen be when he leaves it. Every citizen that comes here and sees these magnificent buildings and the beautiful parks and things of that character is better when he goes away than when he comes here. Of course, if he gets around to see this asylum that we have out here, if he gets around into some of the slums and alleys of the city, and if he sees some of the school accommodations that we have, and things like that, he will go away, in my judgment, wondering why it is that his Congress allows such things as these in his capital city. He may not go away a worse man, but he will certainly go away humiliated at what can be found within the limits of the city that he believed before he came here was a model city in almost every way.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. JONES. I do.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I will say that I believe that has been the effort on the part of the Senate—to correct those troubles. We have fought for their correction session after session, and have tried, so far as the schools, the parks, and the municipal hospital here were concerned, to better the conditions that now exist. We have done everything we can; but it seems that there is opposition coming from the other side of the Capitol.

Mr. JONES. I agree with the Senator with reference to that. I am a member of both committees. I am a member of the Appropriations Committee, and I am going to state my position with reference to the amendment of the Senator from California and the amendment proposed by the committee in just a few moments.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. JONES. I do.

Mr. WORKS. The Senator says he is on both of the committees. I should like to ask him what provision has been inserted in the bill to improve the condition of the slums.

Mr. JONES. There is no provision in this bill for that purpose.

Mr. WORKS. I believe the only provision that has been made relates to the engine houses, does it not?

Mr. JONES. There is a provision here with reference to the hospital, and there are very material increases for the different schools.

Mr. SHEPPARD and Mr. GALLINGER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield, and to whom?

Mr. JONES. I think the Senator from Texas rose first. I will yield to him, and then I will yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I desire to ask the Senator what he thinks the visitors will say as to the saloons at the mouths of alleys and so near the schools and churches?

Mr. JONES. I am satisfied that a great majority of them would go away feeling very badly with reference to it. Now I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. It would depend very much from whence they came, would it not, so far as the saloons were concerned?

Mr. JONES. Well, I said, the great majority.

Mr. GALLINGER. One suggestion I wanted particularly to make is that there is no rule preventing the Senator from California offering an amendment relating to the slums, if he chooses to do so. It did not come directly before our committee, but it is open, of course, for consideration on this bill or any other bill.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, the Senator may remember that I have done that very thing, with disastrous results.

Mr. GALLINGER. I do not remember that.

Mr. WORKS. Well, that is true.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, right in that connection, and in view of that suggestion, I think I shall make a remark here. We have the Committee on the District of Columbia independent of the Appropriations Committee. There are many matters in connection with this District that that committee ought to consider, that that committee ought to take up, that we ought to act upon. The proposition that the Senator from California has suggested as an amendment to this bill ought to have been considered by that committee. I recognize the force of the objection that legislation of that character ought not to be presented to an appropriation bill; that we ought to have the report of a committee to assist us in considering legislation of that importance. I recognize the force of that.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. JONES. Yes; I do.

Mr. WORKS. I think, in justice to the District Committee, that I should call attention to the fact that a measure embodying just what is in this amendment was introduced by me as a separate bill and referred to that committee, and it has been under consideration—I do not know to what extent—by one of the subcommittees of the Committee on the District of Columbia, of which the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] is chairman. He would be able to tell what has become of it. I do not know.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. JONES. I do.

Mr. POMERENE. It is true that that bill has received consideration at the hands of that subcommittee; and the views of the subcommittee, as I gathered them from the expressions about the table, were not in harmony with the bill. Within the last month or two we have had sessions when we could get our committee together, and we have been laboring over the juvenile court bill, and hope to have that reported out; and we feel that it is perhaps the most important legislation relating to the District which is before the committee.

Mr. WORKS. At all events, no report of the subcommittee has been made to the full committee, as I understand.

Mr. POMERENE. No formal report; no.

Mr. WORKS. It has never received the consideration of the District Committee?

Mr. POMERENE. No; that is true.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, if the Senator from Washington will permit me—

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. GALLINGER. On the 19th day of February, 1914, Sixty-third Congress, second session, the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH], the chairman of the committee, introduced a bill to provide, in the interest of public health, comfort, morals, and safety, for the discontinuance of the use as dwellings of buildings situated in alleys in the District of Columbia. Of course, I do not know what became of that bill, but it is a very comprehensive bill, recommended by the commissioners; and while doubtless there would be some differences of opinion about it, if it should become a law, while it would take a good deal of money out of the Treasury, both of the District and of the Government, it would practically solve this alley problem, which has been so much talked about. We have done a good deal in that connection. We have demolished a great many buildings in the alleys. We have made minor streets of some of those alleys, and have spent a very considerable amount of money. My observation has been that the alley situation in Washington certainly is not any worse than it is in a great many other cities, and in some cities that I know I think, particularly, using the word "slums," the slums are even worse than they are here; but there is a chance for improvement.

But if we add an amendment appropriating a million dollars toward improving the slums, what does the Senator think would become of it?

Mr. JONES. I do not think that we should be governed in our action here by the consideration as to what should become of it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Neither do I.

Mr. JONES. I know the Senator does not believe in that, because he has not acted on that theory. I think we ought to do what we think we ought to do, and then let the responsibility for failure rest where it may.

Now, with reference to the alley proposition to which the Senator just referred, I myself introduced a bill quite a while before that bill was introduced to prohibit dwelling houses in these alleys, and that is now a law. It would not be out of place to emphasize it and call the attention of those who may be interested in what shall become of the property in these alleys to the fact that that provision will take effect. Time is running and it is not going to be long until it will be absolutely unlawful for anyone to maintain a residence fronting upon some of the alleys here in the city. The business people of this city who may be interested in the matter had better wake up to the fact that before very long that law will go into effect, and it is substantially the provision that was in the bill that I introduced.

Now, coming back to the consideration of these legislative propositions by the Committee on the District of Columbia, as I said, I recognize the force of the objection that these propositions ought not to be presented on an appropriation bill; that they ought to come here with the report of the Committee on the District of Columbia; that they should be considered independently not only by the committee but by the Senate. That ought to be done, but what is the situation? The situation is that the District of Columbia Committee has not had, in my recollection, more than half a dozen meetings all this session of Congress. Meeting after meeting has been called by the chairman of that committee, but no quorum could be secured.

I want to say in justice to the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE], whose attention was called to the bill a moment ago as having been referred to his subcommittee, that I do not believe there is any other subcommittee of the District of Columbia except the one of which the Senator from Ohio is the chairman that has reported any substantial measures to the full committee during this entire session. He has reported several very important pieces of legislation.

Mr. WORKS. I hope it will not be understood by my reference to the committee or the subcommittee of which the Senator from Ohio is chairman that I was intending a criticism on his committee.

Mr. POMERENE. I did not so understand it.

Mr. WORKS. I am very glad to know that.

Mr. JONES. I did not understand that either; but I do feel that it ought to be said in justice to the Senator from Ohio that he has given a great deal of his time to several of these very important matters affecting the District of Columbia, and I am glad of it. I should like to see more interest in the District of Columbia and I should like if possible to have a District Committee such that when a meeting is called by the chairman at least a quorum will respond. But the situation is that we have not been able to get these meetings so that the legislation for the benefit of this District will be neglected unless we try to get it on the District of Columbia appropriation bill. That is one reason why I should like to see the ruling made by the Vice President the other day approved by the Senate as the rule to follow with reference to the District of Columbia appropriation bill, that is, that the District of Columbia is a special agency of the Government and the District of Columbia appropriation bill is a special appropriation bill; that it relates solely and exclusively to the District of Columbia; its appropriations apply only to the District of Columbia; it is not general in its scope; it is not general in its purpose; it is not general in its application; it is special, and therefore, we can place upon the bill any legislative matter in which the people of the District are interested. If we could have that rule of the Senate in my judgment it would not be long until we would get some good law for the District of Columbia; and it would not be long before we would meet many of these conditions in the District of Columbia that are so regrettable.

Mr. President, the improvement of Washington City should not depend upon the people of Washington City. They are not responsible for this Capital; they are not responsible for its development; they are not responsible for its improvement; they are not responsible for the various conditions that exist here. The Congress of the United States under the Constitution is the sole body that has the responsibility of this District in its hands, and Congress should be held responsible. Congress should not shirk the responsibility, and Congress should not have its hands tied or hampered by any arrangement it may have provided for or authorized between Congress and the people of the District of Columbia.

In my judgment the present system hampers Congress in doing what ought to be done here. The very fact that we have made an arrangement under which we are to appropriate one-half of the expenses of the District, the other half to be determined in fact by what the assessor of the District may say, is largely responsible, in my judgment, as the Senator from California has suggested, for our failure to appropriate the money for many of the things that ought to be appropriated for. The Senator from New Hampshire well pointed out our failure to appropriate for schools—

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President—

Mr. JONES. In a moment. And for hospitals and for asylums; how we have neglected the alleys and have neglected our streets and our avenues and various things. In my judgment this neglect is the outgrowth of the system that we have established here. I yield now to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. POMERENE. Apropos of what the Senator is discussing now, he will bear in mind that the subcommittee of the District Committee of which I am chairman reported out what is commonly known as the District Delegate bill, introduced by the Senator's colleague [Mr. POINDEXTER]. Does not the Senator think that if that bill were passed, so that there would be some one on the floor of the House at least who would give greater personal attention to the matters about which the Senator is now speaking, it would lead to better consideration by the two Houses of Congress of those matters which pertain exclusively to the District?

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, while I am in favor of giving the District of Columbia a Delegate in the House of Representatives, I doubt whether that would have very much influence one way or the other upon the conditions to which we have been referring.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President—

Mr. JONES. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WORKS. Why should the representation of the District in Congress be limited to a Delegate in the House? Why should not the people of the District be represented just as the people of your State and mine are represented in both Houses?

Mr. JONES. I did not say that I was not in favor of that; I was just answering the suggestion of the Senator from Ohio. I am not prepared to say that I would be against representation on the floor of the Senate, but I am inclined to think the District of Columbia bears an entirely different relation to the country from what any other State or part of the country bears. I am not prepared to say that I would be in favor of having the District of Columbia represented by two Senators on the floor of the Senate, but I will not say that I am not for a proposition of that kind. I have not given it much consideration.

Mr. POMERENE. In answer to the suggestion of the Senator from California, if I could have my way I would have a Delegate in the Senate from the District of Columbia. I do not understand that frame of mind which can become hysterical at times because of the fact that some of our island possessions do not have a representative here and then deprive 350,000 or 400,000 people here in the District of any part in their government.

Mr. WORKS. May I ask the Senator from Ohio why he confines it to a Delegate in the Senate? If we are going to have representation, why should not the people of the District be represented like other American citizens in the States?

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I do not know that the Senator and I would differ very much upon that subject. I used the word "Delegate" because we spoke of the representative in the House as being a Delegate in contradistinction to a Representative. The thought that was uppermost in my own mind was that the District should have representatives in both Houses of Congress, not only with the right to speak but with the right to vote as well.

Mr. WORKS. There is a joint resolution to amend the Constitution in such a way as to admit representation on both floors of Congress for the District of Columbia. I believe that joint resolution is before the Senator's subcommittee. Can the Senator inform us what has become of it?

Mr. POMERENE. It has been before our subcommittee and has had very serious consideration. I regret to say that I seem to be in the minority in that matter.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I do think, if we are going to have representation on the part of the District of Columbia in either House of Congress, it ought to be representation; it ought not to be a mere form, it ought not to be like a Delegate from the Territories as heretofore; but there ought to be a real representative, one who has not only the right to talk but who has the right to vote. When the Senator from California asked me about the Senate I had in mind the proposition that, if we are to have representation in the Senate, it would be representation like any other community or unit of the country; in other words, they should have their Senators here who would have a right to talk and also a right to vote.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President—

Mr. JONES. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me, we have representation in one body from the Philippine Islands, from Hawaii, from Alaska, from Porto Rico, and I never have comprehended the matter why we did not have representation of some kind in the District of Columbia. But, Mr. President, if the amendment of the Senator from California prevails in this body, the District of Columbia is abolished and we have a city of Washington, and who would think of giving representation to a city?

Mr. JONES. It would be just the same, because the boundary would be just the same. Under the amendment of the Senator from California the boundary would be just the same, and whether you called it the District of Columbia or the city of Washington would not make any difference.

Mr. GALLINGER. It strikes me as being incongruous to give a city representation in Congress.

Mr. JONES. Of course it is called the city of Washington, yet it is more, it is the Capital of the country. It is just the same as the District of Columbia. I think I can see very plainly the distinction that the Senator from California makes and what he is trying to do away with. In my talk around in my State last summer I told the people that the Capital of our country is not the city of Washington at all. They generally have the idea that the city of Washington is the Capital of this country, but it is not; it is the District of Columbia. That is what the Capital is; it is coextensive with the boundaries of the District of Columbia.

The idea of the Senator from California is just along that line, and he wants to call this the "City of Washington" instead of the District of Columbia. It is very easy to make that change. So far as I am concerned, we have been talking a good deal about the mental attitude, and all that sort of thing, during this discussion. It is very easy to get my mental attitude in the position of having the city of Washington coextensive with the District of Columbia.

But we have gone off on several matters that I had not intended to touch upon. I simply wanted to refer to these plans. Now, as to the two plans proposed. There are really three plans, you might say. The House proposes to simply supplement the taxes that may be raised in the District of Columbia by whatever amount it deems necessary or proper. In other words, the House proposes to raise taxes in the District of Columbia and apply those taxes toward the development of the city of Washington and its improvement and defraying its expenses, and then if there is anything lacking Congress will appropriate whatever it thinks is necessary.

The Senate committee strikes out that plan, and proposes that one-half of the expenses of the District of Columbia shall be borne by the Government of the United States and that the other half shall be borne by the people of the District of Columbia; in other words, leaving it a fixed amount which shall be contributed by each side of the question, I might say. Under the House plan it might be that the National Government would appropriate two-thirds and the people of the District would pay one-third, but apparently it does not seem at all likely. It seems that more probably the result would be that the people of the District would contribute about two thirds and Congress would appropriate possibly the other third. That is the way it seems to work out, and possibly that is the way it would continue to work out.

The plan proposed by the Senator from California is that we appropriate out of the Treasury of the United States every dollar that is necessary to take care of the Capital of the Nation in the way of the actual expenses and in the way of its growth and development, and that a fair and reasonable tax shall be placed upon the property of the people of the District of Columbia, and that that shall go into the Treasury of the United States no matter what it may be. Now, that is a plan that appeals to me. It seems to me that that is the simple logical result of the relation of the District of Columbia to the Nation. The people of the country are responsible for the Capital. They are glad to pay whatever is necessary to properly administer it, improve it, and develop it; and it does seem to me that the whole country, in other words the National Treasury, should take care of the Capital City, and then the people of the District could not complain if they were required to pay a just and fair tax corresponding to what the people of other cities have to pay throughout the country and let it go into the National Treasury. That seems to be a very simple arrangement and a very just and a very fair one.

Now, what would be the situation in Congress if that plan were in operation? Congress would then be solely responsible for what was done in this Capital, and if persons came here and found something that required money to correct, and should ask "Why have you not done it?" or "Who is responsible for this situation?" they could point right to Congress and say, "Congress is responsible; the Representatives and the Senators from the different States in the Union are responsible." Somebody comes down here from my State and complains about some condition here. I say, "Well, we appropriate half the money and the people of the District appropriate the other half and we have not had enough." That rather throws the responsibility upon the people of the District. That ought not to be. Take the plan suggested by the Senator from California, and then if anybody comes here and says, "Why have you not done so?" I have simply to say, "Congress has not done so."

Mr. STERLING. I should like to ask the Senator from Washington whether the responsibility has ever been thrown upon the District under the half-and-half system for not having raised its proportion, or what it should have raised?

Mr. JONES. No; I do not think so. Of course we can change this arrangement. We can change the act of 1878 whenever we see fit; it is not a constitutional provision; but we have not done it, and we will not do it apparently; and it gives us a sort of way by which we can escape responsibility.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President—

Mr. JONES. I yield to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. LANE. I want to ask the Senator whether he does not think that Congress has enough sins to answer for without washing its hands of some of the others before adding another to its burden?

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, that may be true, but we can not get away from the sin of neglect of Washington City, because there is one provision in the Constitution that is so plain that there is no room for question. We have the sole and exclusive jurisdiction here, and we can not shunt it off to somebody else, and we can not escape it.

Now, Mr. President, my position is this: I am going to vote for the amendment of the Senator from California, but if it is not adopted I am going to vote for the amendment of the Senate committee. I think it is a far better proposition than the proposition of the House. Until we can get this condition done away with I think the Senate ought to insist upon the continuance of what is properly known as the half-and-half system.

Now, Mr. President, that is all I am going to say.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARDWICK in the chair). The pending question is on the amendment of the Senator from California.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I desire to say just a word on the subject that is immediately before the Senate, namely, the plan of taxation.

I am not prepared to say that the half-and-half plan is exactly just or that it is the most desirable plan. I am here to say that in my judgment neither the plan presented by the House nor the plan presented by the amendment proposed by the Senator from California meets the situation as well as the half-and-half plan. It has been in operation in this District for a good many years. I realize that it is extremely difficult to adopt any plan which would be exactly just as between the District of Columbia and the people of the United States. We can only approximate justice or right in this case as in many others.

When it comes to a consideration of the portion of the expenditures which are to be met by the General Government and the portion by the District of Columbia it is well for us to take into consideration the value of the property in the District. That is not a complete criterion, by any means, which should control us. The assessed value of the real estate in the District on June 30, 1915, was $390,098,849. The assessed value of all exempt property in the District—and I take it that means churches, school buildings, and public buildings generally—is $264,367,265. At its full valuation according to the report which was submitted to us by the joint select committee that had this under consideration it would probably be valued at $396,550,898. Not speaking exactly, about one-half of the valuation of the real estate in this District is exempt from taxation.

I do not have before me the figures giving the value of the privately owned personal property in the District, but when we take into consideration the enormous treasure belonging to the United States which is in this District, the vast amount of personal property which makes up the equipment of all of our public institutions, and the enormous value of the archives of the Government which have no money value but which are of inestimable value considered from the standpoint of the public, it is fair to say that, in my judgment, the value of the personal property belonging to the Government is equal to that of the personal property which is privately owned.

Now, let us bear in mind one or two other facts. This city is not a commercial city. It is not a manufacturing city. It is a residential city. It is the Capital of the Nation. Our streets, our parks, were laid out with reference to its residential character and to the fact that it is the Capital of the Nation rather than as a commercial or a manufacturing city. This necessarily increases the expenses of the city over and above what would be the expenses of the ordinary commercial city.

Another thought. Of course there are some very rich people here. Something has been said in the course of this discussion about the question of taxation. I am not enamored of the method of taxation we have here. My belief is that intangible property, other perhaps than credits, should be taxed. But while we have a few very wealthy people we have many, many more people who are in very modest circumstances. We have in this District about 40,000 Government employees, and with few exceptions those Government employees are dependent upon their salaries and are not men of means.

If they have any property many of them have it in their own States, far away from the Capital. That is not taxable here in the District. But the 40,000 employees, with the members of their families, perhaps aggregate from 150,000 to 200,000 people. They have very little property which is taxable in the District, but while they are in the District they are a source of expense to the District. They have their children to be educated; they have their dependents to be cared for; and the Government is, perhaps, more interested in them than in the citizens of the District who are not in Government employ. We ought to bear these facts in mind when we are trying to adopt some system of taxation which may be equitable and just as between the Government and the District.

When we take into consideration the value of the property which belongs to the public and that which belongs to private property holders, the fact that this is the Capital of the country, the fact that we must necessarily keep this city in a somewhat better condition than the average city of the country, my belief is that we shall not be very far from the proportion of the expenditures which should be borne by the Government and by the District when we adhere to the half-and-half plan. Until something better is proposed, I shall vote to continue that plan.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment proposed by the Senator from California [Mr. WORKS].

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. JONES. I wish to suggest that most of the objections presented by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] would be entirely done away with by the adoption of the amendment of the Senator from California. We would not have to be worrying our legislative minds and legislative action as to how much money should be raised by the people of the District and how much should be contributed by the National Government, and all that sort of thing.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, before the amendment of the Senator from California is voted on, I ask unanimous consent that the ruling of the Chair to the effect that this amendment was in order on an appropriation bill be submitted to the Senate.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair did not catch the request of the Senator from Texas.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The Vice President requested the Senate to consider his decision that the amendment offered by the Senator from California [Mr. WORKS] was in order on the District of Columbia appropriation bill. I ask unanimous consent that the decision of the Chair be now submitted to the Senate and voted upon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas appeals from the decision of the Chair, holding that the amendment of the Senator from California is in order, and asks unanimous consent that the appeal be now entertained.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, that was not the request of the Senator from Texas. His request was that the ruling of the Chair be submitted to the Senate at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It can only be done in that way, the Chair will state, as there is no appeal pending.

Mr. BRYAN. The Senator from Texas wants the decision which the Chair made in his ruling several days ago submitted to the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida will pardon the present occupant of the chair. The present occupant of the chair is utterly unable to find the way to submit the question. The Chair was putting it, of course, as he thought in the parliamentary form.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas objects. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from California.

Mr. WORKS. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum is suggested. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bankhead	Husting	Penrose	Stone
Borah	James	Pittman	Swanson
Bryan	Johnson, S. Dak.	Polindexter	Taggart
Chamberlain	Jones	Pomerene	Thomas
Clapp	Kenyon	Ransdell	Thompson
Clarke, Ark.	Kern	Reed	Tillman
Cummins	La Follette	Saulsbury	Underwood
Curtis	Lane	Shafroth	Vardaman
Dillingham	Lee, Md.	Sheppard	Wadsworth
Fletcher	Lippitt	Sherman	Walsh
Gallinger	Martin, Va.	Smith, Ariz.	Weeks
Gronna	Nelson	Smith, Ga.	Williams
Harding	Newlands	Smith, Md.	Works
Hardwick	Norris	Smith, S. C.
Hollis	Overman	Smoot
Hughes	Page	Sterling

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-one Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. The pending question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from California.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. On that I ask for the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CLAPP (when his name was called). In the absence of the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], with whom I have a general pair, I withhold my vote.

Mr. GRONNA (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Maine [Mr. JOHNSON]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] and vote "nay."

Mr. OVERMAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN]. Not knowing how he would vote if he were present, I withhold my vote.

Mr. REED (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] and vote "nay."

Mr. SAULSBURY (when his name was called). Transferring my pair with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COIT] to the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD], I vote "nay."

Mr. SMITH of Georgia (when his name was called). Transferring my pair with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] to the senior Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN], I vote "nay."

Mr. STONE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK]. I am informed that he is absent on official business. I am also told by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] that if present the Senator from Wyoming would vote as I am about to vote. Therefore I feel at liberty to cast my vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. THOMAS (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER] to the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] and vote "nay."

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] to the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA] and vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I am requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. BRADY] with the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON]; and

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CATRON] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN].

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER] which I transfer to the junior Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN] and vote "nay."

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I rise to announce the absence of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON]. He is paired with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL].

I also desire to state that the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD] is absent from the Senate on account of official business.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I have a pair with the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND]. I am advised, however, that if present he would vote as I intend to vote on this question. I therefore vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. TOWNSEND. I desire to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. SMITH of Michigan]. He is paired with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]. This announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. JAMES. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. BECKHAM] is unavoidably detained from the Senate. He is paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT].

The result was announced—yeas 12, nays 53, as follows:

YEAS—12.

Ashurst	James	La Follette	Sheppard
Borah	Jones	Lane	Vardaman
Clapp	Kenyon	Norris	Works

NAYS—53.

Bankhead	Kern	Ransdell	Swanson
Bryan	Lee, Md.	Reed	Taggart
Chamberlain	Lippitt	Saulsbury	Thomas
Clarke, Ark.	McLean	Shafroth	Thompson
Curtis	Martin, Va.	Sherman	Tillman
Dillingham	Martine, N. J.	Shields	Townsend
Fletcher	Myers	Simmons	Underwood
Gallinger	Nelson	Smith, Ariz.	Wadsworth
Gronna	Newlands	Smith, Ga.	Walsh
Harding	Page	Smith, Md.	Weeks
Hollis	Penrose	Smith, S. C.	Williams
Hughes	Pittman	Smoot
Husting	Polindexter	Sterling
Johnson, S. Dak.	Pomerene	Stone

NOT VOTING—30.

Beckham	Culbertson	Johnson, Me.	Owen
Brady	Cummins	Lea, Tenn.	Phelan
Brandegge	du Pont	Lewis	Robinson
Broussard	Fall	Lodge	Smith, Mich.
Catron	Goff	McCumber	Sutherland
Chilton	Gore	O'Gorman	Warren
Clark, Wyo.	Hardwick	Oliver
Coit	Hitchcock	Overman

So the amendment of Mr. WORKS was rejected.

Mr. WORKS. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2 it is proposed to strike out the committee amendment, beginning with line 11 and ending with line 17, reading as follows:

That one-half of the following sums, respectively, is appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and the other half out of the revenues of the District of Columbia, in full for the following expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, namely:

Mr. GALLINGER. I suggest that the question should be affirmatively put on the amendment of the committee instead of on the motion to strike it out.

Mr. WORKS. I did not hear what was stated by the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. Does the Senator offer a substitute?

Mr. WORKS. I propose to strike out what the committee has reported and to insert a different provision in lieu thereof.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator, then, offers a substitute. His motion is to strike out and insert. There is no objection to that.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, is not the question simply on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee?

Mr. PENROSE. No; the Senator from California offers a substitute.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. That is a different matter.

Mr. PENROSE. Let the substitute be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment in full.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed, on page 2, after line 10, to strike out of the committee amendment the following:

That one half of the following sums, respectively, is appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and the other half out of the revenues of the District of Columbia, in full for the following expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, namely:

And in lieu thereof to insert:

The following sums are hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the support of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I am not going to take up very much of the time of the Senate in discussing this amendment, because I have already covered the principles involved in it by what I have said in dealing with the other amendment which has just been voted down, but the effect of this amendment is to provide for the payment of the expenses of the District of Columbia out of the National Treasury and to eliminate that provision in the amendment of the committee that one-half of the sums appropriated shall be paid out of the revenues of the District. I think I have shown quite clearly in discussing the other amendment that there are no revenues of the District and that the statute of 1878 does not create any District treasury or any District revenues, and that, therefore, an attempted appropriation of the revenues of the District of Columbia is purely abortive.

and can have no effect. The money is all paid out of the National Treasury, and why not say so in express terms?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from California [Mr. WORKS].

The amendment was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question now recurs on the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. JONES. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. OVERMAN (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the junior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN].

Mr. REED (when his name was called). Making the same transfer of my pair as on the last vote, I vote "yea."

Mr. SAULSBURY (when his name was called). Making the same transfer of my pair as before, I vote "yea."

Mr. THOMAS (when his name was called). I make the same announcement and the same transfer of my pair as on the last roll call and vote "yea."

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] to the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA] and vote "yea."

Mr. VARDAMAN (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Idaho [Mr. BRADY]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] and vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. OVERMAN. I understand that the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN], with whom I am paired, would, if present, vote as I am about to vote. Therefore I vote "yea."

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN] and vote "yea."

Mr. GRONNA. I have a general pair with the Senator from Maine [Mr. JOHNSON]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I desire again to announce the absence of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON] and his pair with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL]. I also repeat my statement regarding the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD], who is detained by official business.

Mr. BECKHAM. I inquire if the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. BECKHAM. I have a general pair with that Senator and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. CURTIS. I am requested to announce that the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CATRON] is paired with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN].

The result was announced—yeas 47, nays 16, as follows:

YEAS—47.

Bankhead	Lee, Md.	Ransdell	Stone
Bryan	Lippitt	Reed	Swanson
Chamberlain	Martin, Va.	Robinson	Thomas
Clapp	Martine, N. J.	Saulsbury	Thompson
Clarke, Ark.	Myers	Sherman	Tillman
Curtis	Newlands	Shields	Townsend
Dillingham	Overman	Simmons	Underwood
Fletcher	Page	Smith, Ariz.	Wadsworth
Gallinger	Penrose	Smith, Md.	Weeks
Harding	Pittman	Smith, S. C.	Williams
Hughes	Pol Dexter	Smoot	Works
Jones	Pomerene	Sterling

NAYS—16.

Ashurst	Johnson, S. Dak.	Lane	Sheppard
Hollis	Kenyon	Nelson	Taggart
Husting	Kern	Norris	Vardaman
James	La Follette	Shafroth	Walsh

NOT VOTING—32.

Beckham	Colt	Hardwick	O'Gorman
Borah	Culberson	Hitchcock	Oliver
Brady	Cummins	Johnson, Me.	Owen
Brandeggee	du Pont	Lea, Tenn.	Pheasant
Broussard	Fall	Lewis	Smith, Ga.
Catron	Goff	Lodge	Smith, Mich.
Chilton	Gore	McCumber	Sutherland
Clark, Wyo.	Gronna	McLean	Warren

So the amendment of the committee was agreed to.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I voted for the committee amendment as a choice between two evils, and did what I could to correct the legislation; but as between the committee amendment and the House bill I very much prefer the committee amendment, although I do not at all believe in the half-and-half principle, and hope that at some time soon it may be abolished.

The SECRETARY. The next amendment passed over is found on page 5, relative to the biennial assessment of realty in the District of Columbia, where the committee proposes to insert, after line 16, certain words.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Mr. President, I will state in regard to this amendment that it is a change from a triennial to a biennial assessment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. The next amendment passed over is on page 97, and pertains to the Gallinger Municipal Hospital. The committee proposes to insert in the bill, on page 97, after line 22, the following:

Gallinger (Municipal) Hospital: Toward the construction of the Gallinger Hospital, including grading of the site, to be located on land now owned by the Government of the United States and the District of Columbia at Fourteenth and Upshur Streets NW., in accordance with plans and specifications prepared under the authority contained in the District appropriation act for the fiscal year 1915, $150,000, and the limit of cost of the construction of said hospital and accessory buildings is hereby fixed at $500,000: Provided, That said hospital shall be constructed with a view to making future additions, as the exigencies may demand.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Mr. President, I have offered an amendment to that amendment which I should like to bring up and discuss now.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 98, line 1, after the word "States," it is proposed to strike out "and the District of Columbia at Fourteenth and Upshur Streets northwest," and insert in lieu thereof "known as reservation No. 13," so that it will read:

To be located on land now owned by the Government of the United States, known as reservation No. 13, in accordance with plans and specifications, etc.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Mr. President, the object of this amendment is to assure the construction of the hospital at some place, namely, the place where it now is, and where a hospital for this purpose has existed for 70 years. It would be a misfortune, Mr. President, if, in the discussion of the site, the construction of this memorial hospital should be, as it were, lost in the shuffle. It is much needed by the District of Columbia. There is no question about that.

I want to quote the official position of the Board of Charities on that subject, as testified to by the chairman of that board. There was some discussion, and in that discussion he evidently leaned toward this Fourteenth and Upshur Streets site; but his final summary on page 149 of his testimony, and the official position that he stated for the Board of Charities, is stated as follows:

As far as the Board of Charities is concerned, or I myself, as far as the hospital is concerned, if they should build the hospital there I would be perfectly satisfied.

Namely, if it should be built on reservation 13, where this work has been carried on heretofore.

Mr. GALLINGER. But, Mr. President, will not the Senator from Maryland read what the chairman of the Board of Charities says about locating it where it is provided for in this bill?

Mr. LEE of Maryland. I have just said that he had shown a desire to have it located elsewhere.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. But I was reading his summary and his conclusion.

Mr. GALLINGER. Well, of course he could not help himself.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Undoubtedly; nor can anybody else help himself that is willing to consider the facts in this case.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Mr. President, I take it for granted that the summary means that "if you can not get it anywhere else, why, we want a hospital, and the hospital is necessary; therefore I will agree to put it at this place," which is named by the junior Senator from Maryland.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. The purpose of my amendment is to have the hospital built on this 50-acre reservation, much larger than the site to which the committee want to move it, and to keep it where it has been already for so many years.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, this hospital matter seems to have agitated the citizens of Washington to a very considerable degree. I have received innumerable letters and visits from citizens of the District of Columbia in protest against the proposed construction.

Hospitals are a necessity with us, but they are not particularly desirable. As a rule communities hesitate about having a hospital located in their midst. I know that from the experience in other cities. It may be that this building will be constructed in an ornate way, and attractive within itself; but, after all, it is a hospital, and as I understand the feeling here in Washington there is a universal protest against the establishment of a new hospital site up in the northwest.

I can see no reason why we should pollute, so to speak, a new territory, a residential neighborhood, by establishing a hospital there, however ornate it may be. If, as is stated by the Senator from Maryland, we have 50 acres with ample opportunity and ample room in the present location, which is considered healthful in location, so far as a hospital may be, why should we propose to remove it and establish it up in that section?

I have no personal interest in the matter, but I am prompted to say what I say in deference to the sentiment that is opposed to it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, will the Senator from New Jersey yield to me one moment?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Oh, surely.

Mr. GALLINGER. In view of the controversy that has arisen and the agitation, which is not pleasant, the committee have concluded to offer an amendment placing the location of the building in the hands of the Surgeon General of the Army, the Surgeon General of the Navy, and the engineer commissioner of the District of Columbia—and it has been suggested that we might well add the municipal architect and the Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds—allowing those gentlemen, the opinion of no one of them being known to the committee, to select a location.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I do not happen to recall those gentlemen, neither do I know what their views are. It may be that we are submitting this matter to a commission of gentlemen that have already expressed themselves and are biased in regard to the removal of the site.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from New Jersey that this is an amendment that has been prepared by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], who is opposed to the location of the hospital at Upshur Street. He is absent, and he has asked—

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Here he is; right here. He is very much present.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. The Senator from Mississippi will speak for himself.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I should love to hear him.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I will say to the Senator from New Jersey that so far as the committee are concerned they have no idea what these people think, how they feel, where they will locate it, or anything about it.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Oh, I am thoroughly satisfied that the committee are unbiased. I want to believe that. I shall be very glad to hear what the Senator from Mississippi has to say.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Mr. President, I should like to continue my remarks.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. LEE of Maryland. I do.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I apologize to the Senate, in the first place. I have been meeting with the subcommittee on the revenue bill.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. I am very willing to yield to the Senator, Mr. President.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I left there to get a bit of lunch, and concluded I had better begin it, at any rate, before I came back.

Mr. President, this provision for the Gallinger Municipal Hospital is a thing to which, in itself, no sort of opposition can be made. The purpose of the provision is a very wise one, and not only a very wise one but a very benevolent one; and the fact that it is named after the—

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Mr. President, the Senator did not know that I had the floor.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, no; I did not.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Obviously so.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. I am very glad to yield to the Senator.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I thought the senior Senator from Maryland had the floor, and had yielded to me. I so understood it.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Mr. President, I will go on with the explanation that I had started. The map here has been prepared by a committee of citizens interested in this question. This map shows reservation No. 13 on the Anacostia River or Eastern Branch of the Potomac River, where this hospital is now located, at this point [indicating on map]. That reservation contains 70 acres.

Mr. STONE. What does the Senator mean when he says "now located"?

Mr. LEE of Maryland. I mean to say that this hospital is now located on reservation No. 13, which has been used for the purpose for 70 years. The amendment of the committee proposes to change the location of that hospital and take it from where it has been for this long time, and where the Government owns 50 acres for development—20 additional acres being occupied by the jail—and to carry it out to Fourteenth and Upshur Streets, and locate it on this little triangle right here [indicating on map]. The total amount of land owned by the District of Columbia at that point, Fourteenth and Upshur Streets, is 32 acres, and the circle drawn on the map around these reservations represent 6,000 feet diameters. Inside here, the figures in red represent the solid house buildings in the neighborhood of Fourteenth and Upshur Streets. It will be noticed that where this hospital and jail are now located on reservation No. 13 [indicating] there is very little building, and this little building is represented in red along the lower edge of the 6,000-foot circle. Nearly all of the houses about reservation No. 13 are occupied by colored people. In other words, you have had a natural segregation here which this bill proposes to destroy, because all of these buildings around the site where they propose to take this hospital to are solid structures running from three thousand or thirty-five hundred to four thousand dollars in value, and they are all occupied by white people.

Mr. President, it so happens that this reservation No. 13 has very few squares or city blocks about it. I have here a memorandum showing their number. The blocks abutting on reservation No. 13 are nine in number and that is by reason of the fact that the Anacostia River or Eastern Branch flows practically on two sides of the reservation, and a graveyard, known as the Congressional Cemetery, occupies another portion of the outside boundary of the reservation. So only 9 squares touch upon this reservation, whereas 20 squares touch on the reservation proposed to be used, and the amount of land to be affected by this change is equally greater and as represented by the larger number of squares that are to be affected.

It was argued by some that it was necessary to remove this hospital from this site by reason of malarial conditions that were alleged to affect the patients, but upon investigation it has been found that the patients there suffer less from malarial conditions than similar patients in other portions of the city. But however that may be, the whole condition of that neighborhood is being changed by the dredging of the Eastern Branch of the Anacostia River. This dredging has been provided for already, and it has now gotten up to the place to which I now point—that is to say, immediately east of reservation 13—and that dredging process, with a sea-wall construction that goes with the dredging, will absolutely eliminate the last vestige of malaria in that section, and also add to the acreage in reservation 13, so that there will be 100 acres there available for this municipal purpose.

It is very difficult, therefore, to understand how it can be suggested that in the public interest this hospital, which serves the most unfortunate type of persons in the District, should be moved from that place, where it has been for 70 years, and where all the prices and conditions have adjusted themselves, to a new site in the middle of a thriving, prosperous, home-owning community, for my information is that this move will seriously reduce in value 3,000 homes, with a proportionate and larger number of people.

I wish to give some idea of the type of people that are treated in this hospital, and read from one of the reports on the subject:

The ward which is the largest and most important unit in the hospital is known as the psychopathic ward, which cares for the mental suspects, alcoholics, and dope fiends. Last year we had 573 mental cases, of which 267, after careful examination and treatment, were transferred to the Government Hospital for the Insane. In this ward we also treated 569 alcoholics and many addicted to the cocaine habit. Many of the mental cases in the acute stages are so noisy, unruly, and profane that they disturb patients even in the buildings far removed.

A further idea of the type of patients treated in this hospital is given in the following from the report of the Board of Charities:

As pointed out in previous reports, the population of Washington Asylum is made up of those patients which are not acceptable to other institutions. They consist largely of patients suffering from chronic and specific diseases, and in considerable part of inebriates and suspected insane persons. They also comprise sick prisoners from the jail and persons held by the police. Many of the chronic patients are incontinent and dirty, and require the utmost untiring effort to keep them in clean and wholesome condition.

There are over 3,000 of these patients treated annually in this institution.

As I said before, there are 5,000.833 square feet owned by private citizens in the immediate vicinity and neighborhood of this present site or reservation No. 13 practically unimproved and constituting 9 squares of ground; whereas in the immediate neighborhood of the place to which the committee want to move this hospital there are 17,000,000 square feet owned by private persons, and 20 squares touch the Government tract at Fourteenth and Upshur Streets. So, upon the mere question of where it will do the least harm, the institution, if we were choosing between these places de novo, should be kept upon reservation 13.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Where it is now located?

Mr. LEE of Maryland. On reservation No. 13, where it is now located, and has been for 70 years.

The assessed value of the property abutting on reservation 13, where this institution now is, runs from 1 cent to 8 cents per square foot, or averages 5 cents a foot only. Thus, if you want to buy additional ground for extension, you could buy it at very low rates. But the assessed value of the property abutting the Upshur and Fourteenth Streets site, where they propose to move this institution to, runs from 14 cents to 43 cents, or an average of 25 cents a foot for land values only.

Mr. President, there is a disagreeable phase to this situation, and that is one which often creeps in in connection with movements of this sort in the District of Columbia. That has been the suggestion of the operation of real estate interests. If the property within the circle where this hospital now is rises only 10 cents a foot by reason of taking away this institution, it will involve a profit to the present holders of $583,000; but there is a great deal more in the proposition from a real estate standpoint than merely a half million of dollars. I read from the Star of October 18, 1914, as follows:

Thus, the removal of all the institutions on reservation No. 13 has already been brought about, or is in imminent contemplation, except the jail.

At another place:

Another and an important reason put forth for the removal of the penal and eleemosynary institutions from, and the reclamation of, this large public tract for healthier public uses is that the presence of these institutions casts a pall over a large section of eastern Washington and hinders the development of the city toward the east.

Mr. President, that is simply real estate talk on the question of values; but this is a practical question, and should be settled not only justly, but with reference to existing rights, and with reference to economy in the operation of the affairs of the District of Columbia.

I read here from an opinion on the subject given out by Mr. Thomas H. McKee, late warden of the United States jail. He says:

For more than three years I was the warden of the District Jail, and spent my time on the reservation where the hospital is now located. The present location of the hospital is in the right place. No parcel of ground within the District of Columbia is so well suited in its surroundings, and none could be so easily transformed into a splendid home for the unfortunates who find their way to a municipal hospital. It is not used for residential purposes. The Congressional Cemetery borders it on the south, the Potomac Flats on the east—

He was wrong in saying "the Potomac Flats," because they are the Anacostia Flats.

He goes on to say:

For many years past and at present the hospital service was and is largely performed in all its coarser labor by prison help, such as washing, ironing, and scrubbing, and all the details of sanitary cleaning in and around the place. The taxpayers of the city should know what charge would be added to the hospital by taking the location away from this help.

Mr. President, I believe it is suggested that there is going to be a high school put within two squares of this location. Well, that is subject to control, and that high school can be so located, with intervening ornamentation and trees, as not to be affected to any great degree by the neighborhood of these institutions. I am talking about homes and the children now living near Fourteenth and Upshur Streets. I have here pictures of 775 children who participated in the Fourth of July celebration at Petworth, one of the sections shown on this map adjoining the site to which the committee want to take this hospital. These children represent only a portion of the child population of that neighborhood, and if any Senator here wishes to look at the picture he will see the homes, built by the fathers and mothers of these children, and I have photographs here showing the blocks and rows and the relative location of these blocks and rows in well-developed property that will be disastrously affected by changing a condition that has existed in the District of Columbia for so long.

It has been stated by somebody that the hospital site at Upshur Street and Fourteenth was purchased for a municipal hospital, and that notice went with that purchase to the men who bought in the neighborhood and built their homes there. But that is not really the case, and it is a far-fetched argument. The appropriation bill which erected the hospital that now exists at Fourteenth and Upshur Streets, the Tuberculosis Hospital, provided as follows:

For erection and equipment, complete, of a hospital for treatment of indigent tuberculosis patients only, said hospital to be located and erected on the site heretofore acquired for a municipal hospital, and to be situated and constructed on said site without reference to existing or proposed plans for any other hospital on said site, $100,000.

Mr. President, the municipality has already erected on half of this reservation a Tuberculosis Hospital, and all of these new units that are proposed to be erected in connection with the new Gallinger municipal hospital would have to be put on the remaining half of that 32 acres, and be crowded into a space really insufficient for their proper relationship to one another. It is very much better to leave this area of 32 acres to be used for the Tuberculosis Hospital exclusively. Room and air are essential for the management of any such institution, and I may say in this connection that that section of the city of Washington seems to have its fair share of hospitals already. North there is the Walter Reed Hospital, at Fourteenth and Upshur Streets is the Tuberculosis Hospital, south are the Freedmen's Hospital, the Garfield Hospital, and the Children's Hospital—five hospitals located, so to speak, in that general direction; and now it is proposed to bring this great city institution and put that there also, disrupting, as I said before, the natural adjustment of values and construction that has taken place in 70 years.

Permit me, for a moment, to call attention to a suggestion that has been made here, or will be made here, namely, that Massachusetts Avenue should be run through this reservation 13. Massachusetts Avenue can be run through reservation 13 just as well whether the reservation is used for a hospital site or not, and all the advantages that come to the people on the other side of the Anacostia River from running Massachusetts Avenue across that stream can be accorded them.

I have a map here which shows that Massachusetts Avenue can be run through reservation 13 without touching a single permanent improvement. On the other hand, on reservation 13 there now exist three or four structures that have cost the Government from a quarter of a million to half a million dollars, and by slight changes can be made into a hospital or a portion of a hospital quite appropriate for the purpose that is indicated.

As a matter of fact, Mr. President, there is one building there, a relatively new building, that by having the old cells taken out can be made into a hospital with 300 beds available at once for the purpose of this great city charity.

There is no occasion for the wasting of public money by abandoning those structures which are already there, and there is no occasion for injuring the vested rights of the people of the District, white and black, who have already located themselves in these sections.

Mr. President, where are the colored people going to live if the committee is going to adorn and tax all the portions of the District of Columbia so that they can not find a place for a home? The colored population of the District has settled around this reservation No. 13. The prices suited them, and the location is available for their uses. Does the committee propose to come along and drive those people out of the District entirely? It is a question of natural segregation, and this natural segregation having taken place it should be respected by the committee. There is no reason why the regular streets should not be run out and every municipal facility given, but there is every reason and good public policy why there should be no yielding on or manipulating of a great real estate question in the interest of one set of holders and against the interest of another set of holders.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Do I understand the Senator to say that the property owners had anything to do with the decision of the committee in this matter?

Mr. LEE of Maryland. I would not make that statement, Mr. President, because it would reflect upon a Senator and would be out of order, but we all know that many a real estate speculation comes along under the respectable veneer of a charity. Of course it was the charity that caught the eye of the committee; it was not the real estate speculation. That is the way these things happen. They just appear to grow, as it were; they come up like a mushroom in the night; there is some kind of spontaneous natural power behind them, but after all it is in reality the half million of dollars, or the million, that is involved in raising the value of the property around the old site which would happen if this institution were taken away from there.

There is no reason, Mr. President, that can be advanced for moving this institution. There is no reason for attacking the value of these 3,000 homes that I have spoken about. The very fact that this thing is being done in the teeth of the admission of the president of the Board of Charities that he wants a hospital, and he is willing to take it where it now is, shows unnecessary delay in handling the relief feature of the matter and that there was a manipulation going on long before the committee had anything to do with it.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, the Senator made a statement a moment ago about the increased value of the land in the circle where the hospital is now located which would accrue upon the movement of the hospital. I wish he would repeat that statement.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. I repeat the statement now that 10 cents a foot would be a very limited increase in value, and at 10 cents a foot there would be $580,000 put in the pockets of the owners of this property within 6,000 feet.

Mr. VARDAMAN. What proportion of that property is now occupied by houses?

Mr. LEE of Maryland. A very small proportion of it. It is practically unimproved real estate. I hope the Senator will appreciate that there are no houses there except this little sprinkling, shown in red, of houses occupied by colored people. Whereas the other neighborhood at Fourteenth and Upshur Streets, shown in red on this map, represents solid blocks of houses constructed by home-building members of the community.

Mr. VARDAMAN. The excuse is made here that they are generally owned by people of very limited means, I understand.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. By very comfortable people. I would not say that they were people of limited means. They are well-to-do people.

Mr. VARDAMAN. But I mean they have modest homes.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Certainly.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I understand that the people living in that circle with practical unanimity have protested against the removal of the hospital.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. With absolute unanimity.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Many of them have spoken to me about it and have given reasons that would justify me and ought to, according to my view, justify every other Senator in voting against the removal.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Mr. President, I hope that this good work will be allowed to go on. I hope that this hospital that is needed will be built and built right away and built in the right place. That is where it has always been, and I hope the name of our venerable colleague will be added to that hospital as a tribute to him and to the great profession which he so worthily represents. But it should be separated from any suspicion of a real estate transaction, and it should be separated from any movement to take this institution from the place where it has been for so many years—70 years—and put it in an entirely new neighborhood, where the injury will be very great.

I hope, Mr. President, that my amendment, which simply preserves the appropriation for the Gallinger Hospital, and which locates it where it always has been and always should be, will be adopted, and then if the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] comes along with a commission, of course I have the right to have the vote first on perfecting the original amendment. I will wait until the Senator from Mississippi offers his amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The amendment has been offered, I understand.

Mr. GALLINGER. No.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. If the Senator sees fit to offer the amendment, well and good. I will discuss it when we come to it. In the meantime I think the original amendment is open to this amendment perfecting it before the substitute is considered.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I naturally have a delicacy in saying a single word on this proposition. I absented myself from the meeting of the committee when I knew that the Democratic Senators intended to attach my name to this hospital. I have said to the committee a good many times that I would be quite willing it should be removed because the interest I have in getting a proper municipal hospital is paramount with me and absolutely overshadows every other thought.

Mr. President, I am glad to welcome the Senator from Maryland [Mr. LEE] to the ranks of those who have been taking an interest in the District of Columbia. It is his first appearance, I believe, and I suppose he has some good reason for coming here in that attitude.

Mr. President, some 16 or 18 years ago, and I speak not definitely as to the length of time, Senator McMillan, of Michigan, who was greatly interested in hospitals, and there was a great hospital named after him in the city of Detroit, had a commission appointed to go over the hospital situation in Washington. It was a commission of distinguished physicians from several cities of the United States, and among other things they recommended that this site at Fourteenth and Upshur Streets should be selected for hospital purposes. There are 34 acres in the site, and I think two years ago we added something to it, I have forgotten how much, for the purposes of getting a place on which to erect a residence for the superintendent of the tuberculosis hospital.

It has always been understood that that site was for a hospital purposes, and no man who ever built a home whether it is within 1 mile or 10 rods of that hospital was ignorant of the fact that that was the purpose of the Government.

The committee in its wisdom thought that that was the ideal place for it. The Commissioners of the District of Columbia thought so; the Board of Charities thought so. Everyone who has taken an interest in eleemosynary institutions in the District of Columbia seemed to entertain that opinion.

But the District of Columbia is a peculiar place. I took an interest a few years ago in trying to get a railroad down New Jersey Avenue from Florida Avenue, which now exists. Every person who lived on both sides of that street from Florida Avenue to practically the Union Station signed a protest against putting that road there, saying that it would absolutely ruin their property. They brought that protest to the Committee on the District of Columbia, but inasmuch as we knew that it would enhance the value of their property rather than decrease it we gave authority to that road, and it is down there now, and if any person would undertake to pull up a rod there would be a riot on that avenue. It is not an unusual thing.

A propaganda was started, and I do not criticize it at all, against the site for this hospital at Fourteenth and Upshur Streets. A lady came to my committee room at the head of a delegation of women to enter a protest. I said to her, "Madam, you live a mile away from that hospital, do you not?" She said, "Not quite a mile away; I do not think it is as far as that." I said, "I am familiar with Kennedy Street; I should say that you live 1 mile away from that hospital. Now, here are other women who live half a mile away and more; and yet you are here to protest on the ground that it is going to do injury to the community in that part of the city." They have continued the fight. I suppose they have seen every Senator; I doubt whether they have missed one; and they have presented the matter and finally secured the interest of the Senator from Maryland to represent their cause. He has photographs of various sorts and kinds, I know not what they are; but, whatever the Senator may say, the consensus of opinion of those who know something about hospitals and hospital work is that that is an ideal place for a hospital of this kind.

Now, the Senator wants to keep the hospital where it is. Reservation 13 is a reservation, I think, embracing 71 acres or thereabouts. It was originally intended as a park for the eastern part of this city, and it ought never to have been invaded by buildings of any kind. There is not a breathing place from the east part of this Capitol to the Anacostia River in the shape of a park that is worth talking about. Those people have a right to ask that they shall have some improvements in their section of the city.

Washington intended to build the city east of the Capitol, and it is a beautiful place for a city, this magnificent plateau; but the building commenced toward the west and it has gone now miles and miles to the northwest or west, and the east part of the city is neglected to a very large extent.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President—

Mr. GALLINGER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. THOMAS. I should like to inquire of the Senator whether that change in the location of the city was not due to real estate extortions and high prices.

Mr. GALLINGER. I do not know that that is exact truthfulness, but I have been told that those who owned property east of the Capitol held it at an exorbitant rate, and the people who owned property in the swamp—because it was a swamp, west of the Capitol, Tiber Creek running out to the Capitol grounds—were very generous in offering their property at a much less value, and the building commenced very likely because of that fact.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President—

Mr. GALLINGER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. VARDAMAN. What would be the effect upon the value of the property by the removal of the hospital? Does the Senator think it would diminish the value of it?

Mr. GALLINGER. I do not think it would affect the property where it is proposed to locate the hospital to any appreciable extent. I have no idea that it would. We have a tuberculosis hospital on that site now, and we have abundant room for a municipal hospital, and the property has not been depreciated. They bought their property with the distinct understanding, if they had a correct understanding about the matter, as they ought to have had, that that site was for hospital purposes.

Mr. VARDAMAN. That may be true; but I think it is unfair, and I can not see any reason for punishing the people who already have their homes there, if that is the case.

Mr. GALLINGER. Of course, the committee does not believe that it would punish them, but the committee is going to suggest a solution that I think the Senator from Maryland ought to agree to and every Senator ought to vote for.

Now, I return to reservation 13. It was intended originally as a park, and it ought to have been kept as a park. On that site there is a jail; there is this wretched municipal hospital; there is the smallpox hospital; and there is a crematory; and I do not know but other objectionable buildings. The use of that reservation for those purposes cuts off Massachusetts Avenue some distance from the Anacostia River.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. May I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. I have a map here of this reservation. If the Senator will look at that map I think he will see that Massachusetts Avenue can go right through the reservation without touching any of these structures.

Mr. GALLINGER. There is no doubt of that. It could go in a good many different directions. There is no doubt it could go through the reservation.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. I mean on the present lines of the extension of Massachusetts Avenue and as shown by this map.

Mr. GALLINGER. But there are those of us who want to beautify Washington. We have been criticized somewhat that we are doing nothing to beautify Washington. There are those of us who believe that all those buildings ought to be removed from that reservation and that Massachusetts Avenue should be extended to the Anacostia River banks which are now being reclaimed by the Government, and a bridge ought to go across that river to that beautiful site on the other side where there are some of the most beautiful places for residence property that can be found in the District, and that in due time the people who live east of the Capitol, who are mostly people of moderate means, not altogether so but mostly so, ought to have a place where they could get fresh air and where they could have some of the advantages that are given to the northwestern part and other parts of the city.

Mr. President, it is the first time I have heard it intimated that there is a real estate deal on hand. The Senator from Maryland has made a discovery nobody else has made. Nobody ever suggested it to the committee, and I can not imagine that there can be very much of a real estate deal because that land is cheap land, it is not covered with houses now, and very likely the man who holds it at 10 cents a foot may get 12 cents a foot some time for it if that hospital is removed.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. It is 5 cents a foot.

Mr. GALLINGER. No; the Senator can not buy it for 5 cents a foot.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. That is the assessed value.

